Newman Center's Father Quigley feels religion is humanizing

By JOHN MIKOLAJCIK
Staff Reporter

"Religion is a humanizing experience. It teaches us to use our heads and our hearts," said Father Joseph Quigley, the senior member of the group of three full time pastors at the Newman Center here on campus.

Father Quigley has been at UMass longer than any other minister now on campus. He's been here almost fifteen years since April 1, 1960, "April Fools Day," joked Quigley. He was here in April of 1964 when ground was broken for the Newman Center and is probably a major reason for its being there. Quigley describes the Newman CENTER as a Catholic cultural Center.

"I'm a liberal with a reat respect for tradition," he says of himself. "If we forget where we came from I think we lose something," he said. Quigley knows where he came from; an Irish immigrant family which settled in Massachusetts about four generations ago. His father was a dentist and his mother a graduate of Smith College in 1904. An ancestor of his said the first Catholic mass in Amherst many years ago.

"We've done some controversial things here," he said of his work at the Newman Center, like having women distribute Holy Communion and having some laymen say mass. You would be surprised how upset some people get about these changes," said Quigley.

In addition to holding Catholic masses the Newman Center also has game rooms, reading rooms, and a library for student use.

When asked what the purpose of religion was, Father Quigley replied "The purpose of religion is to challenge a person to ask himself Who am I?Where do I come from: What is my purpose?and how do I realize that purpose?The purpose of religion is to liberate us," he added.

Is the environment of a college campus different from the real world? "A college campus is an artificial atmosphere," said Quigley. "There are so many young people that the students aave little opportunity to relate to some one with real-life experience so they turn to their peers who may be just as confused as they are."

personnel policies." He concluded, the Rules Committee has power to determine problem areas. It historically listens but results in zero action. There is no mechanism for feeding into the system."

Booth suggested that in lieu of Ricci's address to the entire Faculty Senate, the separate issues of the case could be farmed out to different committees, although he admits the possible ineffectualness of the system. "What is to be gained by circumventing the system?We have a laborious system for resolving problems but the machinery sometimes moves so slowly that by the time a decision results, it would be moot."

Ricci expressed his willingness to separate the issues and submit them for consideration of various Senate committees however, "The School personnel voted in favor of the appointment but it is still not out of committee. And I can't set a time frame."

The issue of the appointment of Ariel had previously been submitted by Ricci to the Senate Grievance Committee chaired by Gordon Sutton of the Sociology department. Sutton admitted "we (the committee) have set this case aside because the School Committee is not finished with it yet."

Although Sutton confirmed willingness to move on the issue, Ricci countered saying, "There is nothing that can force it out of the School Personnel Committee."

Sutton agreed that traditionally the School Committee has "been extended great courtesy" but it was not impossible to extract an issue from the Committee for consideration by other committees. He promised, "We'll get moving if in fact there have been serious delays."

Conference redefines role of Black Women

Black News Service

The Black Women's Conference which took place Saturday, November 16th at Boston University was an experience which should be duplicated in as many areas as possible. It gave a chance for Black Women to come together to exchange ideas on primarily defining what Black women should be about in order to help perpetuate the struggle of the total liberation of our people.

Just as reality in all realms of the Black existance, there were many diverse and conflicting ideologies participating in the conference. But one exhilerating quality of this set was the ability for all these differences to consolidate so that there was not necessarily a universal ideology put rather an understanding of each other's differing ideas.

The Conference opened with Margaret Sloan, President of the National Black Feminist Organization. Her emphasis was placed on a need for Black Women to become aware of the sexism which confronts them everyday. Miss Sloan presented herself from a seperatist point of view, in that she felt "women should not allow themselves to get into love relationships with men because they are essentially oppressors of Black women, and there can be no love where there is no equality". Although she agreed to certain problematic changes which have to be alieviated between the Black man and Black women, she did not see a need for the Black man and woman to resolve these problems in a collective manner. On the contrary, she explained that she felt it was necessary for these resolutions to be obtained separately.

Although the need for a unified effort on the part of all Black people - be it Black woman, man, or child - was overlooked, she did give some incite into some real problems women face, which can be attributed to their "double jeopardy", as Miss Sloan explained, "the reality of being both Black and a women". Miss Sloan expressed a real need for more day care centers and a vital need for female protection against rape and other forms of female abuse. She also delt with the reality (which is consequently not an isolated problem of women) of "Black women going off to college, becoming educated, and developing an elites attitude and completely forgetting their roots."

black affairs

In response to Miss Sloan's constant reiteration of the need for consciousness raising sessions where women are taught to become aware of the sexism which exist, and especially the need for female abuse control, Sister Sadiqua H. Abdur-Razzar, a member of the Black Women's Collective who helped sponsor the program, expressed a need for Black women to be taught awareness of not only the crimes in the Black community which effect just women, but to become knowledgeable of the many forms of crime prevelant in Black communities. Sadiqua explained that "Rape is only a miniscule fraction of the whole encompassing phenomena. What we as Black people should be about is trying to develop a consciousness of the causes of these crimes. We should be having consciousness raising sessions to teach not only the oppressions opposed on us as women, but more importantly the suppresion, exploitation and degradation which is inflicted on us as a people." Sister Sadiqua went on to say that "we as Black people should be about not trying to create diverse and dividing forces in the struggle, but trying to unify so that as a people, we can move together in a unit."

In view of the fact that Miss Sloan's presentation was the first event of the conference, there seemed to be undertones of her speech existing in parts of the second session of the conference which consisted of five workshops.

In the workshop entitled "Men on Women" the session began with some women expressing their discontent with Black men, and basically just reiterating old gripes such as the 'black men and white women syndrome'; black men and their ego's and other derogatory aspects of Black men. After much discussion and disagreement between members participating, an unidentified sister who was also a member of the Black Women's Collective at Boston University put the session back in focus by explaining, "we as intelligent Black people know that there are problems which exist between Black men and women, what we should be doing here is not necessarily bickering and reiterating the problems. What we should be doing is trying to find a solution to those problems." So with this note, this particular workshop began to deal with finding some positive solutions to specific problems.

In another workshop entitled "Black Women and the Media", Jacqui Adams from WNAC-TV in Boston, Sarah Ann Shaw, and Vicki Jone, both from WBZ-TV, and Barbara Barrow, Associate Producer of 'Say Brother' from Channel 22, discussed the responsibilities of Black women in the communications field. They collectively agreed on the fact that the communications media play a very intregal part in the oppression of Black people. They seemed to feel that the communication media have great potential in becoming an educating, motivating, and uplifting force for Blacks. "One problem is the reality of inaccessibility to these media," said one of the participants. In addition to trying to create programs to instill self-respect, self-direction, and identity in Black people as a whole, we as communication specialist should also be involved in the education of the masses, in making them aware of their inherent right of access to these different media. We should be about trying to educate the community to the appropriate channels which have to be gone thru in obtaining adequate input into the media, and mobilizing different community organizations to deal with this very pressing and detrimental issue.

Marcia Ann Gillespie, editor of Essence Magazine who is directly responsible for the editorial section entitled 'Getting Down' was another speaker. She rapped on the need for Black women to "get into themselves". She said that Black women must first learn how to respect themselves. After they have obtained self-respect, then they can expect to receive respect from Black men, and if any specific Black man is ignorant enough to disrespect, it is our duty to demand that respect. For by expressing disrespect and ignorance, he is only degrading himself. "It has to be a sickness for someone to have to tear another human being down in order to make themselves feel better".

The conference came to a close just as excitingly as it began with an award given to Melenia Case. Mrs. Case who was introduced as a Black woman of love, one of strength, and the Martin Luther King, Jr. Afro-American Center for her outstanding work in the community for well over 25 years. Sister Case closed the conference with a very enlightening speech. This short but concise address essentially wrapped up the resolutions of the entire day by expressing "There is no universal definition of the Black woman. You are the image of the woman you want to be, and unless you are that image, who knows what you are?

It is what you are that I believe in, what he believes in, but you'll have to reflect that image in every way."

Although it was the end of the conference, it was in actuality just a beginning for the hundreds of Black women who actively participated in the conference to take with them what they learned and pursue their different goals caring with them the positive image of the Black woman — an inage of self-respect and constant struggle.

BIA head calls for probe

One dies in Pine Ridge Reservation shooting

PINE RIDGE, S.D. [UPI] —The chief federal officer on the strife-torn Pine Ridge Indian Reservation Monday called for a Justice Department investigation into a shooting incident Sunday which left one person dead and five wounded.

Bureau of Indian Affairs Superintendent Albert W. Trimble, in a telegram to Attorney General William Saxbe and Commissioner of Indian Affairs Morris Thompson, said "There is an element of the population of Pine Ridge which regards itself as exempt from the laws and statutes that all Indian people must live by."

His call for help came after Jess Trueblood, 25, a BIA policeman, stormed into the residence of Chester "Dutch" Stone Sunday and opened fire with a shotgun, wounding Stone, his wife, their stepdaughter, Debbie Richards Mousseau, Mrs. Mousseau's 3-year-old son, John Joseph, and a house guest, Louis Tyon, BIA police said.

Mrs. Stone was treated at the Pine Ridge hospital and released. The others were flown to Fitzsimmons Army Hospital in Denver, Colo., where they were described as in good condition.

Trueblood was found later in his car, mortally wounded. He died en route to a Rapid City, S.D., hospital.

Del Eastman, special officer in charge of BIA police on the reservation, said "no clear picture" had emerged as to why Trueblood attacked the Stone family. He said there were no leads in the search for Trueblood's killer.

There has been tension on the reservation since the 71-day armed occupation of the reservation village of Wounded Knee in the spring of 1973 by members of the American Indian Movement. The occupation was bitterly opposed by followers of the Oglala Sioux tribal government under President Dick Wilson.

BIA superintendent says U.S. aid needed

By GAIL SULLIVAN
Wounded Knee Support Committee

Albert Trimble, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) superintendent of the Pine Ridge Reservation has callld for a permanent presence at Pine Ridge of the Justice Department and the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. Agents of the federal government have been called into the reservation in the past when trouble has arisen between Dick Wilson's tribal government and members of the tribe. In February, 1973 after a protest demonstration led by the American Indian Movement (AIM) at Custer, SD, about 50 miles from the reservation," and after members of the Buddy. I stopped believing in them." Nobody has ever been charged with the slaying of Buddy Lamont, or Frank Clearwater, the other Indian killed during Wounded Knee.

On October 17, 1973, Pedro Bissonette, the vice president of OSCRO who was accused of being a leader of the Wounded Knee siege along with Means and Banks, was killed by a BIA police officer. Although the Justice Department sent an investigator, he stayed only 24 hours and did not talk to any witnesses besides the FBI and BIA agents. Over one year later there have been no charges brought for Bissonette's murder.

Commentary

Oglala Sioux Civil Rights Organization (OSCRO) attempted to impeach Dick Wilson, Wilson requested and received U.S. Marshalls and FBI agents in Pine Ridge because he feared a takeover by AIM of the BIA building there. Two weeks later OSCRO and AIM members liberated Wounded Knee and were surrounded by the federal agents. Although the siege of Wounded Knee ended in May, 1973 the FBI has maintained 50 agents in Rapid City, 80 miles from Pine Ridge (there had previously been two), who have frequently visited the reservation.

Many residents feel, however, that the federal agents do more harm than good. Agnes Lamont, the 80-year old mother of Buddy Lamont-one of the two Indian persons killed by government bullets during Wounded Knee, said, "I don't trust those FBI and Marshalls. Ever since they killed my

U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, charging that Wilson had illegally won the election for tribal president. Again investigators of the Justice Dept. went to Pine Ridge, as did investigators for the Civil Rights Commission and the Wounded Knee Legal Defense-Offense Committee. Although all found evidence of fraud, deceit, intimidation and bribery, no new election has been brought. Gladys Bissonette, a leader of both the impeachment drive and Wounded Knee, said "We knew the government wouldn't let Russell win. They want Wilson in there because he's their puppet."

Federal agents have traditionally been brought to Pine Ridge to appease the people and give support to Wilson's government. Such an attitude will not ease the tension on the reservation, nor do anything to alleviate the problems which cause it.

Globe reporter dies; was to lecture here

WASHINGTON [AP] — Darius S. Jhabvala, The Boston Globe's diplomatic correspondent since 1965, died in his home here yesterday of an apparent heart attack. He was 46.

(Jhabvala had been scheduled as a speaker at a public lecture at Amherst College next Monday titled, "The Presidential Crisis: View from the Press." The 5-college lecture series has been scheduled twice monthly since September with staff reporters of The Globe.)

Jhabvala had become a friend of Sec. of State Henry Kissinger while reporting the secretary's many flights to the mid-East for The Globe. He was a diplomatic correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune before coming to The Globe.

A former employe of the United Nations, he was later an assistant editor of Newsweek magazine and had written extensively on foreign affairs for national magazines.

The 4th annual Madrigal dinner

December 5, 6, 7, 8, and 12, 13, 14, 15

A fine tradition of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is the Madrigal Dinner sponsored each year during the Christmas season by the Campus Center Food Service and the University of Massachusetts Madrigal Singers. This year it has been extended to run eight nights over a two week period.

The cathedral-ceilinged Campus Center Auditorium, colorfully decorated with banners and heraldic shields, provides the setting for the beautifully costumed Madrigal Singers, creating an atmosphere reminiscent of the 16th Century Christmas Feasts in England. The fanfares, the March of the Comestibles, the huge platter with the Boar's Head, the Sparkling Wassall Bowl, the Flaming Plum Pudding, the Madrigal Singers, the Jugglers and the Jesters are all part of the pageantry of those ancient times.

American Friends Service Committee director

Schneider describes Vietnamese destruction

By PAUL JIMERSON
Staff Reporter

Lou Schneider, executive director of the American Friend Servie Committee (AFSC) in Philadelphia spoke Thursday night to a small group at Wright Hall at Smith College on the role of the AFSC in Vietnam.

Schneider was a member of a delegation of American journalists, educators, and "friends" who recently returned from a tour of Vietnam to assess their aid efforts and investigate the possibilities for another large-scale relief program for Vietnam.

He said that 18 months after the peace talks were signed, the AFSC hospital in the Quang Nhi province was still receiving 95 patients a month, the same number admitted during the heaviest concentration of fighting of the war. Schneider stressed that American policy in Vietnam must be altered, to bring about an end to this "mindless war" more than two years after the peace agreement was signed.

Up to now, the efforts of the AFSC in Vietnam have been largely in the area of providing medical aid and prosthetics-artificial limbs-and the training of midwives and "barefoot doctors," who go out into the villages to help war victims.

In 1969, the AFSC made a decision to provide the NLF with medical supplies, the only aid given without the permission of the U.S. government. After serious deliberation, the AFSC decided they had an "obligation for reconciliation, Schneider said, that went above and beyond concern for the political interests of the U.S. government. In response to what Schneider called the continued U.S. war effort and the intensified bombing, the AFSC launched a "Make Your Own Peace" campaign, coupled with an intensification of peace education in the U.S., which raised $800,000 in medical aid for the NLF and North Vietnamese forces.

Schneider and the delegation of Americans visited North Vietnam and talked with educators while visiting schools and hospitals. He said that under French colonial rule, 85 per cent of North Vietnam was illiterate, but since independence under Ho Chi Minh there is education available for young and old. He also said women in North Vietnam were able to vote "independently and wisely" for the first time.

The undaunted spirit of the Vietnamese people is evidenced by their long, slow efforts at rebuilding their villages and restoring their land, he said. The Vietnamese people have collected small nails from antipersonnel weapons for use in home repair and rebuilding. The nails were intended to lodge in the softer areas of the body when the weapons explode near ground level. Wire from the McNamara Line in the DMZ, used for detection of those crossing the DMZ, is on sale in the Saigon streets for general household use.

Travelling down Highway 1 from Hanoi to Saigon, Schneider said he saw the immense destruction of the war, something which he felt few Americans could ever really experience. Forced to get out and walk at one point by a burned-out truck body in the road which their jeep couldn't pass, the group set out on foot. Walking down Highway 1, through the DMZ, Schneider said he really experienced the impact of the war. The decimated rice paddies, the bomb craters, dislodged plane engines scattered about the fields, tangled barbed wire, burnt-out tank and truck bodies, and empty canisters scattered about the landscape. Schneider described it as a "moonscape." 75 per cent of the forests of Vietnam have been defoliated, and 597 of the 600 villages in the Quang Nhi province were bombed by U.S. forces for security reasons - suspected NLF fortresses, he said, and the survivors were relocated in concentration camps.

Anti-dorm and meal ticket rally tomorrow

A rally and demonstration to protest forced dorm living and meal tickets will be held at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon and people are being asked by organizers to meet between the library and campus pond and they will then march to Whitmore.

Speakers from the Revolutionary Student Brigade at UConn will talk about their experiences at that school.

The UMass Revolutionary Student Brigade, who is calling for the demonstration, said all additional help will be welcome.

Collegiate Flying Club needs funds

To the Editor:

Two recent events have lead me to the conclusion that the MDC is unwilling to recognize the existence or the value of RSO groups. Since the beginning of the academic year the Collegiate Flying Club has been working on two very important projects: 1] acquiring the funds to purchase a club aircraft, and 2] planning for the semi-annual club flying meet. To all club members, to other university flyers, and to those who have always wanted to fly, these activities are important.

On many occasions the club has notified MDC when our meetings were to be held and asked that a reporter report on our activities. No one came. Finally, one of our members wrote an article for the Collegian and submitted it. It didn't get published.

In the November [illegible], 1974 edition of the MDC there was a small article noting that our flying meet would be held on Sunday, Nov. 10. For that we thank you.

It would seem that if you could publish that an event was going to take place, that you could also publish the results of that event. But, that's not what happened. On the following Monday, we called with the results of the Flying Meet and were told that they might not be in Tuesday's paper but they would be in Wednesday's edition. As yet, they have not appeared.

Members of the Collegiate Flying Club are skilled pilots or student pilots who are working hard at acquiring an interesting skill. As part of their fees they are paying for the expenses of operating the Collegian but you have elected not to provide them with the services that they pay for. Do you do this for all RSO groups? Don't you think that we have anything interesting going on?

I might also add, that we believe that you have used us as well. On one occasion a club member flew one of your photographers around the university to take some aerial pictures of the campus. Although the cost of the airplane was donated when one of the pictures appeared in late October no mention was made of who the pilot was or his generosity. Talk about rubbing salt into an open wound.....

United States capable of feeding many more

To the Editor:

There is a worldwide food shortage that exists. The United States is the leader in food production, as the Arabs are the principal producers of oil. The Arabs are fortunate to have immense oil reserves while we have a variety of climates to produce a substantial variety of crops. We are capable of feeding the 215,000,000 inhabitants of the United States and many other countries too. How many of us really know how much food is wasted daily in this country even with the immense food reserves we have. It's regrettable when it comes down to economics and profit making decisions rather than being more concerned whether people starve to death.

Most of us here at the UMass campus take it for granted where our next meal is coming from but what of those who can't be this fortunate. In the meantime we disregard the fact that most of us over eat or take too much food on our plates and end up throwing some away. Even if we throw away a trivial amount of food multiplied times 23,000 you have a substantial amount of food wasted.

All of us know what I'm saying here is true but you're probably thinking, so what, why write this article if we all know the facts. The facts are that if maybe the issues are put down in writing, maybe some of us will think about this dilemma a little bit more seriously.

Electricity no trivial matter

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to what I believe is a great waste of electricity in John Adams Tower. If this appears to be an insignificant matter to write a letter on, consider the fact that electrical consumption is increasing at quadruple the rate of population. Why, when we were so conscious of energy conservation last winter, are we so wasteful now?!

On virtually every floor in John Adams, on the floor area outside the stairwells, there is a light switch controlling the lights directly outside the elevators and inside the stairwells. These lights, in my opinion, are totally unnecessary. When turned off they pose no inconvenience or safety hazard - the areas are illuminated by other lights. And yet these lights are on sixteen out of eighteen floors!

It is not uncommon for the fifth floor lounge lights to be on when no one is studying there, and I have come back from classes to see the balcony lights on at 2:30 in the afternoon. The lights in the fifth floor "candy machine" room always seem to be on. On one occasion I found four unnecessary lights on the fifth floor.

I don't even dare to guess how much electricity is wasted in floor lounges, but I can testify to the fact that at least one floor lounge's lights are on all night three or four times a week and I think that it is asinine.

If this is a stupid subject on which to write a letter to the editor, then the amount of electricity wasted in John Adams is even more stupid! Trivial or not, too many lights are on and too many people are too lazy to turn them off evidently.

A CC experience

To the Editor:

I had the unfortunate experience of working for the Campus Center from June 2, 1971 through Oct. 1972. When I showed up for my job Don Witkoski put me up for the night in the hotel and then into the dorms. My job was writing time cards. I was instructed by Don Witkoski to not write time for over 40 hours, but to keep it on file and add it to other weeks which were not 40 hours. The actual cards I wrote are more than likely in the Amherst town dump.

My employment records state I started work June 20, 1971. There were three weeks I was not paid, but instead at the end of the summer Witkoski gave me a three week vacation. From Sept. 1971 until Oct. 1972 I had the position of tel. op. at the hotel. I did the same work as the male desk clerk but was paid less. A different title does not always mean different work.

Hitching a ride

To the Editor:

The next time you pass a hitchhiker, think-how hardened you have become to your brothers and sisters. Insensitivity and-or fear blind your directed vision.

And think as you pass by - who is the driver, and who is the driven? And think-how you're polluting our earth in your own private car.

Think - and perhaps, a spark will arise in you, in us, to stop the forces which are driving us apart, which are destroying our earth. Let us control and not be driven.

Give us a ride or take a bus or help change this damn economic system.

Parking policy unfair

NO TICKETS-NO POWER

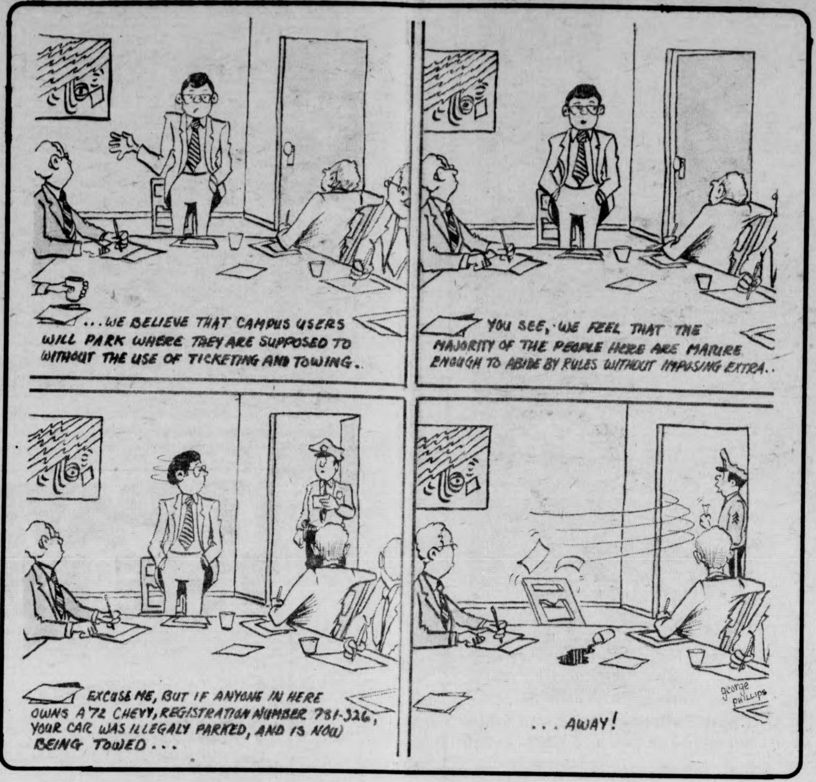
To the Editor:

I was delighted to read in the Collegian [11-18] this morning that the Department of Public Safety will no longer be ticketing cars that are parked in lots that they were not assigned to. I've been waiting for 2½ months now for a lot closer to my dorm but due to the high cost of close lots I have been unable to afford one.

I think that is absolutely ridiculous for Mr. Johnston to think that people will not park their cars in the very closest lot available to them, especially if they have been told that they will not be ticketed. I feel that if this policy is carried out it will create a very serious injustice to those people who have already paid a high price for a choice lot. To me, this new policy means first come-first serve. Now tell me, just what is the sense of having different priced lots at all?

I sincerely hope that you arrive at work very early Mr. Johnston, I would hate to see you walking to your office from the stadium parking area!

David Daigneault



...WE BELIEVE THAT CAMPUS USERS WILL PARK WHERE THEY ARE SUPPOSED TO WITHOUT THE USE OF TICKETING AND TOWING..
YOU SEE, WE FEEL THAT THE MAJORITY OF THE PEOPLE HERE ARE MATURE ENOUGH TO ABIDE BY RULES WITHOUT IMPOSING EXTRA..
EXCUSE ME, BUT IF ANYONE IN HERE OWNS A '72 CHEVY, REGISTRATION NUMBER 781-326, YOUR CAR WAS ILLEGALY PARKED, AND IS NOW BEING TOWED...

Students denied rights?

By MARTHA CREEGAN

It is distressing to hear that people have already accepted the limitations set down on the Legal Services Office by the Administration. These specific limitations being: criminal litigation and litigation against the University are not finalized. Furthermore, what we are finding is that the Administration, who Dr. Gage has acted on behalf of, has very little legal background to support its restrictions.

It should be stressed at this time that the Legal Services Governing Board feels there should be no limitations upon this office; that students should not be denied constitutional rights due to their status as students. We do not accept the scope of this office which Dr. Gage and possibly Chancellor Bromery has taken the liberty to define. We are waiting for legal interpretations to be finalized but this should not deter anyone from coming in and seeking legal counsel. The only limitations that have been finalized by the Board are the following:

No cases that would involve a student vs. student conflict
No real property transactions
No cases which a member of the private bar can handle on a contingency fee basis. Cases in this category can be taken if the Board determines that the case is of campus-wide significance
The lawyers will advise but not represent in cases which the clients obviously does not need a lawyer, (name changes, small claims) unless the client has almost no chance of success without a lawyer.

We have established a referral system to handle cases which we can not handle due to the amount of time involved or other conflicts. I wish to impress the fact that this office will attempt to meet all of the needs that it is confronted with. We can advise students in all cases and if the case requires action that we cannot provide we will refer the student to other legal counsel where the fee will be commensurate with your income. Therefore don't assume that we will not represent you in your case without first speaking to our staff.

The students should decide what limitations, if any, are placed on our retained counsel. Dr. Gage has no right to usurp this authority to determine the services we will receive. The attorneys, ours and the University's, are presently involved in the process of determining the legality of our actions as a Student Legal Services Office. Ultimately, if we, the students are dissatisfied with the solutions offered by the University, the courts will be requested to make the decision. The Legal Services Governing Board is the Student Body that has been established to insure the protection of our interests. If there are any questions or requests, please feel free to contact us in Room 922, Campus Center.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Student rip-off rate rising

According to UMass police records, students are ripping each other off more than ever. To those students that live on campus, this is increasingly becoming a fact of life. The posters that are scattered throughout the dorms which emphatically say LOCK YOUR DOORS, do so for a reason. If you leave your room for thirty seconds, lock your door. If you want to give your money away, you can probably find a worthier cause.

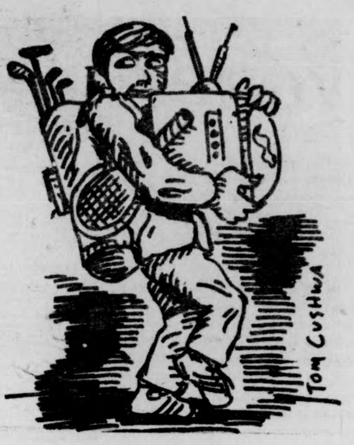
I guess that I've been naive in thinking that since we're all in this together, we'll work together to make the best with what we've got. So much for the golden rule. Evidently that went out with the sixties, along with hippies, smoke-ins and Clean for Gene.

Some people feel that they can ease the rising cost of living by shoplifting. Whether its pocketing an item, exchanging price tags or lying to Bell Telephone, its stealing, and it only hurts the people that are forced to pay the higher prices. This is as true on campus with the dining commons as it is at Stop and Shop.

For people without power, it is very hard to find a villain in the system to fight. As the economic situation worsens, more and more people lose faith in our system which hurts first, those that have been hurt the most all along. It's unfortunate, but people without power tend to take out their anger and frustration on other people with power.

When situations like this have occurred in the past, numerous attempts have been made to find scapegoats. In Germany, the economic chaos was blamed on the Jews. At other times and places, most minorities have served the same purpose. It's a vicious and devastating phenomena. It's so much easier to blame those that are least able to defend themselves.

By the way -- don't just lock your door if you're not there. There have been numerous incidents on this campus of people being ripped off while sleeping when they had left their door unlocked. One gentleman confronted as he examined a television in a dark room in the wee hours of the night declared he was in the wrong room and left. Many similar incidents don't end so nicely.



If you do get ripped off, notify the police. Also, let people know, such as your head of residence, and the janitors. You may be lucky as I was. When I left my purse in a dorm class, it was later found intact except for the money. Even if all one's money is stolen, it's a lot easier to replace than such other things as Driver's License and Student I.D. If you don't have these items, you virtually don't exist.

I hope that the person that stole my money enjoys spending it. I also hope that the person that stole my broken alarm clock was late for something really important. I hope that whoever stole the girl down the hall's pants while they were in the dryer found out that they didn't fit. I also hope that some of these people either get caught or quit stealing. It's too bad, but I suspect that those of you that have read this far are probably those of you that have been ripped off, not those that do it. So it goes.

Choosing a decision-maker

It's easy to see that the world is presently in a sad state what with economic chaos, starvation, environmental degredation and a general resurgence of man against man conflict. It's only logical to ask why. The answer, for my part, is in the way we make decisions, and especially in the selection process for the people who make them.

To understand the problem of decisions and decision-makers, you have to take a certain of factors for granted:

-- that the social process by which people become leaders of government and industry discriminates in favor of those who have demonstrated competence in a traditional sense. Those who successfully channel intelligence towards society's ends will become successful. A merely brilliant person will not succeed. He must conform to established norms.

-- that the leadership caste tends to perpetuate itself by recognizing and promoting those individuals who most closely resemble it in character, normative assumptions and appearance.

-- that the leadership caste in government, and especially business, is predominantly white, Protestant and-or Jewish and are largely offspring of first-generation independently successful traditional capitalists.

-- that in order to make decisions which represent the best compromise between popular belief and rational public interest, the decision-maker must have as wide a variety of personal experiences and value associations as possible in one individual.

--that most decision-makers have an insufficiently wide-range of personal experiences to strike a fair balance between rational public interest and popular sentiment. They come down on the side of one or the other consistently and in so doing, formulate "bad" policy.

-- that the judgment of "good" and "bad" policy is itself dependent on the personal experiences of the judge. However, since we do not have the benefit of omniscience, or a time-machine that permits a glimpse of the future, we must each choose our own judge. There is no escape from this variable.

Taking those six things for granted, which is a whopping amount, here is what I see as the result:

-- the best decision-makers are those whose lifestyles, friends, homes and lovers have constantly changed in a continual process of metamorphosis up to the point when they are asked to become leaders.

--the chances of such a person assuming decision-making power of any substantial impact on society is virtually nil in a class society. Present leaders will refuse admission to the caste.

Such a person would be poor, because he could not hold a job. He would undoubtedly be a vagrant, since he would quickly grow stagnant in a given location as he developed a routine and stimuli to growth and change diminished. He would have few lasting friends to recommend him. Small wonder a leadership caste accustomed to permanence and steadiness would exclude such a person.

How many travelling short-order cooks have ended up in major decision-making roles?

A bigger problem comes out of the first one. It is that decision-makers may not be an appealing role to those who are likely to make the "best" decisions for society as defined earlier. Or, simply, how many short-order cooks would wish to be President?

We don't know, since no one has asked and it is likely that any short order cook asked that question would laugh at the absurdity of it. That isn't the way things work, he would say.

Even if the cook were brilliant, he probably would have been conditioned to believe he is not competent to make society's decisions.

So we have a decision-making caste based not on intelligence and variety of experience, but on the continuance of an elite interpretation of competence -- stability and ability to perform in society's elite institutions.

A more suitable procedure for selection of decision-makers would be an open application process for each job. The applicant with the highest intelligence, knowledge of current affairs and breadth of experience should hold the decision-making power -- not the Harvard graduate who has interned in business.

Over generations, such a procedure would break down the leadership caste and create a new one based on merit and range of experience. Coupled with income redistribution and some means of radically altering child-rearing, it could open the way to a "classless society" -- meaning one based on new classes separated by intelligence and richness of background rather than ethnicity, heritage or family status.

Of course the present caste will argue that such a proposal only substitutes one imperfect system of decision-making for another one. They perhaps don't realize that the one described here is the one they profess to represent -- based on equality of opportunity.

Collegian LIFE/STYLE

Freebies anyone?

By GILBERT J. SALK
Special Correspondent

There is a major life-resources service that many of us know little or nothing about. It's a valuable service which does not get the attention or publicity it should.

Believe it or not, I'm talking about the United States government.

Our government produces a wealth of printed material-which is available to any of us. Much of it is directly aimed at what you need to know.

Government literature covers every imaginable subject, as well as some unimaginable subjects. It ranges from simple, easy-to-read pamphlets to highly technical journals. And in most cases, things are surprisingly inexpensive.

There's a simple way to find out what is generally available. All you have to do is send your name and address to the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Tell them you want to be put on the mailing list for "Selected U.S. Government Publications." It's free, and will be sent to your home every other week.

Every issue of this handy little catalogue lists nearly 200 books, pamphlets, posters, etc. published by the government. Each item is described in a little blurb, so you have some idea of what it's about. Prices range from as low as a dime to as much as twenty dollars or more, but most items cost about a dollar.

Sample titles in the latest issue include: Exploring Occupations in the Natural Resources, Impeachment: Selected Materials on Procedure, State Veterans' Laws, Properties of Imported Tropical Woods, How to Buy Food, and Economic Problems of Women.

Whatever you're into, there's a strong likelihood that this will be of interest to you. Even if you don't order anything, it's something of an eyeopener to see what the government studies and writes about. It's a side of your tax dollar about which you don't hear much.

Another way to get your hands on some of these goodies is through your congressperson. The Department of Agriculture in particular makes a large number of publications available, at no charge, through members of Congress.

For example, I wrote to Silvio Conte for information about this, and he sent back a 7-page brochure of freebies he can provide. The subject list is fascinating. There are booklets on building materials, maintenance, and protection, on canning, freezing, and storing, on fruit, nuts, and grain, and on livestock and poultry. You can get pamphlets on sewing or vegetable and herb gardening, or on rural committees, insects, or irrigation. And they are all free.

To get the list, write to your congressperson and tell him you'd like the booklet on USDA publication you can order from her (or him.)

The various federal departments produce all of these items, and much can be ordered directly through them, though they will frequently refer you back to the Supt. of Documents. If you are interested in a particular subject, such as penal reform, for instance, you might write to the Dept. of Justice and ask what publications they have available. The State Dept. would have information on any other nation in which you might be interested. Health, Education, and Welfare would have information on health, child-rearing, and other areas which fall under their jurisdiction. You can use your imagination to figure out which agency would produce the information you want.

The important thing is for you to realize that these services exist. They constitute a possible major resource for you.

I'd like to review a couple of books I've obtained from the government, mostly to give you a better idea of the type of thing you can expect.

The Handbook for Building Homes of Earth by Lyle A. Wolfskill, et al. ($6.00, U.S. Dept of Commerce, No. PB179327) is a book about using dirt as the basic building material in houses. It devotes particular attention to use of pressed earth blocks, adobe, and rammed earth. There are chapters devoted to stabilizing soil, building foundations and lightweight roofs, and other problems. It includes discussion of methods which are suited to rainy climates. It is packed with technical information as well as readable chapters on the general problem. It is a book which would be a how-to for anyone who wanted to beat high construction costs by using his or her own muscle-power and the dirt in the backyard. It is possible.

Of more general interest is a book put out by the Dept. of Agriculture. Handbook for the Home 1973 Yearbook of Agriculture ($5.70 USDA) is a large collection of articles concerning nearly all aspects of the home. A sampling of article titles show items on home safety, money management, home repairs, camping, furnishing (from drapes to appliances), and community programs. Most of the articles are either entertaining or informative--or, frequently both. Unfortunately, there is a somewhat sexist tone to it. (For example, one article is entitled "Handmade Fashions in Doubleknit for the Man of your Life.) But if you can tolerate that, you should find the book very useful.

Major problems beset miners

With the recent coal miners' strike this winter, the threat of another energy shortage is upon us again. One UMass student worked as a miner; perhaps we can gain some insight into the life of a miner, and find just why they are striking.

By CALVIN LAYTON
Staff Correspondent

The coal mines of West Virginia are a long way from Magma Copper Company in San Manuel, Arizona, but when one is underground the view is the same. Three years ago I was 2015 feet underneath the earth mining copper.

Miners are the same all over the world, trying to earn a living at frightening risks. Concerns of inflation and the energy shortage have brought this strike to national prominence. They have little to do with the cause. The reasons originate underground in the drifts and tunnels. Increased safety won't change the inherent dangers of mining. The men want to be compensated for the risks encountered.

Copper mining is cleaner and safer than coal mining. The San Manuel mine, where I worked, was considered one of the safer mines. The rock we were tunneling in is somewhat safer than coal. In San Manuel there was no danger of methane gas, flooding was a minor danger.

Most of mine safety is due to the miners own alertness. At times even being alert will not help a man. Once I was blasting a rock jam. I set three charges of dynamite up in the rocks, with electric blasting caps, and wired them up. As I walked away there was a noise behind me, I turned to see the rocks cave in on the charges. I could only stand and watch. They didn't go off.

The pay is low considering the risks involved. The most I ever made was $4.27 an hour. This was three years ago and the rate has not gone up significantly since. The work week was seven days straight before one had a day off. This meant one's day off was different each week.

The mine is fifty miles from Tucson which is where most of the miners lived. Twelve hours had gone by from the time we left in the morning until we got home at night. Half of the miners were Mexican-Americans and half were Anglos.

Most of the men were barely high school graduates. I had had two years of college behind me, and because of this I almost didn't get hired.

Talking with the miners is somewhat depressing. They all had their hopes and dreams, but you knew and they knew that they would always be miners. Some of the miners were Christians. There faith in God gave them an ability to deal with problems of being miners, which included the management trying to prohibit them from reading their Bibles during work breaks.

When it comes strike time, miners usually stay out until they get what they want. Ore shortages aren't important to them, and inflation is minor compared to getting paid for the risks.

Copper mining was bad enough without having to face Black Lung disease, cave-ins, flooding, gas, and fire. Be ready for a cold winter if the coal companies don't give the miners what they want.

What is the first all-American meat you will pick up at the grocery store? It's probably sitting in your refrigerator right now. Hamburger is the most common source of meat in our diet and most people don't even know how to prepare or buy it.

When purchasing hamburger, keep in mind that three ounces of lean meat is considered a nutritionally adequate serving. To get three ounces of hamburg requires one person consuming 26 per cent of a "lean" pound. This means that approximately four people can be nutritionally fulfilled with one pound of "lean" hamburger.

Most consumers will pick up the cheapest hamburger in sight. Prices per pound range from .95 to 1.39. Little do they know the difference in the proportion of fat to lean meat. There are no FDA requirements that this percentage be labeled and so we must take it for granted that the more you pay per pound, the leaner it is. Your best bet in finding good quality hamburger, is to shop at a market where the meat is freshly ground. Smaller markets such as Watroba's or Louis can just about guarantee satisfaction.

However, if you must purchase your hamburger at a large supermarket, make sure it is stamped by the USDA. This will assure you the meat is what it is labeled.

What we have for you is a no-goof recipe that takes about an hour to prepare and bake.

HAMBURGER PIE

1 lb. lean hamburger
1 onion (diced)
1 green pepper (diced)
margarine
1½ cans of tomato sauce (8 oz.)
½ c. cracker crumbs
½ c. grated cheese
2 c. cooked rice

Mix the hamburger with ½ can of tomato sauce. Sautee the onion and peppers and onions in margarine. Add them to the mixture. (add a pinch of thyme.) Now pour the mixture into a 9" pie plate. Mold it in just like a pie crust. Next pour in the rice and cover it with the rest of the tomato sauce. Sprinkle with crumbs and cheese and bake at 350 degrees for 25 minutes.

Hints: Use minute rice to save time.
A pinch of thyme adds wonderful flavor.
This meal serves 4 people for approximately $2.45.

Japanese Quaker talks on Korean resistance

Nicola Geiger, a Quaker from Japan active in the Japanese Peace Movement and the Korean Resistance Movement, will speak in the Five College area today and tomorrow. The slide-talk, "Non-Violent Resistance in South Korea," is slated for Wright Hall, Smith College, 8 pm today and the UMass Colonial Lounge 7:30 pm tomorrow.

In Japan, Ms. Geiger has been active in helping Kim Dae Jung, who was kidnapped in Tokyo and placed under house arrest in Seoul for his strong opposition to the Park Chung Hee regime. Last summer, she coordinated the International Committee to Save Kim Chi Ha, a young poet sentenced to death.

During her talk in Honolulu, Ms. Geiger compared the reign of South Korean President Park to that of Hitler in Germany. Ms. Geiger maintains that both Park and Hitler rounded up religious leaders and intellectuals "very cleverly and very quietly" until the people were left without leadership. Now 55, she was born in Germany and once was a member of Hitler Youth. Realizing Hitler's real activities and plans, she joined the resistance movement from 1940-45.

In 1950, Ms. Geiger came to the U.S. and worked with the Friends Peace Committee and other peace and civil rights groups.

She has been in Japan for seven years, one year at Friendship Center in Hiroshima and five years as Director of the East Asian Center of Friends World College in Kyoto. Her deep commitment to Korea stems from friendships with many members of the South Korean resistance movement.

Panel debates today abolition of counties

The issue of "Should County Government Be Abolished?" will be debated at the regular monthly meeting of the Hampshire County Democratic Association at 7:30 tonight at the World War Two Club, Conz St., Northampton.

Northampton's Ward 2 City Councillor William Ames will speak in favor of abolishing county government in Massachusetts. David Musante, chairman of the Hampshire County Commissioners, will debate in opposition.

Mrs. Jay Judge of Southampton, chairwoman of the Democratic association, will preside over the meeting.

AN EXHILARATING EXPERIENCE

Classics Dept. offers new Greek study option

The Department of Classics is introducing a new option into its courses for this Spring. Students enrolling in Classics 100, Greek Civilization, may choose between the regular class on Greek art, literature and society, to be taught by Niki Stavrolakes, an archaeologist, who also teaches courses in Mediterranean and Underwater Archaeology, and a new class, Classics 100A: Greek Civilization - Mythology.

The new class is for those students who need a background in the Greek myths seen in Greek literature or in the underlying foundations of Greek and western thought. Professor Robert Dyer, who will teach the new class, also teaches a more advanced class The Deep Structures of Greek Thought, which explores the ways in which the Greek mythical or "pre-rational" thought limited and shaped later "rational" philosophy.

The new course has no prerequisites, and may be of special interest to students in anthropology, folklore, sociology and psychology, who are interested in the role of myth, heroic examples, and traditional structures, in the formation and problems of identity in a particular society. Greek myth is of special importance to us, as it has remained an important element in western literature and philosophy down to the present day.

Its study allows us to examine, at a certain distance, some of the "irrational" background of such modern cultural concepts as democracy, harmony, love, competition, progress through strife, maturity, and thus contributes to a study of oneself in society.

The class will not be comparative, as its purpose is to discover, in the myths and in the treatments of myth in Homer and the Greek tragedians, those elements which determined the peculiarly Greek features of Greek values and behavior. The textbook, Edith Hamilton's Mythology, reflects outmoded attitudes to the Greek myths and can be examined for what it reveals to us about possible modern interpretations of myths. Students will be encouraged to rewrite Greek myths to reflect their personal values, as a way of comparing Greek cultural values with their own.

Greek study program to meet today to discuss course plans

A representative from Study in Greece, Inc. will meet with interested students today at 4:30 p.m. in the International Programs Office at 239 Whitmore. Sophomores and juniors are urged by organizers to attend.

Study in Greece is a small program of 25 students from across the nation. Most students participate for one semester. Courses are taught by Greek nationals and-or Greek Americans in Athens. Some unique aspects include living with a Greek family for a month in rural Greece to learn Greek language and to experience the Greek culture. Courses are taught in Athens but are held at times outside of the regular classroom structure. For example, an archeology major might work directly on a site with an advisor or an art history would study in a museum with a staff member.

Inmates get awards today

Sheriff John Courtney and Berkshire County House of Correction Supt. William Jones will be guest speakers at an inmates' award night at the UMass campus center tonight. The evening begins with a dinner-reception at 5:30. The speakers are scheduled at 8 p.m. Inmates will receive awards for their work at the Belchertown state school.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 20 — Born today, you have a tendency to be discontented with life in general, and with your particular niche in it specifically. So discontent does not serve you ill, however, for it forces you periodically to take an inventory of your possessions — both material and spiritual — and yourself. Then, when any of these is found wanting (as, in your case, with your essential attitude of dissatisfaction, one or more of them is bound to do), to set about the business of improvement.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You will have to resolve difficulties on the employment scene if you are to get ahead with your present project. Don't expect an easy way out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Although you are bound to view things from a reasonable point of view, you might do well to add a bit of heart to the proceedings.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your present method of operation may leave a good bit to be desired insofar as results are concerned. Try something different.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Keep your social life from encroaching upon your career opportunities, especially now that you have vital decisions to make regarding the latter.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Today's prospects can materialize into bona fide projects yielding exceptional gains — if you are wise enough to take advantage of a head start.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Business deals must not be allowed to hang fire too long. Now is a good time for signing papers. Be prepared for a small battle in the afternoon.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Personal matters must take a back seat to employment problems otherwise you will find yourself without a solution to either at the end of the day.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Loose ends could spoil your plans for a successful journey. Take the time and make the effort to get things right the first time around.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Avoid taking part in those activities which by their very nature would slow down your progress where your career is concerned. Weigh difficulties.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Clear your desk of all matters extraneous to your immediate goal. You will regret not having done so should you allow distractions to interfere.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A good day for making up for time lost yesterday. Introduce another to the joys of a new activity. Take care not to cross elders.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A day which favors commercial projects even as it yields encouragement for the strictly creative. Don't think the day is over with the setting sun!

It's a tie in NE poll

BOSTON [UPI] - Boston College is on a tear and Yale still hasn't lost.

So who is the No. 1 major college team in New England?

Both teams, that's who. Sixteen coaches participated in the weekly UPI coaches poll. Eight rated Boston College, 6-3 and No. 2 last week, as the region's top team. Eight voted Yale, 8-0, as the best team. In every case, Yale and Boston College were one-two on the ballot, which resulted in both teams receiving 72 points.

The tie could be broken next week after Yale meets Harvard in the Ivy League title game and Boston College travels to Massachusetts.

Yale has a right to be No. 1, with its nation-leading defense that has allowed just 5.8 points per game. But the Eagles, in winning four straight, have outscored their opponents 162-13.

The coaches were more sure of the region's third place team. Harvard, an upset loser to Brown last Saturday, earned 40 points.

Massachusetts, coming out of the woods of a mediocre season, dumped New Hampshire to tie for the Yankee Conference title and earned fourth place with 16 poin Holy Cross, with its second straight win, took fifth place with 14 points.

Points are awarded on a descending scale, with first place votes worth five points.

UMass swimmers open season today

The UMass Women's swim team will be competing against Smith and Mt. Holyoke in its first meet of the season this Wednesday at the North Physical Education Building.

The team started informal workouts in September under coach Pat Griffin. The practices were low pressure and distances, with emphasis on stroke technique. The team is presently working a total of two hours a day - a half hour of stretching and land exercises and one and a half hours of speed work in the pool, averaging 3500 yards.

The standard meet events, swam in a twenty-five yard pool, are: 200 yard Medley Relay, 50, 100, 200, and 400 yard Freestyle, 200 yard Individual Medley (50 yards of butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke, and freestyle). Diving, 50 and 100 yard butterfly, backstroke, and breaststroke, and 400 yard freestyle relay.

The mmet starts at 7:00 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Scheduling hassles

By MIKE BERGER
Sports Staff

So, you want to become assistant athletic director at UMass? A nice easy desk job. Call up your cronies. Shoot the bull.

"Hey Joe, how about if we play you November 15th at 2:00 in Alumni Stadium?

Sorry to burst your bubble, but assistant athletic director Bob O'Connell and head basketball coach Jack Leaman daily are deluged with phone calls, have desks typical of Oscar Madison on the Odd Couple, and have worries about such sundry items as the 1980 UMass football schedule and players missing classes.

Both Leaman and O'Connell agree that there is an economic crunch, what with scholarships and the cost of just running the athletic program here. UMass-Amherst has 23 intercollegiate sports with approximately 35 teams. This kind of program rates in the highest 10 per cent bracket in the country.

Inflation has certainly hurt the program but O'Connell maintains that the university will desperately try not to cut back on the intercollegiate level.

The best example of the effort put in by O'Connell's office in trying to schedule games outside the Yankee Conference was the planned North Carolina State-UMass basketball game supposedly to have taken place in Madison Square Garden this year. However, three hours after an agreement was reached, N.C. State backed off for financial reasons.

In football this year, Villanova, Dartmouth, Colgate and Boston College represent teams outside the Yankee Conference. One can expect to see Rutgers and Harvard University on the football schedule again in future years.

West Virginia, Niagara and Fairfield will face the UMass basketball team this season. Duquesne, Villanova, and Fordham are possible opponenets for the Minutemen in upcoming years. In addition, UMass was chosen as one of the four teams in the annual ECAC Holiday Festival in 1977-78.

The problems encountered by both men in finding national teams to play are the following:

1. The amount of money involved in travelling.
2. Players missing class. Leaman has emphatically promised the parents of all his players that "every single one of his team will graduate."
3. Leaman also feels that his team could not physically compete on a national level day in and day out. For example, playing N.C.State one night and then playing UCLA the next night would be comparable to going over Niagara Falls in a barrel and then coming back for a second try the next time.
4. Need for better home facilities. Schools across the country will not come here because of the size of Curry Hicks. Financially they would take a beating.

Starting eight years ago and continuing to the present, there have been serious discussions of building a sports complex similar to that of Notre Dame. The state of Massachusetts 8 years ago was not ready to finance such a venture. When the idea of adding an additional student athletic fee to help finance the complex was brought up, it produced negative reactions from the student body.

This proposed facility would house an approximately 8,000. It could possibly also include an indoor track and house band concerts as well as the year-ending convocation and graduation.

When asked about the rest of the country's viewpoint of the quality of athletics at UMass, both men agreed on the following:

In basketball, UMass had played nationally-ranked Providence every year and has appeared in 4 national tournaments. In football, both Leaman and O'Connell feel Boston College is trying to go on a national level (B.C.-Texas, B.C.-Notre Dame) and is unconsciously pulling other teams with them. They feel that B.C.'s recruitment program has been given a shot in the arm and their fan interest is growing. On the other hand, both coaches agree that most New England college objectives are academically-oriented. Added to that the aforementioned problems and you can see that New England is not 100 per cent for going national.

A long, sad year

By BILL EDELSTEIN
Sports Staff

The Yankee Conference has finished another campaign, and it is one the conference might like to forget. UMass (definitely not one of the strongest teams we've ever seen) and UMaine (the same team that UMass defeated 42-0 this year) have a share of this season's YanCon title.

The final standings read: UMass 4-2, UMaine 4-2, UConn 3-3, UNH 3-3, URI 3-3, BU 3-3, and UVM 1-5. These standings imply that UMass and UMaine were the best teams in the YanCon , UVM was the worst, and everybody else was equal. They are misleading; in this year's Yankee Conference everone was equal. To put it simply, UMass and UMaine finished in a tie for first, UConn, UNH, URI and BU finished in a tie for second, and the third place team, UVM, is dropping football altogether (unless some alumni come up with $200,000).

UMass has gained a share of the YanCon title through a season of successes and frustrations. The first conference game the Minutemen played was against co-champion, Maine. UMass was the contest 42-0 and the Black Bears gave no sign of sharing any sort of title at all.

The Minutemen then hosted Vermont, and handed the Catamounts their lone seasonal (and perhaps last) Yankee Conference win by playing as poor a game as you'll ever want to see.

The UMies then faced Boston University, and after a brilliant frist half showing, tried to give the Terriers the victory in the second half, but failed when a BU last-ditch pass was knocked away by the UMass secondary.

Next, the Minutemen carried their 2-1 conference record to Rhode Island to face the Rams. UMass again jumped off to a first half lead only to be given a second half scare by URI.

The Minutemen hung on to win, though, and upped their conference record to 3-1, setting the stage for the Big Game; UMass versus UConn. The winner of this match-up supposedly had the Yankee Conference title all to itself. This was not to be. Although the Minutemen, leading 9-0, blew the contest on a bunch of turnovers, 10-9, it was UMass that shared the conference title while UConn finished either third or sixth, wherever you'd like to put them.

By the time UMass got around to playing UNH, peculiar things had transpired in the YanCon; Maine had defeated UVM, insuring itself of, at least, a part of the YanCon title, UConn had lost to BU, insuring itself of, at most, a part of the title and UNH had posted the same record as UMass (3-2) going in to the final conference game, insuring a hell of a mess.

For the Minutemen the whole year was filled with second half impotence, garnished with turnovers and topped off with a title.

Freshman harriers place fourth among JV IC4A's

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The UMass freshmen cross country team captured fourth in the IC4A junior varsity championships held Monday afternoon, after the varsity's exciting triumph. Competing against the top JV runners in the East, some of which were sophomores and juniors, the first-year harriers performed well over the demanding five-mile Van Cortlandt Park course (the same course used for the varsity meet.)

Cliff Staples led the runners by taking second with a time of 25:57, thirteen seconds off the winning pace set by Jim Kelly of Naby. In fact, had Staples run in the varsity race, his time would have been good enough for fifty-ninth or sixtieth. Of course, although Staples ran the same time as Tom Maguire, the fifth man on the varsity squad, external factors such as pressure and the pace set at the start of a varsity race are not taken into consideration.

Staples felt that he ran a good race, and stated that he felt less pressure and more comfortable running up front in the race. "I tried to run with the leaders," commented Staples who just tried to hold second" once he found himself behind the pacesetter. Staples added that he liked the course, a statement which hundreds of other runners wish they could boast after running what may be considered the toughest course in the East.

Bobby Neil of UMass finished twelfth and teammate Rolf Meyer took eighteenth. The fourth UMass runner to cross the finish line was Frank Carroll in the twenty-ninth position while Dave Kramer rounded out the top-five with a sixty-first place finish.

Navy won the team title with 43 points, using the same tight group running that the varsity Midshipmen utilized. Villanova was second with 80 points, while Fordham nipped UMass for third place, 112-114.

It's NCAA soccer

STORRS, CONN. [UPI] - The Universities of Connecticut and Bridgeport will open the New England NCAA University Division Soccer Tournament Wednesday, each team only five victories away from the National Championship.

UConn, 16-1-1 for the season, handed a 2-1 loss in its season opener, but the Knights are favored on the basis of scores in games against the same rivals.

Thomson calls ski ad a bad ethnic slur

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — Gov. Meldrim Thomson says the New England Regional Commission is planning a skiing advertisement that contains an ethnic slur because it ends a lot of words with the suffix, "ski."

"When you ski New England, you get more than a mountain," the proposed ad says. Some of the other things it suggests you get are: "Cheapski, antiqueski, kidski, relaxski, springski, maple syrupski, sightski, familyski, Walden Pondski, partyski, chowderski, tour-ski." It suggests that readers "writeski" for information.

It also contains an apparently Polish text extolling the virtues of New England skiing.

He called the proposed ad "one of the worst ethnic slurs that has ever come to my attention." He protested the use of federal regional funds to back the ad.

Rev kept faith

ABILENE, TEX. [UPI] - The Rev. Jack Ridlehoover, Pastor of the Pioneer Drive Baptist Church, and Baylor fan, decided the church should deal with worldly problems for a time last Sunday.

He told his congregation from the pulpit: "Some of you may wonder at the relevancy of this, but I consider what I'm about to say highly relevant."

And then he said it: "Hey, Hey! Ho, Ho! The Green and Gold in the Cotton Bowl!"

All about the IC4A champion

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Before Monday's IC4A Championship race, I was walking along tne gravel path at Van Cortlandt Park, that marks the final half-mile of the tough course. It was about noon, and I thought to myself that in ninety minutes the path would become a battleground as hundreds of runners attempted to exceed the state of exhaustion for a desperate, final kick. A team place or even the championship can be lost on that four-foot wide strip of gravel that leads to the finish line. There are so many runners at the IC4A's that five or ten runners can easily pass a runner during the last 880 yards, and that means that a team loses five or ten points.

Within the next hour and a half, the battle took place. When it was over, the UMass cross country squad became the first New England team to win the IC4A title in 31 years. Dartmouth won the coveted title in 1943, but until the Minutemen runners earned the gold IC4A trophy on Monday, IC4A supremacy by a New England school was non-existent for more than three decades.

The distancemen finally put everything together and were victorious as the result of a strong team effort. The runners waited all season long for "their day" and they couldn't have picked a better time to put together an outstanding overall showing.

It was a long trail to success for seniors Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and Tom Wilson that started in 1971. That was the year Thomas came to UMass from Fitchburg, Gillin from Holliston and Wilson from Merion, Pennsylvania.

Three years ago, UMass won the Yankee Conference title as Bill Gillin placed fourth. Thomas was unable to compete because of sickness and Wilson didn't run either. At the 1971 New Englands, Thomas finished eleventh and Gillin captured seventeenth. The team compiled a fine 10-3 record over the dual-meet portion of the season, placed third in the New Englands and then could only manage twenty-third at the IC4A's as only two other teams finished behind UMass. In that meet, Gillin finished eighty-sixth while thomas ended up in the ninety-seventh spot.

A year later, the harriers had a mediocre, 6-5 season, but moved up to second at the New Englands and tenth in the IC4A Championships. Thomas placed second and Gillin sixth as UMass won its third consecutive Yankee Conference crown. Freshmen Tom Maguire captured fifth in the YanCons while teammates Thomas and Gillin went on to finish fourth and fifth respectively, at the New Englands. Tom Wilson won the junior varsity New England race on the same day, running the 3.1 mile course at Franklin Park in 16:08. In the 1972 IC4A meet, Gillin placed twenty-first. Thomas wound up in the number forty spot and Maguire was sixty-seventh. Gillin and Thomas travelled to Texas for the NCAA meet and managed to finish 88 and 159, as Gillin once again bested Thomas.

Things began to take shape in 1973, the year in which UMass easily won the Yankee Conference title again. Thomas won individual honors at the YanCons in Durham, New Hampshire as Maguire, Gillin and a surprising freshman named John McGrail took third, fourth and eighth. A little more than a week later, Thomas placed third at the New Englands, and Gillin's fifth place finish along with the efforts of Maguire and McGrail, who took eleventh and sixteenth, earned UMass its first New England title since 1962.

Thomas and company ran impressively at theIC4A's and were the first New England runners to finish. Thomas placed fifteenth, Gillin twentieth and Maguire twenty-seventh. McGrail finished in the number fifty spot, while Wilson was back in the race at 119.

Spokane, Washington was the site of the 1973 Nationals, and although the harriers had some problems, they placed fifteenth as a team. Thomas, and Maguire placed in the top one hundred, but McGrail and Gillin weren't far behind.

Coach Ken O'Brien has had his share of success since becoming head coach in 1968, but this year, the work has really paid off for O'Brien, the 1973 New England cross country Coach of the Year.

In four years, the cross country team, with Thomas, Gillin and Wilson as runners has amassed a 33-13 dual meet record, four Yankee Conference titles, one New England Championship and most satisfying, the IC4A Championship.

The UMass squad has developed into a championship meet team, able to win the big meets. Thomas and company proved that Monday afternoon in New York, but it has been a long uphill climb. Thomas, Gillin and Wilson must still remember when they finished twenty-third three years ago, in front of only two teams, but you can bet they will remember November 18, 1974 for many years to come---the day UMass placed first at the IC4A's, as 23 of the top teams in the East took a back seat to Thomas and company.

Pucksters begin the long trek

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

It seems only yesterday that John Muse swept around a Vermont defender and beat John Kiely with a fifteen foot wrist shot to bring UMass within one goal in the Division Two hockey semi-finals last March.

Now Vermont, who eventually won the title, is competing with New Hampshire, Cornell, Clarkson etc. in Division One, and UMass gets ready to start their 1974-75 season.

Tonight at 8:00 (WMUA 7:50), the Minutemen open their season at their home-away-from-home, Orr Rink on the campus of Amherst College.

The team they're facing, New England College from Henniker, N.H., is an unknown quantity of the first degree. "I don't know any of their players," said UMass coach Jack Canniff yesterday. "Their coach Mickey Brule is a graduate of New Hampshire and comes from Canada, but that's all I know about them."

Canniff also had not decided on his number one goaltender as of yesterday afternoon. Bruce Gledhill, a junior with no varsity experience, along with sophomores John Kiley and Dana Redmond have all looked good so far, according to Canniff, who probably won't pick his starter until right before game time.

UMass will start the all-senior line of Muse, Steve Nims and center Kevin Conners, with seniors Mike Ellis and Bill Mintiens and on defense tonight a second trio will be made up by sophomore Mike Merchant who'll be centering Carl Burms, a sophmore, and freshman Chris Lamby, the brother of Salem State's sensational defenseman Rich Lamby. Another line will be centered by Ludlow's Scott McChesney, flanked by the freshman twins Billy and Bobby White from Revere. Junior Billy Harris will center a line between juniors Jimmy Lyons and Scott Stuart.

The other defense pairings will have sophomores Bob Jefferson, up from last year's JV's, and freshman standout Tim Howes skating together, while senior Bob Quinlan will be paired with sophomore Bob McCormack.

If the Minutemen can adequately make up for the departure of last year's starting goalie Chick Rheault, they will be definite contenders for the Division Two title, but after tonight's first game ever with New England College UMass will have a pretty good idea of what '74 has in store for them.

U.S. Court demands AT&T breakup

WASHINGTON (UPI) – The Justice Department demanded in court yesterday that American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the largest privately owned corporation in the world, be ordered to break up its giant communications network.

The biggest antitrust suit ever filed in U.S. District Court also charged Western Electric Co. Inc., which manufactures most of AT&T's equipment, and Bell Telephone Laboratories Inc., with monopoly.

It accused the three defendants "with combining and conspiring to monopolize, attempting to monopolize and monopolizing the telecommunications service and equipments market," and asked the court for "substantial divestiture."

The suit will take at least three years to come to trail, legal experts estimated, and it could take much longer than that to exhaust all legal appeals and recourses.

Meanwhile, in New York, AT&T pressed astonishment at the action and said it "could lead to fragmentation of responsibility for the nation's telephone network."

"If that happens telephone service would deteriorate and cost much, much more," he said, expressing confidence the company has violated no antitrust laws and declaring that the action "represents an attempt to change through the courts what has been national policy for six decades."

Justice officials declined to predict that rates would be lowered for telephone users if the government wins its case, but they said the public interest would be served in other ways, such as allowing freer access to various kinds of telephone equipment by consumers.

Trading of AT&T stock was suspended on the New York Stock Exchange at 3 p.m. EST yesterday until 10 a.m. EST today at the direction of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The SEC referred inquiries to the Justice Department, where announcement of the civil suit was made approximately an hour later.

The lengthy complaint included charges that the Bell System had obstructed attempts by smaller telecommunications firms to connect with it, and had steered equipment purchases to Western Electric, AT&T's wholly-owned manufacturing subsidiary.

Frank says program is understaffed

Journalism major splits faculty

By a Staff Reporter

The debate over the future of the journalism program at UMass continued yesterday with three sharply differing faculty positions discussed and the English department chairman supporting recent changes in the program.

Dr. Joseph Frank, the chairman, told the department's undergraduate studies committee "the only problem with the journalism program is it's understaffed."

Dr. Dario Politella proposed that the recent shift to English-journalism as the only track for students be reversed and the policy reinstated of allowing journalism combined with all major programs.

Politella told the five-person committee, chaired by Dr. Walker Gibson, that "students have been ignored in the decision-making process that resulted in the requirement changes."

"Students' true freedom depends upon the maximization of alternatives," Politella added.

Journalistic studies director Howard Ziff defended the changes approved at a controversial English department meeting last May.

"The new requirements are preferable to the old because they leave journalism open to further growth and align it with humanistic education," Ziff said.

Frank and Ziff both referred to the "single-track" major as a step toward establishment of an independent journalism department.

The plan to establish a new department was attacked by Dr. Arthur Musgrave. He said Ziff took charge of the journalism program in 1971 after being added to the

Wood now approves of access law

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert C. Wood yesterday withdrew his request for a six-month postponement in the effective date of a law opening up confidential files to students, saying he supports the law in principle.

The so-called "Buckley amendment" took effect Tuesday. It requires colleges and universities to allow students access on request to all records and documents kept on file about them.

"I strongly support the concept of the so-called 'Buckley amendment,' which guarantees to students and parents the right to examine certain files," Wood said in a statement issued yesterday afternoon.

"There are, however, said to be some important difficulties with the law as it presently exists, the most serious of them in the area of 'third party' material..."

The statement went on to cite: a) letters of recommendations submitted originally as confidential and contained in active files, and; b) parents' confidential financial statements as examples of such 'third party' material.

In a letter to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) sent Tuesday, Wood originally had asked for the postponement of the effective date of the amendment to July 1, 1975, supporting the position of the National Assn. of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

But in his statement yesterday, Wood said he now believes the "third party" difficulties with the amendment could be corrected by HEW rulemaking rather than a change in the law.

"This approach would not require postponing the effective date of the amendment," he said, pledging UMass to the "spirit of the law" whatever way is chosen to correct its technical faults."

In Boston yesterday, the Associated Press reported that an attorney for several Harvard students was to file a class-action suit enjoining the school from destroying or permanently removing material from their records.

Alan Caplan was expected to ask U.S. District Court to restore any records already removed from students' files.

Officials at several Worcester-area colleges said Tuesday the law is confusing and lacks "how to" guidelines. They said they would use the 45-day grace period contained in it to figure out how to handle student requests for psychological reports in their files.

Students will forego food in fast today

In observation of a nation-wide fast, UMass students are voluntarily giving up 5,615 meals at campus dining commons today, according to Arthur Warren, acting director of Food Services.

Food Services has agreed to donate 75 cents for every meal ticket stub that is not used to Oxfam-America, an international non-profit famine relief organization. Warren said more than $4,200 will be donated.

The meals not eaten today comprise more than 25 per cent of the 21,000 meals eaten daily in dining commons.

Warren credited the Center of Racial Understanding in Southwest as being the motivating force behind the project.

Elsewhere in the Five College area, Amherst College organizer Ken Kassler estimated that 30-40 students from a student population of 1300 would be fasting.

An organizer at Mount Holyoke College estimated that 25 per cent of the students would be fasting.

The Food Services Department at Smith College was notified too late to organize any systematic way for students to fast. A fast organizer estimated that 350 students would be fasting, out of a population of 2,700.

SGA votes down support for rally against dorm living

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate, last night defeated 28-24 a motion to support today's rally by the Revolutionary Student Brigade against forced dorm living.

The Student Senate also passed a resolution directing the Board of Governors to delay further action on the installation of the proposed bank and that the Student Organizing Committee thoroughly investigate and issue a report to the Senate.

Other motions passed last night involved support of popular elections of the SGA president, and the removal of the statue, Metawampe from its present position to a more illuminated and prominant place. The Senate defeated a motion that would have permitted RSO groups to advertise in the Collegian at cost.

The Senate resolution on the Campus bank was an outgrowth of the Board of Governor's presentation of the proposed bank to the Senate last week. The Student demands are similar to the first demand passed by the SGA at the town meeting,

Demonologists haunt UMass audience with convincing supernatural anecdotes

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Demonology and supernatural occurences were the subjects of the second presentation by Ed and Lorraine Warren, experts in this field, last night in Thompson Hall. The Warrens were here as guests of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

The Warrens began by telling the capacity crowd some of their past experiences with demonic spirits and paranormal occurences. One of their recent cases of a haunting that occured in a sixteen-year old home in West Hartford, Connecticut was shown in a narrated slide show, involving an interview with the residents of the home.

The Warrens attributed the haunting to the use of a Ouija board by members of the family. When the unexplained occurances began to plague the family, police were called in, but were unable to find any logical explanations for the events. Tires on their car were repeatedly slashed even though they were new.

No evidence of vandalism was found. A 400-lb. refrigerator was moved to the center of the kitchen floor which was carpeted, unexplained noises and crying sounds were heard, a hole was slashed in a bedroom wall. All possibilities and logical explanations did not suffice due to the circumstances of the situation.

There were no clues to justify the events. The Warrens were called in and finally the house was exorcised in May of this year by a Roman Catholic priest. The family has not experienced any further evidences of the demonic presence.

The Warrens feel that many hauntings are the result of an unaccepted death. This happens when one dies in an uneasy or confused state and is unable to accept the death of the physical body.

Often the spirit returns and causes the frightening occurances that have been experienced by many of people in the Warrens case histories. Not all of the hauntings that occur are diabolical, however. If a person has died, and has accepted his death, he is said to have "passed over correctly" and may return as a helpful spirit, or "spirit guide."

The Warrens also presented some of the work of Dr. Hans Bender of Frieberg, Germany who has done extensive work in this field and is world-reknowned. The Warrens, who are board members of the Psychic Institute in Connecticut have worked on over 3,000 cases in their 29 years of experience. They became involved in the study of demonology through their work as professional artists interested in painting haunted houses.

MassPIRG opposes utilities rate hike

By DONALD J. PARSONS
Staff Correspondent

Massachusetts consumers are being socked under by electricity rates and yet Massachusetts utilities are planning additional rate increases in the near future. Of the many possible alternatives, MassPIRG's preliminary research indicates that a system of public power in Massachusetts may be a workable solution.

Consumers for Lower Electric Rates has drafted an initiative petition outlining the scope of a Massachusetts Public Power Authority, and is in the process of collecting consumer signatures in support of such an Authority. Mass PIRG students are involved in collecting the 56,038 certified signatures required by December 5 which will force the Massachusetts Legislature to consider the merits of the petition.

It has been estimated that "a Massachusetts Public Power Authority could save Massachusetts consumers more than 200 million dollars per year." Here is how:

a) To finance new power plants. Private utilities cover 50 per cent of their costs with bond sales paying 12 per cent interest. Public utilities cover 100 per cent of their costs with bond sales paying 6-10 per cent interest.

b) Private utilities cover the other 50 per cent of new power plant costs by selling private stocks paying a 15 per cent yearly dividend. Public utilities do not sell stocks, and do not pay dividends.

c) Private utilities must absorb the payment of federal income taxes; public utilities are tax exempt and so need not pay these taxes.

The Massachusetts Public Power Authority would be a state agency vested with absolute control over the construction and operation of any new power plants in the Commonwealth. In addition to the Public Power Authority model, MassPIRG is presently studying a variety of additional alternatives to the present system of electricity production.

This week students are collecting signatures for the Public Power initiative petition at tables on the Campus Center Concourse. If you have not yet signed and wish to do so, you must visit the table either today or tomorrow. If you would like to help petition over the weekend or would just like more information, contact MassPIRG at 545-2531.

Faculty disputes journalistic studies faculty through "unauthorized recruitment and hiring policies."

A meeting of journalism students Nov. 18, sponsored by the student senate academic affairs committee, was termed inconclusive by Politella.

A vote of 18 to 11 at that meeting voiced student support for the English-only journalism program.

"The fact that only 29 of the 250 journalism students took the trouble to appear says something to all of us," Politella said.

In a third viewpoint, Musgrave urged course offerings in the area of journalism research and theory. He said "how-to-do-it" training should be an extra-curricular activity.

The tight job market for journalists was cited by Musgrave as reason to shy from vocational training courses. Politella said journalists with a specialty, such as political science, stand a better chance of getting a job.

"But a journalist most needs an education that teaches him or her to read, write and think" according to Ziff. He said that type of background is best obtained from English courses.

The undergraduate studies commitee expects to make a formal recommendation to the department faculty by the end of November. A faculty meeting may take up the journalism question during December.

$170 tax for on, off-campus students

Whitmore supports blanket dorm fee

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

Remarks by Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage yesterday to a reporter and remarks from other administrators now suggest that Whitmore is advocating the imposition of a "universal residence fee" to all 23,000 UMass students — whether they live in a dorm or not.

The fee would provide the campus with a way to pay the estimated $7.2 million it costs yearly to make mortgage payments the some 40 dorms yet allow dormitory rents to stay low enough to be competitive with private housing.

But such a universal fee applied to all students — probably amounting to about $170 a year — is likely to meet with objections from married students, young faculty and off-campus students who will have to pay it. They will in effect be subsidizing students who choose to live in the some 11,000 dormitory spaces on campus.

In an interview yesterday with a Daily Hampshire Gazette reporter, Vice-Chancellor Gage said:

"The University is going to do nothing to change the residency requirements until we are certain we have a system that will insure full occupancy of the residence halls on a voluntary basis," Gage said.

news analysis

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery last week told two reporters after a press conference that it was his aim to try to make the dorms voluntary by September 1975 if legal problems could be overcome.

The University administration is faced with a possible court suit from six students currently represented by Legal Services Office Atty. William M. Dorsch. Dorsch sent a letter to University counsel William Searson last week saying that the mandatory dormitory residence rule for students under 21 is unconstitutional.

Gage told the Gazette reporter that the University is considering reducing room rates as a means of encouraging students to stay in dormitories rather than live off campus. Gage also said that spreading the cost of dorms among all students is under consideration.

In his press conference last week, Bromery talked about the possibility of a "universal residence fee" to spread the cost of living "so that it doesn't just impact on those that have to live in dorms."

Bromery said in the conference that asking for a special appropriate from the legislature to pay dorm mortgages would be "foolish," adding, "you would never get it."

After the press conference, Bromery suggested the $170 residence fee figure, but said it might be lower if the cost of funding the Campus Center were excluded.

The universal residence fee would have one obvious advantage to the UMass administration — it would eliminate the possibility of a court suit claiming the present mandatory rule is unconstitutional.

Opponents of mandatory dormitory residence for undergraduates claim that the Massachusetts 18-year-old age of majority also makes it inappropriate to tell 18-year-olds where to live, since they are considered adults in other respects by law.

Aside from any possible criticism that spreading the costs of the dorms over 23,000 students instead of the 11,000 that live in them, the universal fee would probably be held in court.

In addition, there are other precedents on campus. Students pay a fee for athletics, fine arts, the Campus Center and student activities like The Collegian — even though they may not use or read them.

The administration, in suggesting the universal dormitories fee may suggest that it is only an extension of the same principle used in the other fees.

And a rejection by the campus of such a scheme would naturally raise speculation about the adequacy of the other general fees presently in use.

Theater Guild has openings on staff

The UMass Music Theatre Guild is now soliciting applications for production staff positions for its Spring show to be presented the first weekend in April in Bowker Auditorium.

Carolyn Schade, President, told the Collegian about 30 shows have been nominated and are being considered for the Spring production. The show to be performed will be selected the week after Thanksgiving.

Schade said the Guild is now soliciting applications for the eleven production staff positions from anyone in the university community.

These are: Producer, Director, Music Director, Choreographer, Technical Director, Set Designer, Costume Designer, Lighting Designer, Stage Manager, Master Carpenter, and Master Electrician.

Schade said all of these positions will be unsalaried since Music Theatre Guild is short of funds.

Schade said, with the exception of the Producer's position, applications will be accepted through 3 p.m. Wednesday, November 27th. Applications for Producer will be accepted through 3 p.m. this Friday, November 22.

Schade said they need to select a Producer directly after the Thanksgiving recess, with interviews being held the three days prior to the recess. Interviews for the other positions will be held after Thanksgiving.

Student fined $250 in false fire alarm incident

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

A UMass student was fined $250.00 in Hampshire District Court Wednesday for setting-off a false alarm, according to UMass Police.

Weston F. Lant allegedly set-off the alarm in Cashin Dormitory.

Captain Robert Joyce stressed the serious nature of this act, saying future culprits may incur jail sentences rather than a fine.

Further security problems included a theft from Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest, and an explosion in Goessman Laboratory, Tuesday night, police said.

A teletype coupler valued at $340.00 was stolen from the dining commons. Police say there are no suspects. The case is under further investigation.

An explosion in Goessman Laboratory resulted in heavy smoke and toxic fumes, said Joyce. The Amherst Fire Department used oxygen packs to extinguish the fire, the cause of which is unknown, said police.

Credit Union collects $8,000 in pledges

The Credit Union Coalition announced that it collected more than $8000 in pledges during its first day of signing up potential members. The Coalition, which is sponsored by the economic development collective of the Student Organizing Project, started signing up individuals interested in joining on Tuesday and will continue its sign-up drive through today. The sign-up table is located in the Campus Center concourse.

"I was expecting support," said Peter Birnbaum, Coalition president, "but frankly this was even better than I expected. It just goes to show that students have a real interest in things that can directly benefit them."

According to John Fisher, economic development co-ordinator for the Organizing Project, "the credit union is just one of the ways that students can take steps to gain real control over their lives. We are delighted with response that students have shown.

Fisher added "a great deal of the response we got was due to the Collegian article."

Collegian to experiment with new formal

By BILL DENSMORE
Managing Editor

The Collegian — as regular readers know it — will not be published tomorrow. Well sort of.

There will be a Collegian tomorrow but it won't look like the paper you're reading today. As part of an experiment in layout and production, the newspaper will adopt the full-sized format of a regular newspaper.

Instead of a page 10 inches wide and 16 inches tall, The Collegian — for one day — will have pages 14" wide and 19" tall. The change will allow for innovative layout and better display of the annual Fall-Winter Sports special pull-out section.

Because of an especially large edition, The Collegian may not be available on campus until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

In any case, don't plan on reading the paper in class — it will be too wide!

Corrections to yesterday's issue

In a reference to the saying of Mass in a Wednesday story about the Newman Center, Father J. Joseph Quigley was incorrectly quoted.

Quigley said that laymen have taken a more active part in Newman Center Masses, but have not said Mass.

"It is a fundamental tenet of Catholic belief that only ordained priests can say Mass," Quigley said yesterday. The original story appeared on page six.

An article in yesterday's Collegian stated that "approvals of the student's advisor and academic Dean of the College (Provost at the University) are required." In actuality, the Provost's Office is not involved at all. Rather the student should get a signature from the Five College Advisor at the Casiac Office in Machmer Hall.

The Collegian reported yesterday that Dr. Gideon Ariel of Exercise Science was named as a defendant in the Court suit brought by Elizabeth Ebacher against members of the Whitmore administration. The affirmative action policy concerning Dr. Ariel's appointment is being challenged by Ebacher. Dr. Ariel is not a defendant in the Ebacher suit.

U.S., Japan pledge cooperation in economic and energy matters

Compiled from Wires

TOKYO — The United States and Japan pledged themselves to "a new era of creativity and common purpose" yesterday to forestall a world economic crisis and insure rational use of world resources.

A joint communique issued after President Ford wound up talks with Japanese government leaders said the two countries would seek cooperation among oil-consuming nations to meet energy needs while maintaining harmonious relations with oil-exporting countries.

But as Ford prepared to leave for South Korea on the second leg of his Far Eastern visit, indications grew that his cohost, Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, would be forced from office by scandal.

There were reports that Tanaka has already decided to resign as soon as Ford leaves. His opponents have suspended their calls for his resignation during the state visit, but are all but certain to renew them when it it over.

The communique promised the two countries would work together on energy needs and food supplies. "Both countries agree that further international cooperative efforts are necessary to forestall an economic and financial crisis," it said.

Ford went on national television, meanwhile, to recite what is fast becoming his slogan: "I would rather walk a thousand miles for peace than take a single step toward war."

The President assured the Japanese that the United States would not take them for granted.

"We will continue to be suppliers of the goods you need," he said. "If shortages occur, we will take special account of the needs of our traditional trading partners."

But the communique said "both countries will remain committed to their international pledges to avoid actions which adversely affect the economies of other nations."

House overrides veto of information bill

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House yesterday handed President Ford his most serious legislative defeat yet, voting by wide margins to override his veto of two major bills.

The House voted 371 to 31 to override the veto of the Freedom of Information bill — 103 votes more than the two-thirds needed — and 398 to 7 to override Ford's rejection of a vocational rehabilitation bill, 128 votes more than needed.

The Senate must still vote by a two-thirds margin on the information and rehabilitation vetoes before the override is final.

Ford had conceded that his veto of the information bill might be overridden, since the veto message came to the Congress only an hour before the month-long Oct. 17 election recess started.

He claimed however, that his veto of five other measures including the rehabilitation bill, which came during the recess, constituted "pocket vetoes" and are not subject to override. Yesterday's vote in effect challenged Ford's stand and paved the way for an expected court test.

The information bill would authorize federal judges, if they choose, to determine the authenticity of a government agency's claim of national security interest in denying a request for documents.

Ford claimed the provision would endanger national military and intelligence secrets and affect diplomatic relations. News organizations backing the measure said there was adequate protection against such disclosure and the bill was needed to plug loopholes in the 1966 Freedom of Information Act which some agencies are using to suppress information.

Tape indicates Nixon involved in coverup

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a conversation taped in 1973 and replayed in court yesterday Richard M. Nixon said the crumbling Watergate cover-up "involves, us, the highest...the king of the mountain."

That same day, the president had pledged in a press statement to condemn any attempt to cover up Watergate, and he later commented in another tape replayed yesterday "Well, we got in deep."

The prosecution at the Watergate cover-up trial introduced into evidence the tapes of nine conversations Nixon had with his confidantes between April 14 and 17, 1973. The tapes played showed that both of these remarks had been removed from the transcripts released by the Nixon White House last April.

In the April 14 conversations, defendant John D. Ehrlichman reported he had been unsuccessful in attempts, made at Nixon's order, to get John N. Mitchell to take the blame for Watergate. Ehrlichman said at one point Mitchell had begun "lobbing mud-balls at the White House" in return and, in a subsequent phone conversation near midnight that day, Nixon said to Ehrlichman:

"...What in the name of Christ is this all about. Well, what it involves, of course, we have to be fair, it involves, uh, the highest...the kind of the mountain."

"Yeah," Ehrlichman replied. Mitchell, Haldeman, Ehrlichman, former assistant attorney general Robert C. Mardian and campaign lawyer Kenneth W. Parkinson were in the 37th day of third trial for alleged conspiracy to conceal top level involvement in Watergate.

Common Cause says new House more likely to favor reforms

WASHINGTON (AP) — A survey of the newly elected House shows a big majority in favor of key reforms, including a move to strip Ways and Means Commitee Chairman Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., of control over committee assignments.

The survey, conducted by the citizens' group Common Cause, contacted every congressional candidate in the country during the recent election campaigns and got responses from 344 of the 435 members elected to the House for the 94th Congress.

Among the Democrats surveyed, 146 said they favored transferring the responsibility for committee assignments from Mills' ways and means group to the Democratic Steering and Policy Committee.

Only 33 indicated they would vote against such a switch when the Democratic caucus meets Dec. 2 to organize the new House. Another 27 were undecided.

In a statement accompanying release of the survey, Common Cause chairman John Gardner also criticized the congressional leadership for failing to lead.

David Cohen, chief lobbyist for Common Cause, named Mills as one of the chief offenders and suggested Mills might be one of the principal targets for removal from a chairmanship because of it.

"Wilbur Mills has defied the caucus in the same way that Adam Clayton Powell did," Cohen said. "And Powell was stripped of his chairmanship in the next Congress."

Cohen and Gardner specifically criticized Mills for refusing to take to the Rules Committee for referral to the floor an energy tax measure approved by his own committee.

Powell, the late Education Committee chairman, once refused to take a measure approved by his committee to the rules group and was disciplined by his fellow Democrats.

The survey found 184 House Democrats in favor of opening conference committee meetings when bills receive their final drafting before passage. Only 19 said they were opposed to this, and 12 were undecided.

Tax rise uncertain

BOSTON (AP) — A hostile reception is likely in the Massachusetts legislature if Gov.-elect Michael S. Dukakis finds it necessary to file a tax bill after taking office next year.

Secretary of Administration designate James R. Buckley has reported that the state is running a $316 million deficit. And although Buckley said money saving measures will be implemented to help avoid a tax hike, the chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Commiteee said the knife will have to be applied to programs in welfare and education to avert new taxes.

Trade bill advances

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Finance Committee sent to the floor by unanimous vote yesterday a broad trade bill giving President Ford unprecedented authority to negotiate reductions in trade barriers and give Russia more favorable trade treatment.

The bill would extend to Moscow the same terms enjoyed by America's other foreign trading partners.

But Finance Committee Chairman Russell B. Long, D-La., told a news conference prospects were not good for Congress to pass the Trade Reform Act of 1974 before completing its 93rd session and adjourning for Christmas

UMW stalls contract

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United Mine Workers bargaining council, in a move certain to extend the nine-day-old coal strike into December, yesterday instructed union negotiators to seek minor adjustments in the new contract agreement.

The council took the action after resuming deliberations broken off Friday because the death of one of its members. The 39-member group, comprising district union leaders, must approve the language of the pact before it can be presented to the 120,000 striking members for ratification.

"We are confident that the package we finally approve will be a contract that our membership will ratify and accept," the bargaining council said in a statement.

King vote today

BOSTON (AP) — The vice-chairman of the board of the Massachusetts Port Authority says today's vote on the ouster of Massport Director Edward J. King "could be bloody."

"We're building up to a terrible confrontation that could destroy the Massachusetts Port Authority," Anthony P. DeFalco said yesterday.

He conceded that board chairman James J. Fay appears to have the necessary four votes on the seven-member panel to carry a motion to dismiss King, who is the highest-paid official in state government, with a salary of $59,500 a year.

'Children's hour' to open tonight

The University Theater opens its second production of the season, Pulitzer Prize winner Lillian Hellman's The Children's Hour, tonight in the South College Studio Theater.

Set in a boarding school for young women, the Children's Hour is a drama about two school teachers falsely accused by one of their students of harboring abnormal feelings for one another. Once born, the web-work of deceit and innuendo builds and grows, demanding sustenance, demanding life, dying only by the hand of one of those it has entangled.

Heading a cast of thirteen are Lyn Nichols and Kathy Foley as the two school teachers and Alice Sudsbury as Mary, the student who iniates the lie. Nichols, the wife of Children's Hour director, Jeff Nichols, is a University of Maine graduate where her acting credits include feature roles in such productions as Under Milkwood and Twelfth Night.

Foley is a second year graduate student in the University Theater acting program and head of a student Commedia Della Arte troupe.

Sudsbury, a Holyoke native and a transfer student from Holyoke Community College, is a senior theater major at the University.

The Children's Hour runs through Saturday. Admission is $1.00 at the door. The theater box office opens at 6:00 p.m. Curtain for all three performances is 8:00.

Eye bank gives forms

A table will be set up in the Campus Center concourse today and tomorrow to distribute eye donor forms and to accept monetary contributions for the New England Eye Bank. The table is being sponsored by the pledges of Gamma Sigma Sigma and Sigma Kappa.

The New England Eye Bank was established in 1946 to provide facilities for the collection, preservation and laboratory analysis of eye tissue, to be used in the research of various ocular diseases and in the corneal transplant operation.

A corneal transplant can only help that type of blindness caused by disease or injury to the cornea; the whole eye can't be transplanted successfully. Surgeons estimate that thousands of needlessly blind persons (about 1 in 25) could be helped to regain their sight through this operation. Some facts about the eye bank.

Anyone can donate their eyes to the eye bank.

There is no disfigurement after removal of donated eyes.

Wearing of glasses, most previous eye surgery or diseases of the eye have little effect on eye donations.

If an eye is found unsuitable for transplant it is used in research: however no eye is used for research if it is suitable for transplant.

The cost of preparation and transportation of eye tissue for transplant is $40, but there is no charge to patients for the tissue.

The eye bank is able to maintain its services only through individual contributions.

IRS offers tax workshop today

Progressive News Service -- The second annual Federal Tax Workshop will be offered here today and tomorrow for tax practitioners, public and private.

Topics of the four workshops will be: problems encountered in the audit of tax returns, technical changes and new tax developments, recent developments in estate and gift taxation, and the new pension and profit-sharing provisions.

Guest speaker at today's luncheon will be John E. Foristall, director of Internal Revenue Service, Boston District, whose topic will be "Tax Administration and the Practitioner."

Tomorrow's luncheon speaker will be Wayne Hollingsworth, assistant U.S. attorney in Boston, whose topic will be "Tax Fraud and Persecution."

Concepto Latino'airs Thursdays

On every Thursday night, at 11:00 p.m., the third world people's program "Ujumadrum" develops into "Concepto Latino". Through the waves of WMUA, Charlie Mann and Garry Nunez will be taking their audience through the world as the Latin Sounds and Rhythm.

"Concepto Lation" tries to give it's audience a broader view of latin music, as a part of the wide and rich Latin Cultures, according to Nunez. Featuring such great artist and performers as TITO PUENTE, TITO RODRIGUEZ, RAY BARRETO, and SERGIO MENDEZ, this program will take the road that will lead us to the discussion of the manifestation of some of the past and pesent realities of the latin countries and the latin people throughout the world.

In this respect and not only concerned with the tradtional sounds of Latin American Music and it's development "CONCEPTO LATINO", will deal with what is known as "NUEVA CANCION".

"NUEVA CANCION" or the "NEW SONG", adds a new dimension to the latin music by using it as another way to express not only the concerns of man, but to reinforce the positive and real finalities of man as a being, the creation of a new society where conditions will allow every man the development of his spirit.

Defendant acquitted in Knee trial

LINCOLN - Today a jury of 12 persons from the Lincoln, Nebraska area found Stanley Neptune not guilty of assaulting a federal officer in connection with the 1973 liberation of Wounded Knee. This is the first Wounded Knee case to be decided by a jury.

Neptune was stopped on March 12, 1973, at federal Roadblock 1 as he was on his way back into Wounded Knee, having exited an hour earlier. His car was searched, and an ornamental knife was found. FBI agents dragged Neptune, his wife and child, from the car.

During the ensuing scuffle, the car rolled forward over the toe of the boot of Special Agent W. Edward Humphrey. This was the alleged assault, although Humphrey himself testified he though Neptune was arrested for possession of the knife.

Convicted defendant released

YANKTON, South Dakota - Sarah Bad Heart Bull, convicted Custer defendant, was released on parole November 15 from the South Dakota women's prison here. Since the day following the verdict handed down on June 20, Sarah had been held with no bond pending appeal of her case.

She was found guilty of riot where arson was committed in connection with an American Indian Movement - led protest in Custer, South Dakota, on February 6, 1973. Two hundred Indian people went to Custer to demand justice be done in the murder of Sarah's son, Wesley Bad Heart Bull. A Custer businessman had been charged with second degree manslaughter even though eyewitnesses were willing to testify it was premeditated murder.

Killing a fetus is murder

To the Editor:

Killing a necessity? I'm Jewish, not Catholic, and far more anti-bourgeois than most other supposed Socialists I know. I also attempt to be consistent and recognize Life as Life and Humans as Humans wherever and whenever they exist, and not just when it suits my particular economic and-or junior philisophical ramblings.

To be sure it's only a belief that a fetus is human. But to just include fetuses in your epistemological ejaculations is incomplete. That anything is human as a belief is more complete. Are Jews Human? Nazi doctors, medical people who should know, would say "of course not, a Jew, Human? Absurd." Are Blacks Human? A White racist Southerner might say, "what, a nigger human? Absurd." And you have your Pro-Abortionists saying "What, that lump of flesh human? Absurd."

Of the set of all things known are certain ones labeled Life. Certain subsets of life are called animals. What separates one animal from another? Far and away the primary determinant is the genetic pattern. There are other criteria, but the separating factors in those arise from the genetic pattern, not vice-versa. So we have class, genus, etc. down to species. What separates humans from non-humans?

There are certain clubs which exist. One club, the favorite organ club, likes the brain. There's the independence club, claiming humanness is a question of some nebulous, philosophical, independence. Various racial clubs exist. There are the religious clubs, the Catholics being fortunately right chronologically but, unfortunately, for the wrong reasons, the "soul" being the sole determining factor.

Drawing a case for genetic patterning could seem similar, if it weren't for several things. All the above, except religious, arise from the genetic pattern. They are all, ex. religious, subsets of all the developments of a genetic set-up. Maybe a fertilized egg is "just" a potential human, but once you allow one particular point in it's development be the determining factor, you have no right to deny all the clubs their reasoning, and the results of that are apparent.

Either you protect all humans under laws [enforcing takes education] or you have no laws at all. Preferential treatment gave rise to Nazi Germany and white racism.

Richard Berman

Rally today!

To the Editor:

We've been hearing a lot about forced dorm living this semester. The Student Organizing Project has been approaching the administration, has held public hearings, and has been very effective in publicizing the issue. We feel that this is important, but that further action must be taken.

The Administration has said that it hopes to lift the rules forcing on campus living by September 1975, but that it is not sure of some of the legal issues. We feel that this is a classic example of the Administration mouthing rhetoric to divert student concern. Chancellor Bromery himself said that the issue is, "...not legal but economic", and yet he still tries to push students into legal thinking.

The dorms were financed by the selling of bonds to large financial institutions such as Chase Manhattan Bank. Now UMass students are forced to live in them, not because they are the best for the students, but because those institutions must make a profit. We don't feel anyone should be forced to live in a dormitory, or eat the Dining Commons food, so that David and Nelson Rockefeller, [David is Chairman of the Board of Chase Manhattan, and we all know Nelson, nominated now for Vice-President, and the one who ordered the police to invade Attica prison and massacre over 40 prisoners and guards], can live in comfort. The issue then, is economic, and also political.

In terms of who is affected most by this policy, it is clear that working class and therefore Third World students, who have the least money are hurt most by their inability to search out more economical alternatives. Furthermore, the less decision making power students have concerning their lives, the more susceptible they are to the reactionary and destructive cultural influences of the administration. Institutional racism is an important example of this which must be struggled against.

We have called a Rally for 2:30 on Thursday to show the Administration that we mean business, that we will not be fooled by false or ambiguous declarations of intent. The Administration is counting on the apathy of students. They will push students down as long as students will allow it. We say no longer!

List of Demands

1] Abolition of forced dorm living.
2] Abolition of forced meal tickets.
3] Student control over dormitories.
4] University support for rent control.

Everybody is urged to participate! Meet at 2:30 on Thursday the 21st between the library and the pond. Then we'll march to Whitmore. Hope to see you there!

Something you can do to fight starvation

To the Editor:

There is a vote on a request of the U.S. Delegation to double the food aid from the U.S. The countries currently receiving our aid are not those most in need but rather countries where the U.S. has political and economic interest.

We, as two concerned students representing a large group in the Global Survival Freshman Year Program, feel that the food is needed in other countries now. Other food producing countries have already agreed to double their aid. If the U.S. doesn't, other food producing countries may say, "The U.S. has such wealth and won't double their aid. Why should we?" Thus, this vote is very important. It is a major step in global concern. The New York Times said that within the next eight months as many as half a billion people may starve, in the absence of sufficient aid. Everyone can help. One proposal is to urge Washington to double U.S. assistance. A telegram can be sent to President Ford by calling Western Union toll free at 1-800-257-2221. A sample telegram: "Save millions from starvation. Double U.S. assistance. Accept World Food Council delegation request now."

Teach-in worked, no thanks to School of Ed.

To the Editor:

The racist violence that has surfaced as a result of busing in Boston seems to be an issue of major concern to the students of this campus while the SCHOOL OF EDUCATION in particular - and the University itself maintain their stance of social irresponsibility. I am referring to the lack of both moral and financial support that was received by the Task Force on Busing, a group of concerned students determined to provide some type of educational forum around the crisis of the Boston schools. The teach-in that took place on Tuesday evening, November 19, happened because of the following student and administrative organizations, and we are grateful to them: Provosts Office, Commuter Assembly, Southwest Womens Center, Center for Racial Understanding, Southwest assembly, Northeast Area, Central Area, Drum, and Individual Contributions.

The implications of this support are that students on this campus accept the responsibility to deal with racism, both on this campus and in the schools that many of us are trained to teach in. Perhaps the University will learn from this definition of responsibility, and act in a way supportive of progressive attitudes. Perhaps....

In protest against Arafat

To the Editor:

We, the undersigned concerned people, deplore the recognition given to Yassir Arafat, head of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, by the United Nations. This endorsement given to a guerrilla organization whose stated purpose is the dissolution of the sovereign state of Israel, can only further the new immorality of diplomacy by terror. Tactics of bloodshed, blackmail, and political expediency can hardly lead to constructive negotiations, but rather to a further deterioration of an already unstable situation which could plunge the people of the Middle East and perhaps the whole world, into a bloody war.

Israel can hardly be expected to negotiate its own destruction. The Jewish people are as entitled to live and express themselves within their own sovereign state as any other people in the world. Any "solution" which compromises this right is unacceptable to the Jewish people and people of conscience throughout the world.

Revolutionary Brigade — a vital ally in the rights fight

By DEAN TUCKER

Last night the Student Government Association voted 28 to 24 not to support the Student Revolutionary Brigade's planned rally. The rally will be held at 2:30 between the library and pond.

It would appear that the SGA contradicted itself by refusing to support the SRB because the demands that both groups are making to the Administration are the same. Either of them support abolition of mandatory dorm living and mandatory meal tickets, and both support student control of dorms and the University's support of rent control.

So what gives? Each group wants the same thing, but one will not support the other. The situation shows precisely why things don't ever get done at UMass.

The SGA is an overstuffed, over committed, pompous lot of ineffectual crap artists whose credibility is about at the level of a pork salesman in Israel. Talk and talk and more talk by a group of uninformed people has reduced their productivity level and viability to near zero.

One senator, a senior who was a sophomore senator and stayed away her junior year said the Senate is still talking about the same things it was when she was first elected. That is all very obvious. Despite the large responsibility of doling out the nearly million dollars in the Student Activity Tax Fund, the group is generally ignored and ridiculed. If any group on campus needs examination and reorganization it is the organizers themselves.

The Student Revolutionary Brigade is new at UMass. There are approximately eight people working together now. Their status is organizational. Yesterday a spokesman said the groups stand was anti-imperialistic.

The flyer the SRB is distributing to hype the rally placed some of the blame for the poor plight of UMass students on Nelson and David Rockefeller. The SRB is going to hit the world's problems broadside, and will probably get knocked flat from the impact.

But still the Student Government Association and the Student Revolutionary Brigade have identical goals on the campus but can't get together.

A third and vital factor in the battle for student's rights is Chancellor Bromery. Rick Savini, SGA President and Dr. Bromery have worked together on the right's fight. Much of the work was done behind closed doors, but the end result was Bromery's recent statement that dormitory living will not be mandatory by September 1975. Bromery has also publicly agreed that no one has the right to tell eighteen year olds where to live when the law clearly states that they are among the majority in the state.

There are three factors working for the same thing and they can't get it all together. The SGA and Bromery choose to take the diplomats path to student's rights. The SRB is ready for action, a show of force by marching to Whitmore today. There is action coming from Whitmore already, from the highest of the bureaucrats too, but the SRB does not trust Bromery's promise. Their leaflet says that his statements are more handsitting and rhetoric. The SRB's plea at last night's meeting for SGA support was a poor showing because they did not realize the amount of diplomacy used in the fight to this point. They are a small new group of unknowns asking for support from the SGA who is protective of their progress to this point. Bromery, in keeping with the level of diplomacy does not want the SRB to destroy the work done so far with a violent display of demands.

So paranoia sets in. The SGA and Chancellor Bromery want to accomplish the job temperately. The Revolutionary Brigade wants to show that students mean business. A victory team is in the making. Bromery is the big gun, but to pull the trigger he needs vigorous support from the students. The recent town meeting showed that support.

But that is not enough. It took Resurrection City, The March on Washington and Freedom Rides to show the country that Blacks were taking no more hollow promises. It took massive rallies to get American soldiers out of Vietnam. It takes attention getting displays to get things done in America and Bromery and the SGA must recognize this soon. The SRB should be recognized and utilized in the right's fight.

Peace in the Middle East

By ED COHEN

The question of the Palestinian people, as debated by Yasser Arafat, spokesperson of the Palestine Liberation Organization, and Yosef Tekoah, an Israeli delegate, held at the United Nations last week, is a question which will eventually be resolved, whether through peaceful diplomacy or violent confrontation.

The whole controversy concerning the people of Palestine first arose with the birth of Zionism. This concept was initiated by Theodore Herzl, a Viennese journalist who, in 1896, published a book titled, "The Jewish State". This manifesto declared that a Jewish state should be created in order to gather together the Jewish population of the world, giving Palestine as a possible place of settlement. At this time, Herzl was either unaware, or ignored the fact that an indigenous population consisting mostly of Palestinian Arabs resided there. The Jewish population grew until it finally reached 85,000 on the eve of World War I. By the time the war had ended, the Jewish population consisted of 60,000 people. The Ottoman Empire was carved up between the great powers, and Britain came to preside over what was Palestine. According to the Balfour Declaration, which eventually became incorporated into the British Mandate over Palestine, a national home for the Jewish people would be founded in Palestine, provided that it would not harm the rights of the indigenous non-Jewish people and would protect the rights of Jewish people elsewhere in the world. It infuriated the Palestinian Arabs, who constituted 90 per cent of the population of Palestine, because they had no say in the matter. Herzl's successor, Chaim Weizmann, followed the Zionist philosophy by stating that "Palestine is to become as Jewish as England is English." The Jewish population continued to grow, and as it did, Arab objection grew proportionately.

During the '30's, the Jewish population of Europe felt the need to escape Nazi genocide, and the fifth Aliya (wave of immigration) started in Palestine. In 1939, a British document called the "White Paper" gave the reigns of government and subsequent immigration procedure to joint control by British, Zionist, and Arab leaders, and threatened to strangle Jewish immigration. Zionist terrorism became a reality during this period, as the Stern Gang, and Irgun Zvai Leumi began to combat British imperialism. Arab resistance existed, but was weakened in the period from '36 to '39, when the British sought to destroy Arab nationalism. During the war years, violence was committed by both Zionist and Arab forces, as each sought to resist the other.

Finally, as the war ended the guerilla warfare which dramatically escalated when the world learned the extent of genocidal policies of the Axis powers caused Britain to give the problem of Palestine to the United Nations. According to Don Peretz's book "The Middle East Today" a partition plan was adopted as follows:

Palestine was divided into three Arab and three Jewish areas, forming an Arab and a Jewish state, while Jerusalem and its environs were set up as an international zone. The proposal placed a Jewish minority of 1.5 percent of the total population in the Arab state, and an Arab minority totaling 45 per cent of the population in the Jewish state. Equal numbers of Jews and Arabs were to populate the international zone of Jerusalem. Because of their economic interdependence, however, the seven parts were to be linked in an economic union."

As the British left, Zionist leaders proclaimed the state of Israel, and war was declared as the armies of Lebanon, Syria, Egypt, Jordan, and Iraq crossed the frontiers to battle the Israelis for control of what was once part of Palestine. The war ended in 1949, with over 750,000 Palestinians now refugees and the size of the original Jewish territory increased by one third. From this time, and up until the '67 war, immigration continued, but now was characterized by 'Oriental Jews', Jewish people from Africa and Asia, whose identities and cultural values were not able to become as accepted into the Israeli society as those of European Jews were before and during this period.

The '67 war tremendously increased territory under Israeli control and the number of Arab refugees. Israel now expanded and the country now contained all the land that Britain held prior to the 1948 war, the Golan Heights of Syria, Egyptian Sinai, and the Egyptian administered territory of the Gaza Strip.

Since the 1967 war, the place of Israel in world politics is becoming clear. The Zionist policy which now pervades the Israeli establishment has driven Israel more deeply into the role of colonial settler state, which is subsidized by the Western powers, and oppresses indigenous people. The Palestinian people who remained in the state of Israel after partition are treated as second class citizens. Arabs in Israel must carry identification at all times, and can expect continual harassment and humiliating treatment. The 'Oriental' Jewish population still has not received full social and economic equality in Israeli society. The number of 'Oriental' Jewish people in the Knesset, the governing body of Israel, if taken in proportion to the 'Oriental' population is far less than what it should be.

As the state of Israel expanded, it needed also to expand its labor forces, and it did so using workers from the occupied territory for most of the manual labor. In 1968, the number of imported Arab workers working legally in Israel was fifty-eight hundred, but by 1973, the figure had jumped to 70,000 and continues to grow. These people are paid at substantially lower rates than recognized Israeli citizens would be paid. Palestinian people both within Israel proper and the occupied territories suffer cultural, social, and economic deprivations.

It is these factors among others which caused the emergence of the Palestine Liberation Organization and the various Palestinian movements. These groups have succeeded in keeping the Palestinian people visible and the Palestinian question alive, and are now recognized, the PLO in particular, as representing the Palestinian people.

Since 1948, and especially since 1967, death and destruction have cast a depressing shroud over the Middle East area. Israeli athletes were killed at the Munich Olympic Games, The Arab world's beloved poet, Kamal Nasser, was assassinated by Israeli commandos, liberation forces have made raids on border settlements, and the Israeli government has bombed and napalmed refugee camps in Syria and Lebanon where PLO commandos are suspected to reside.

The Palestine Liberation Organization, along with a few sympathetic non-Zionist Jewish leaders oppose the Zionist government which has effectively cast Israel into the role of colonial-settler state. Yasser Arafat's visit brings the liberation of the Palestinian people into an equal role with liberation movements throughout the world. The Palestinian people stand beside the Black African populations of South Africa, Zimbabwe, Namibia, the people of Puerto Rico, South Vietnam, South Korea, Chile, and many other areas of the world where indigenous peoples are exploited for purely economic interests.

The options that the Palestinians have are either acceptance of a second class existence, or achievement and restoration of all human rights. The state of Israel has variations on three possible futures. It can maintain its present unequal and racist system of government and continue to instigate continual violence. Its Zionist led Jewish population can leave Israel and assimilate into other countries, or it can deal with the basis of its inequality. There is no need for Jews and Palestinians to battle. Palestinian leaders and several non-Zionist Israeli leaders have argued that both the Jewish and Palestinian people are Semites, and violence between Jewish and Palestinian people is like brother killing brother and sister killing sister. Israel should form a union with the people of neighboring Semitic countries, and each should help the other to advance against exploitation. Such a realization is only possible if the ideology of Zionism is discarded, and an understanding reached between the people of the middle-east area.

It will be a major task for the Palestinian people to forget the atrocities committed against them, but as the Jewish remnants sought to fought their memories of destruction, so hopefully will the Palestinians. The Israelis, Palestinians, and the rest of the Arab world must try to overlook past animosities and work towards a future of peace in the middle east.

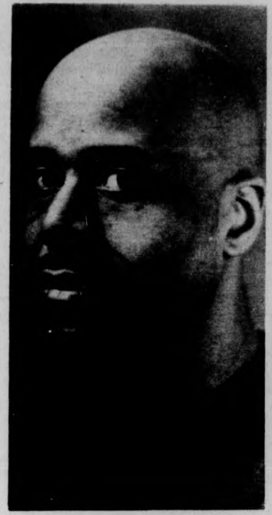
Sostre attacked by Clinton prison guard

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

This article was made possible to the Black News Service by the Liberation News Service.



MARTIN SOSTRE

After spending over 16 months in solitary confinement, Martin Sostre was beaten for the sixth time this year when he refused to submit to a rectal examination before going to court, where he was charged with second-degree assault of three guards.

These charges stem from last May, when three guards beat Sostre for refusing to comply with the degrading search. However, it is Sostre who is now scheduled to go on trial next February for allegedly attacking the guards. If indicated, he faces the maximum penalty — life imprisonment.

When Sostre appeared in court, it was evident that he had received severe blows on his head and neck, and he was scarcely able to speak. However, when he protested the beatings, the judge refused to listen.

His lawyer, Dennis Cunningham, who had flown to Plattsburgh to appear with Sostre, was denied permission to speak with Sostre in court as well as the next day when he went to visit his client at Clinton Prison.

Sostre was convicted in 1967 of the sale and possession of narcotics, inciting a riot, resisting arrest, and arson — all fabricated charges stemming from the riot in Buffalo's Black ghetto that summer. He was sentenced to 30-41 years in jail.

However, in 1971 the prosecution witness, a drug addict named Arto Williams, admitted in an affidavit that he had cooperated with the police to frame Sostre in return for receiving probation. He recanted his confession when he learned that under New York State law he would not be granted immunity from perjury charges if he admitted having lied under oath.

Sostre's March 10,'74 appeal for a new trial based on Williams confession was denied and he is currently working on another appeal.

In his seven years in prison, Sostre has been extremely active as a jailhouse lawyer and in attempts to form a union of prison workers. This has made him the target of prison officials, and also made any prisoners who supported him targets of harassment.

James Sullivan has been severely harassed by prison authorities for over a year because of his support for Sostre. In May 1973, just 21 days from parole, he wrote and signed an official affidavit stating that he had overheard guards plotting against Sostre and then had witnessed them beating him.

Last September, Sullivan's apartment was fire-bombed. He has received threats on his life and parole officers attempted to have him illegally committed to a mental institution, by claiming that Sullivan had "delusions about being a witness in somebody's case" and was a paranoid schizophrenic. But his lawyers argued successfully against his committment and a board of psychiatrists judged him totally sane.

Now, Sullivan is back in a maximum-security prison, and there is a strong possibility that a final parole-revocation hearing held November 14 will succeed in eliminating his chances for parole.

Leon Thomas Thanksgiving Concert

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Leon Thomas, who is one of the best jazz vocalists of this era will appear in Concert at Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m. Friday, November 22, 1974. Sponsored by the Black Cultural Center of New Africa House. Leon has been aptly called one of the most versatile singers in the business and has made one of the most important innovative vocal contributions to jazz. He can lend his deep rich honey toned voice to blues ballads as well as display his tonal wizardry and vocal range through gut phrasing of pure jazz pieces. Leon is convinced that the time has come for the expansion of the voice in the new music and thinks of the voice as the primary human instrument. His delvings into the most ancient forms of musical expression (what pygmies and others sing in Africa, Indian ragas and music of the Himalayas) is reflected in what is known as his trademark...a melodious and haunting yodel.

In addition to critical acclaim, Leon was voted number one male singer in Downbeat 1970 Readers Poll, and number one male singer in England, Germany and in the International Critics Poll 1970 of Jazz and Pop he was voted best jazz vocalist.

Appearing with Leon, will be Neal Crique, piano, Merwin Bronson, Bass, Sadiq Rahman Shabazz, Drums and Sonny Morgan, Conga and African Percussions and Black Arthur, Alto Sax. Donations will be $1.50 at the door. A reception will be held afterwards in Center for Racial Understanding.

Estudaintes Hispanos

La comunidad hispana de la Universidad de Massachusetts recinto de Amherst tiene problemas reales, economicos y academicos para mencionar dos areas solamente. Actualmente el organismo oficial "AHORA", creado por nosotros los estudiantes con el unico proposito de que fuera un instrumento de ayuda en nuestro desenvolvimiento dentro y fuera de la universidad, se ha paralizado en medio de una crisis interna. Sin embargo los estudiantes, el recurso mas importante de esta organizacion y de la comunidad hispana en general, no debemos detenernos.

La solucion de nuestros problemas no debe esperar mas, la solucion de problemas internos; ahora es el momento en que los estudiantes debemos mostrar nuestro proposito de ir adelante en la busqueda de nuestro mejoramiento y crecimiento propio y por lo tanto de la comunidad hispanoamericana.

En esta reunion podemos discutir de manera informal todos nuestros problemas y buscar alternativas positivas en conjunto de acuerdo a nuestros intereses. Esta reunion se llevara acabo el dia 21 de noviembre a las 7:00 p.m. en el salon 113 del Campus Center.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, NOV. 21 – Born today, you are somewhat inclined to depend upon the force of words to gain you your ends than the force of actions – which is all well and good if your only aim is to settle disputes and avoid the disintegration of arguments into physical abuse. However, since you have the normal person's ambition to progress where your career is concerned, you would do well to begin to develop at once, if you have not already done so, the habit of more concrete reactions and responses to the demands made upon you. In short, actions speak louder than words!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – It is your own personal contacts that count today. Don't rely on others to do for you what you can easily do for yourself. Take on responsibility.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – There is nothing to be gained by flattery alone. You can apply soft-soap initially, but for results you would be wise to follow it up with hard work.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – The wise Capricorn will stick fairly close to routine today. This is no time to experiment either with a project or a method.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Although you may have to step out of line in order to do a friend a good turn, for the most part you would do well to keep close to home.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Morning hours are not such that they inspire confidence. Work through the difficult hours, however, and you should be able to gain by evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – New developments early in the day make this a Thursday to remember for a long time. Get new project underway as soon as possible.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Refuse to be stopped by obstacles that seem to have arisen overnight. You may be slowed down – but you need not give in completely.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – The quickest way to get things done is not always the safest. Even if it postpones the attainment of your goal, seek the best method of operation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – A day which begins with a flourish – but is very likely to end simply by petering out. Do what you can to explain yourself to an unbeliever.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You can catch up with the competition today if you are quick to take advantage of an opportunity for gain early in the day. Bestir yourself!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – The wise Virgo will take on no new responsibilities until he is certain the old ones have been met. Children may work a hardship in the afternoon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Take care of unfinished business as early in the day as possible. Otherwise, you will find yourself under mountain of work by week's end.

Burroughs AL MVP for '74

ARLINGTON, TEX. [UPI]-- Three years ago Ted Williams banished Jeff Burroughs to the Minors, telling the blond slugger to heat his bat and cool his head.

Burroughs, then 20, had a temper that exceeded his batting average. During his tantrums he often tossed bats and helmets and kicked water coolers.

When Williams sent Burroughs to Denver of the American Association, the youngster was batting .185, with just one home run and a mess of strikeouts. He finished the season in the Minors batting .303 and hitting 24 homers.

And it was no secret he didn't care for Williams, the Hall of Famer who then managed the Texas Rangers.

But Burroughs learned and now he praises Williams for helping him become the American League's most valuable player for 1974.

"We had our differences," Burroughs said of his former manager who convinced Bob Short to sign the youngster as the team's no. 1 draft choice in 1969. "But I have to say that Ted Williams taught me to think at the plate a little more -- that hitting isn't just walking up there and taking three swipes."

The 23-year-old native of Long Beach, Calif., the third youngest player ever to win an MVP Award, won over three members of the World Champion Oakland A's and Texas teammate Ferguson Jenkins, who finished fifth in the balloting by a 24-man committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

"It's the greatest honor a player can get," Burroughs said. "And it makes it even greater being only 23 years old and in my second year of major league ball."

Burroughs was the only player named on all ballots and finished with 248 points to 161½ for Oakland's Joe Rudi. Sal Bando was third with 143½ points and Reggie Jackson was fourth with 119, a point ahead, of Jenkins.

Burroughs and Jenkins were two big reasons the Rangers finished just five games behind Oakland in second place in the American League West. And Burroughs was quick to credit manager Billy Martin.

"He turned everyone on the club's thinking around," Burroughs said of Martin. "He taught me and everyone else on the club to think like a winner. It was really nice to start to win after we had been the dogs of baseball for two years."

Burroughs hit .301 last season, slamming 25 homers and leading the league with 118 runs batted in. He played parts of seasons with Washington and Texas in 1970, 1971 and 1972 before hitting .279 with 30 homers and 85 RBI for the Rangers in 1973.

Osley waived, Marshall added

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — Corner back Willie Osley, a rookie from the University of Illinois, was placed on waivers Wednesday by the New England Patriots.

Osley was a starting corner back in the National Football League team's first four regular season games this year and played mostly on special teams for the Patriots in the last six games.

Coach Chuck Fairbanks had no announcement as to who would replace Osley other than to say a defensive back would try out for the team Thursday.

Placing Osley on waivers cut the Patriots' roster to 44 active players, leaving three spots that can be filled.

On Tuesday, wide receiver Al Marshall was called back from the injured reserve list and will be in uniform for Sunday's game against the Baltimore Colts.

Marshall caught nine passes for 123 yards during the Patriots' preseason schedule. But he was placed on the reserve roster when regular season play began.

Gilbert back in goal

BOSTON (UPI) — The harder Gil Gilbert works the less chance he's going to have for a day off.

Gilbert, who played well in two weekend wins, will be back in goal tonight when the Boston Bruins face the California Seals for the second time this season.

The Bruins had planned to use backup Ross Brooks in goal against the Seals and possibly against the Rangers Saturday afternoon in New York but coach Don Cherry changed his mind after Wednesday's workout at Boston Garden.

"Gilles is at his best when he gets plenty of work so I want him to play against the Seals," said Cherry. "He had two superb games over the weekend and I know he can keep it going."

Gilbert, making his sixth straight start, was tough Saturday night as the Bruins built a 5-1 lead over Buffalo before lapsing into a 7-5 win. He came back Sunday night to stop Detroit, 5-2.

Brown, UConn win in semis

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) - Sophomore Fred Pereira, who had beaten Harvard with a pair of goals four days earlier, scored three times Wednesday to give Brown a 5-1 win over the Crimson in the semifinals of the NCAA District I Soccer Playoffs.

The victory advances Brown, 13-1-0, to the District finals next week against Connecticut at Storrs. Connecticut whipped Bridgeport 4-1 in Wednesday's other semifinal game.

Pereira, who provided the offense in last Saturday's 2-1 Ivy League Title win over Harvard, scored one goal in the first half and two more in the second half to oust the Crimson from NCAA play. In 14 games, Pereira has 24 goals.

Other Brown scorers were Tom Walsh and Jose Violante, who also serves as placekicker for the Bruins' football team.

Rinkmen check New England, 9-6

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

It was one of those games that won't help the energy crisis, the red light was on all night.

When it was all over the UMass Minutemen had peppered two shell-shocked goalies with 61 shots, with 9 of those finding the strings, for a hard earned 9-6 victory over a scrappy New England College.

The Minutemen jumped out to a 2-1 lead after the first period and went up 7-5 after two. New England College right winger Chris Danford took a pass off his chest and scored at 2:43 of the third period making the score 7-6, and swinging that elusive momentum back to New England.

After Danford's goal, both teams settled into a close checking center ice game for the first nine minutes of the third period. The Minutemen's all senior line of Kevin Connors, Steve Nims and John Muse took the ice at the nine minute mark of the third period and for two solid minutes it was shooting gallery time.

New England goalie John Stevenson made seven acrobatic saves, spread eagling and diving all over the ice. John Muse picked up a rebound about 25 feet out at 11:13 and sent a soft, floating knuckler that hit a defenseman in front and trickled past Stevenson. School was out for New England.

Defenseman Mike Ellis put the Minutemen into a quick lead at 1:43 of the first period. New England's starting goalie Paul Morgan made a quick kick save on Bill Stuart's blast from the right side. Ellis picked up the rebound in the slot and beat Morgan with a backhander to his glove side. Ellis sent Billy Harris in all alone at 15:43, for a 2-0 UMass lead. Dave MacMillan, a freshman from Wayzota, Minn., who had the hat trick, cut the lead to 2-1, after some sloppy clearing by the UMass defense.

The first two minutes of the second period were bizarre. It looked like fast break time at the cage. MacMillan tied it up with a power play goal at the :27 second mark.

Tim Howes took a pass from Chris Lamby and beat Morgan from in close to put UMass back in the lead at 1:08. Bill Stuart picked up an unmolested ricochet from a clearing pass 20 feet dead center, and scored a short handed goal at 2:07. Rusty Collins beat UMass goalie Bruce Gledhill with a 40 foot slapshot 20 seconds later. After play in their own end the inability of the defense to clear the puck, New England was back in a tie a 4-4.

Billy Harris scored his second goal and put UMass ahead to stay when Bob Jefferson's blast from the point hit the post and landed at Harris' feet.

Dana Redmond replaced Bruce Gledhill in the UMass nets mid-way through the second period. His first save may have been the turning point of the game.

Bob Brown and Jon Grose broke in on a 2 on 0 for New England. Redmond came about 40 feet out of the cage and swept the puck away from Brown. Kevin Conners grabbed the rebound and skated the length of the ice to score an unassisted goal. Instead of 5-5, UMass had a 6-4 lead.

Freshman Chris Lamby playing in his first varsity game had the 7th and 9th goals for UMass. Lamby's second goal was one of the prettiest of the night. Mike Merchant fed him a pass directly from the faceoff, Lamby made two dekes around a pair of New England defensemen and fired a hard backhander high to the short side.

BILL STUART nets a shorthanded goal for UMass past sliding Paul Morgan of New England. The Minuteman took advantage of a wacky rebound off the boards to go in alone. UMass triumphed, 9-5.

Yastrzemski named Sox' MVP

BOSTON (UPI) - First Baseman Carl Yastrzemski, who led his team with a .301 batting average last season, has been named the Boston Red Sox' Most Valuable Player by the Boston Baseball Writers Association.

Yastrzemski, who has hit over .300 in six of his 14 season, also paced the Red Sox with 79 runs batted in, 93 runs scored, 104 walks and 22 doubles. He tied third baseman Rico Petrocelli for the club lead with 15 home runs and also led the team in times at bat and most game winning hits (11).

Yastrzemski will receive the award Jan. 23, 1975 at the annual Boston Basebal Writers Dinner at the Statler Hilton.

"DUCK" CHANEY lays one up past Golden State's Rick Barry. Warriors topped the Celts, 120-115.

Barry's 42 sinks C's 120-115

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - League-leading scorer Rick Barry hit for 42 points, including four crucial free throws in the final 18 seconds, to lead the Golden State Warriors to a 120-115 victory over the Boston Celtics Wednesday night in a National Basketball Association game at the Providence Civic Center.

Barry hit on 17 of 34 shots from the field. He went into the game with a 31.5 point average.

The Warriors opened up a 14-point lead early in the fouuth period, but the Celtics, behind Don Chaney and Jo Jo White rallied to knot the score 103-103.

Rookie Keith Wilkes of Golden State hit two shots and Barry sank a layup to give the Warriors a 113-109 lead with 1:10 remaining on the clock. Then Charlies Johnson sank two foul shots and Barry pushed in four from the line to ice the game for the Pacific Division leaders.

John Havlicek led the Celtics with 23 points and reserve Paul Westphal added 19.

Golden State outrebounded the Celtics 52-48 with center Clifford Ray hauling down a game high of 14.

We have got to know

There are many things we know and many things we do not know.

For instance we know that the football team has won a share of the Beanpot with a squad that they beat 42-0 earlier in the season. We also know that the team did not have a good year by anyone's standards.

We do not know if the university got their money's worth this year in regard to football. We do not know if, in fact, the money that has been, is now, and will be spent on football is worth it or not. Our co-champions, University of Maine do not give out athletic scholarships. Football alone at this university gets more scholarships than all the other sports combined.

We do know that the soccer team had a good season and just missed out on an NCAA playoff berth. They did it with very little money, something we can assume to know.

We do not know that soccer as a so called "minor sport" will be able to survive at the level of competition that it has in the past. Chances are good that it will though because the New England level of competition for soccer is quite good. But as a minor sport its future could be hazy.

We know that the cross-country team has had a superb year. We also know that they too did it without a lot of funds not counting the post season travel monies that they have needed because they have been so good. Also as a minor sport their future is in jeopardy related to available funds for travel in particular.

We also know that men's gymnastics after this year will no longer have a full-time coach. We know that eventually this decision will reduce gymnastics to a club level, if that, on this campus. We know that student participation in the form of 12,000 petition signatures went almost for naught in an effort to reverse the decision last spring.

We do not know if any of these decisions made for us related to "minor sports" is really what we want. Or do we?

With money as tight as it is, every "minor sport's" future is in limbo. It appears that the budgeting practices of the athletic department have the university headed for a very limited scope of varsity sports that are of any worthwhile quality.

Sports that could be on their way to high quality levels not only in New England, but in the nation are now being stifled because of money factors. An imaginary ceiling has been set on all "minor sports" regulating them to a New England level of competition. The desire to really excel is now quite possibly a non-existent factor.

And money is being soaked into a football product that is not producing what might have been hoped. To really hit the money brackets in football you have got to be a national contender. And that takes even more money than UMass is already giving to football. That stadium has tied us to the program and the way Vermont has brushed aside football will never happen here.

Anyway that is not the answer. Of course dropping football would be absurd, but not so absurd might be a major reevaluation of the program, where it is headed, and what budget cuts can be made.

Every other sport at UMass could then benefit while football and possibly some other major sports would not suffer too extensively.

Women's sports are now moving very much more into the university scene. Sports such as crew, gymnastics, lacrosse and many others are becoming a part of the university learning experience that cannot and must not be shunned.

As it is said, it is unwise to put "all your eggs into one basket," just as it is unwise to put all your money into one or a few sports. This, I hope, we know.

Unleashing Harry and Tonto

An Interview with Paul Mazursky
by Stuart Sojcher

Film directing is an occupation not likely to be found in the "top ten" listing of financially secure and stable professions. The line most often heard in Hollywood concerning film directors is "that you're only as good as your last movie." Considering that Paul Mazursky is a film director; that of his past films only one has done well commercially; and that his most recent, Harry and Tonto, lacks sex, obscenity and violence — factors that reasonably assure a film of box office appeal — one imagines an insecure individual seriously contemplating abandoning film while still retaining his sanity. On the contrary, however, Paul Mazursky is quite secure, confident and relaxed. Even while answering the many inevitable silly questions about himself and his films, Mazursky remained pleasant and witty during a press conference in Boston promoting his latest film which he also produced and co-scripted.

> "I was sick and tired of seeing movies in which the old people were either senile or bizarre."

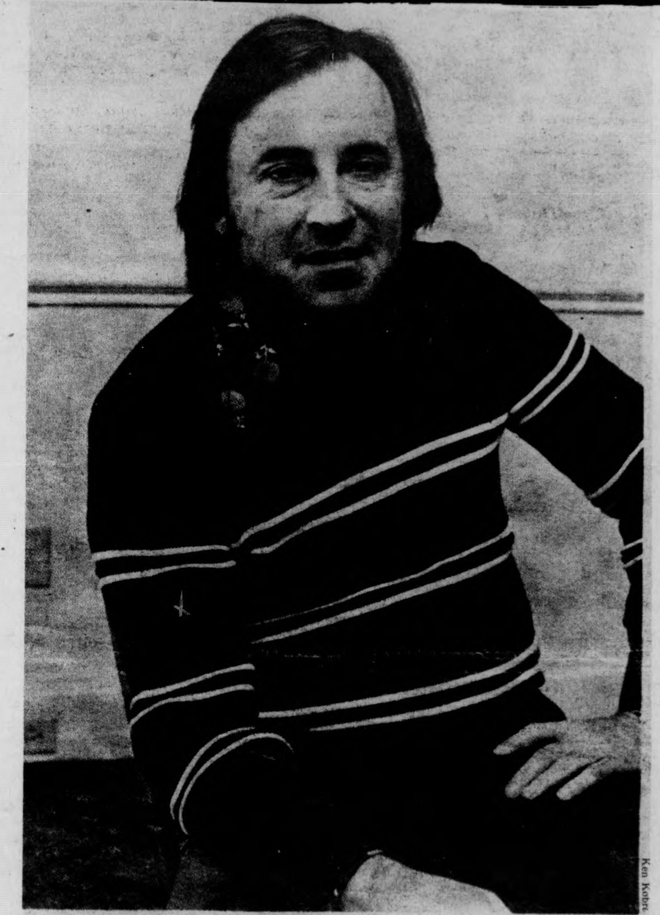
The film, Harry and Tonto, is the tale of a seventy-two year old retired schoolteacher, Harry, played by Art Carney of "The Honeymooners" fame, and Tonto — a cat who is Harry's closest friend and companion as they trek across the country partaking in many warm and comical adventures.

Old age is a subject rarely examined in film, nor has it drawn much attention excepting Vittorio De Sica's Umberto D. Mazursky feels strongly about the condition of old people in this country, especially their financial situation. He claims that old people are terribly neglected and mistreated and that once they reach a certain age are forgotten. "I was sick and tired of seeing movies in which the old people were either senile or bizarre." Mazursky's character Harry, though seventy-two, is not about to sit down and die — he still feels that he has plenty of life left and wants to experience some of the things that he missed out on in his younger days.

In speaking of his own 'younger' days, Mazursky (forty-four years old), made mention of the fact that while attending Brooklyn college he starred in Stanley Kubrick's first film, though you'll never see it as Kubrick owns all the prints, and who can fault him as it wasn't a very good film.

Mazursky began his career as an actor doing live television in New York and appearing off-Broadway before moving to Hollywood. He went on the nightclub circuit and began comedy writing for the Danny Kaye television show, staying for four years. Mazursky is able to look back upon some fond memories, but also plenty of days where he wondered where "money to pay the bills would come from."



Ken Kobre

Paul Mazusky, making it easier for the actor

His film career started when he co-scripted the screenplay for I Love You, Alice B. Tolkas. He then co-scripted and directed, Bob, Carol, Ted and Alice starring Elliot Gould and Natalie Wood, and Alex in Wonderland starring Donald Sutherland. On his own he wrote and directed Blume In Love starring George Segal. He acts regularly in his films, including the latter two, and also as a male hustler in Harry and Tonto. Mazursky is anxious to continue his acting career. "I'd like to act in someone else's picture. It's too much when you're also the director and have to think about every phase of the production."

> "I write about real people in social situations."

Mazursky sees his material as serious comedies. "I write about real people in social situations. The humor comes out of real situations in which the characters find themselves."

"For Harry and Tonto I drew on a number of people I had known in New York when I was growing up there, and my mother had a red cat named Tex she used to walk on a leash every day in the city."

In speaking about the film itself, Mazursky knew that he wanted Art Carney for the role, though it took a great deal of convincing as this was Carney's first starring role in a movie and it requires him to be on the screen practically every minute while working on a strict shooting schedule of nine weeks. Mazursky chose all his lead characters which include: Chief Dan George, Ellen Burstyn, Geraldine Fitzgerald and Larry Hagman. His cameraman, Michael Butler, who also briefly appears in the film as a Jesus freak, was only working on his second feature length production. After seeing Charley Varrick, shot by Butler, Mazursky spoke to Don Siegel, who directed it, and Siegel recommended Butler.

As the film takes place across the country, it was shot almost entirely in sequence, unusual for most films, which gives the actor an opportunity to become more involved with their roles.

Mazursky spent considerable time in planning. Every scene to be shot was sketched out, which came out to over seven hundred drawings. Time and money, the movie was shot on a budget of one and a half million dollars which is small compared to other films, and that probably explains the careful planning.

When confronted by the question of how well the film would do Mazursky admitted that he was a bit worried. Though Harry and Tonto has received excellent reviews, Mazursky is hoping that people are tired enough of sex and violence to view a film that combines realism, comedy and warmth. He expresses anger of the "R" rating given to the picture which was granted because of a questionable word used in a non-sexual sequence.

Overall, Mazursky expresses disappointment over the state of the film industry in its never ending depiction of sex and violence on the screen. Mazursky also took a jab at the Twentieth-Century Fox public relations person (the film's releasers) accompanying the promotional tour for making The Towering Inferno, one of the many disaster films soon to appear, claiming that it's worthless. "When it comes to so-called 'serious art' films, I still look to Europe."

> "When it comes to so called 'serious art' films, I still look to Europe."

When asked what young people should do if they want to enter film, Mazursky jokingly replied, "Go to law school." He explained that he had been asked that same question in the morning and responded with that answer. "But in all seriousness, stay in school," he says, "even go to law school." "I think that one has to acquire a knowledge of the world through literature, psychology, etc. in order to gain a better understanding of life and be able to make a competent film."

After about two hours of conversation, questioning and laughs, Mazursky said that he had to leave. As I shook hands with him at the door, I remarked that I had enjoyed his film. He quickly replied, "The bagels and lox are in the back Duddy," a reference to the movie The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz which is about the Jewish boy on the make. Blessed with a quick wit, an engaging personality and intelligence, it would be a shame for the medium to lose an individual of Mazursky's talents simply because his films lack sex or violence and deal with real issues. But Mazursky is well aware of the risks and for the moment, with Harry and Tonto doing well, he won't have to revert to playing Duddy Kravitz either.

Corrections screened

Dear Editor:

An article about the Amherst Film Cooperative appeared in Below the Salt last Thursday, November 14. While the Co-op appreciates the coverage, I must make two major corrections that could lead to some misunderstandings.

First, the film that didn't show at UMass was Holiday not Cover Girl and its no-show had nothing to do with RSO, but rather with a scheduling misunderstanding. Scheduling runs through the Student Activities Office.

Secondly, the Co-op never was under the impression that RSO would pick up any losses we made when we were answerable to that department. As a matter of fact, we had hoped to lose no money at all and were as shocked as RSO was when we found out how much was lost. Losing RSO status was a blow for the Co-op, but, finally, was a healthy change since our management became more responsible. The article states that, after losing RSQ status, we changed our objective and market. Nothing could be further from the truth. We have always been committed to showing films of quality to the area and not just UMass or single colleges. Membership requirements do not discriminate between college and non-college people and never will.

Thanks,

Light from the void beyond

Dear Editor,

Being a taxpayer in the state of Massachusetts (and an alumni), I can not—nay, will not tolerate what your Fine Arts-Real World paper espouses as fact, but is, in reality, confusing to the mind's eye (do I mind?). I'll have you know that this trend toward realism, as exemplified in the condemnation of many of our gratingest business institutes for the mentally-arranged, has left me flabbergasted.

Watching from afar, I have observed a rapid, but unnoticeable decline in the quality of the writing, the ideas, and the idiots in abundance at our institute for higher education. Observe this letter—A, e.g., —for example. Now memorize it.

Did you do what I told you—haha, you lose-I didn't say Simon says. My commendations go out to David Miller for his oh-so-perceptive review of the History of the Bonzos LP; Andrew Mackenzie for his innocent and unrelenting undermining of modern technological media; to the Duck for his grin; to Jackson from a fan in the attic; to the lovely ladies and fine musicians; to Providence and fate, for letting me be a poor boy who can't play electric music for lack of money; to Kostek, for being my roommate and showing me how truly screwy rock critics are.

Bring back Nesti!

Yours Truly,
Gary Gomes

'P.S. No, I'm not going to pull an Ed Bryant and tell you how much I love you all—to do so would be hypocritical. I will tell you, however, (much to the chagrin of Jon Carr doubtless) that the anti-Christ is due to appear soon, as exemplified by our mass worship of money. And since we pay on credit, don't despair now—despair later. And thanks to Stan Lee and Jack Kirby for allowing me to create a new art form—comix letters.

7 Works — Chris Robinson

by Anne Hamburger

Last week in the Student Union gallery, Chris Robinson projected "mass in space" using lazer beams to form geometric shapes. Each evening Robinson set up the lazers, in different formations that made use of the entire gallery space. A highly controlled red beam was projected from a box that penetrated the opposite wall.

A second year graduate student, Robinson states, "My work is mainly concerned with defining and controlling space with light."

As the viewer walks around the gallery he is confronted with lazer beams that disappear and reappear according to his relationship to the light. This is due to the fact that light can only be seen in a forward direction. This principle is true to all light, but is more apparent with lazer light for the highly controlled beam does not disperse with distance, as does ambient light.

Robinson's "7 works" offer a series of geometric relationships which lead the viewer to question his perception of light and space. The work demonstrates the limits of our perception in that "light mass" exists in space, that we are not aware of. This raises the fascinating possibilities for worlds outside our perception.

In an age where there is a strong movement towards art and technology, Robinson is concerned about being connected with this school. He feels that his art does not revolve around his fascination for a highly technological tool but that the lazer is merely a way of demonstrating his ideas about space.

By using the lazer, Robinson enters the realm of the art and technology school, for he must grapple with the difficulties that many artists who employ technology deal with.

For successful explication of his ideas, there is need for extreme control over the environment in which the work is shown. Light coming through the gallery windows made the red beams barely visible. Because the lazer is potentially dangerous if it comes into direct contact with the eye, Robinson was forced to direct the viewer away from direct eye contact with the beam. These unfortunate limitations could have been remedied if shown in a more controlled environment, and damaged the effectiveness of the piece.

Nevertheless, Robinson's subtle presentation of ideas, force us to question many of the principles of perception and space, that might otherwise be ignored.

The Process

Chapter 2

On an extraordinary drizzly evening late in November, a young student came out of the cubical in which he lodged in the South West sector and walked slowly, as though in hesitation, towards the library.

Once inside the immense structure he waited for a seemingly endless duration until an elevator finally opened its doors to him. It arrived quite contrary to the information related by the mechanized schedule of lights along side of the several elevators. Nevertheless, he stepped in and pushed for floor 13 as he intended to procure some Dostoyevsky and Kafka books.

The car began to rattle and shake and the lights blinked on and off until finally he was in darkness. The speed of ascention suddenly increased and he was thrown by his own weight to the floor of the carriage. The elevator came to an abrupt hault and the doors slid open in each direction. A static shroud of illuminessence and the silhouette of two men in long trench coats and black top hats took form before him.

He suddenly felt a gloved hand at each shoulder and he began to rise and stumble out of the elevator which closed immediately behind him.

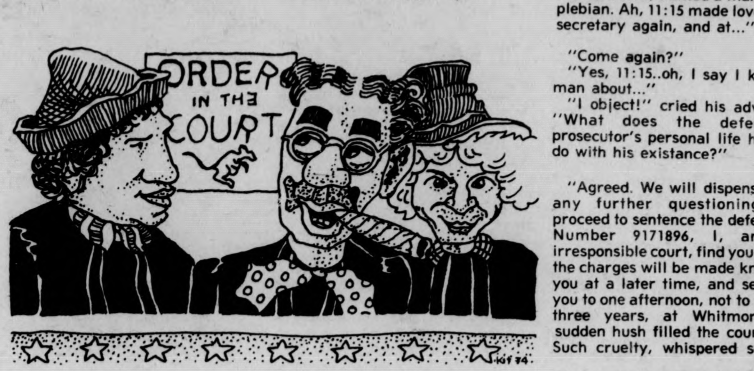
The sound of a crowd and a gavel hitting a hard surface came to his attention. He was ushered into a smoke filled room that he recognized as the top floor of the library.

"Ah, number 6008893!" came a voice. He turned and saw what appeared to be a clown in full make-up and costume. "You're a little early. They haven't quite finished with this case yet. Incidently," and he extended his white powdered hand, "I'm your defense counsellor; your advocate." The student and the lawyer-clown shook hands and he then brushed the talc from his own. "What's going on here," asked the student as he focused his attention on the proceedings across the hall.

"Ah, you'll take great interest in this case, number6--oh, by the way, I hope you have no objections to the dropping of formalities. As we shall be working closely together on your case, I feel a need to dispense with them. May I call you 6?"

"Certainly, I agree whole heartedly, sir! and what shall I call you?"

The advocate eyes widened and his brows fell sternly across his tight, distressed face. "You shall refrain from referring to me altogether; you shall have no need of addressing me by number, you shall, upon our parting, forget anything that is said or done in these rooms. Understood?"



"Oh, yes, of course. I'll just pretend that this is another journalism lecture and have no difficulty in forgetting everything that I'm told."

"Fine, now 6, the process is like so: number 9171896, here has charged the Prestigious Periodical Publications Corporations with illegal and unconstitutional acts. Incidentally they are the sole owners of SGA, RSO. Collegian and Rockefella, that is, roughly about 3-5ths of the known world. Anyway, what happens is this. He charges them but all through the trial he is the defendant. Not only will he lose the case but he will conform to the quota system."

"The quota system?"

"Yes, you see, someone must die. Someone must always die in order to make it worth the court's while to handle the case. Someone, numberly, 9171896 will perish."

"This is all tripped up!"

"Yes, isn't it marvelous the way they've formulated it down to a science, an art!"

"That's the most ri-dic-ulous ding I evva hoid!" came the voice of the presiding judge, number 1930512. He turned to his two assistants and proceeded with the trial. Number 6008893 watched in confusion as number 9171896 was being questioned by number 1930512 amidst a cloud of cigar smoke and the crackle of bubble gum.

"Where were you on Two'sday, the next?"

"Let's see, 8:45 a.m., breakfast with the security guard; 9:30 a.m., coffee with the vice dean, that is dean of vice and comparative corruption; lunch at noon with the editors; coffee break at 3 p.m. with the chancellor; dinner at 6 with my girl friend; ah, 8:30 made love to my secretary; 9:30 or maybe 10, can't be sure, I killed a man. Some plebian. Ah, 11:15 made love to my secretary again, and at..."

"Come again?"

"Yes, 11:15..oh, I say I killed a man about..."

"I object!" cried his advocate. "What does the defendant-prosecutor's personal life have to do with his existance?"

"Agreed. We will dispense with any further questioning and proceed to sentence the defendant. Number 9171896, I, and an irresponsible court, find you guilty, the charges will be made known to you at a later time, and sentence you to one afternoon, not to exceed three years, at Whitmore.' A sudden hush filled the courtroom. Such cruelty, whispered several.

"Excellent! We accept!" cried the advocate. He turned to the former number 9171896 and said, "You're lucky: you could have been asked to attempt to cash at the Student Union, or be made to spend time at the dining commons. You're only alternative, as you may know, is accidental death by drowning in an empty elevator shaft off the top floor."

"I'll take the accident..."

"Now, now, son. I know of men who have come out of Whitmore sane...well, anyway, you can spend the entire time in their coffee shop with all the people who are supposed to be getting paid to help the students. Hey, I tried!" He threw up his hands as the student was escorted hastily to an empty elevator shaft.

"Next!" came the plaintiff's voice. Number 6008893 was lead into the courtroom.

Ten-cent Marvels

Origins of Marvel Comics (Fireside Books) 254 pp. $5.95 by Stan Lee

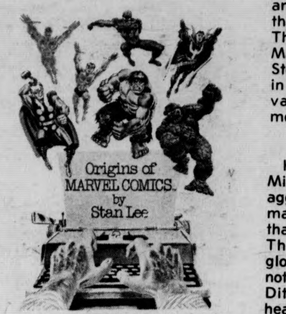
review by Jack Cahill

Nearly everyone between the ages of twelve and thirty is aware of, if not familiar with, the characters and style created by the Marvel Comics Group. Since their first pioneering effort during the early sixties, The Fantastic Four, Marvel has changed; progressed, expanded, occasionally lessening, but more often improving their quality. By doing so, they have established comics as a legitimate and respected combination of media and art and turned out the most intriguingly fantastic stories imaginable as well.

Marvel's multi-colored pages abound with kings, sorcerers, gods, demi-gods, gods-to-be, mutants, heroically vicious barbarians, androids, synthazoids, undersea races, underground races, insane geniuses (offset by sane ones), galactic surfboard riders, all-powerful demons, black heroes, blind heroes, cosmically aware heroes and a growing number of vampires and cyborgs.

Stan Lee, Marvel's guiding light since he was hired at the age of seventeen, initiated the Marvel Age of Comics by proving that the public most digs the fantastic when it is realistic: despite the fact that a ridiculously improbable super being is attacking him, the "Human Torch" is worried more about his $110 suit he accidentally destroyed. Smiling Stan was the master of making characters exude empathy and identification, but now he is just the name above the title, foregoing all scripting and editing chores. His absence makes the writing in this book even sweeter to veteran Marvelites.

Stan's written pages comprise little of the book. Essentially, as the title says, the book is concerned with origins, reprinted in color from the old comics; the Fantastic Four, the Hulk, Thor, Spiderman and Doctor Strange. Stan adds an informative preface to each and includes a latter day story of each character, showing the changes wrought from 1962 to 1968.



The dust cover of ORIGINS OF MARVEL COMICS by Stan Lee, published by Simon and Schuster.

The actual origins, as conceived in Lee's brain, are intriguing; the Hulk, for instance, being a mixture of Frankenstein's monster and Jekyll and Hyde; and Spiderman as a reaction against obnoxiously unrealistic sidekicks (Robin, Kid Flash, Bucky Barnes et al.). Even more interesting is the selection of artist and how that artist presents the yet to be visualized story line. The two main men on the early Marvel staff were Jack Kirby and Steve Ditko diametrically opposed in their approaches, but both vastly talented in the comic medium.

Kirby, the Bach cum Michelangelo of his field, splashily aggrandized the FF and Thor, making everything look larger than life. His view of Asgard, Thor's mythical homeland, is gloriously awesome and leaves nothing to the imagination. Steve Ditko was not one to reach for the heavens. His territory Spiderman covered seamy New York warehouse districts, cheap hoods and shadow-hidden figures. This formula worked well on Spiderman and even better on Dr. Strange. The latter character, a master of the mystic arts, is featured here in three intensely eerie stories that show why he was and is one of the most individual and well-done heroes in comic history.

There is actually not much to this book aside from all the excellent artwork, but the best way to deal with comics is in comic form. Looking at it that way, the book is colorful, entertaining and informative to anyone who is curious about this ever-growing Marvel comics mania.

Words, Words, Words . . .

Strictly Speaking By Edwin Newman
193 pp. $7.95 Bobbs-Merrill

Don Aucoin

Err...ahh...umm...(cough cough)....harrumph! How does one go about reviewing a book when the guilty blush has not yet faded from one's cheeks? When a lifetime of work at compiling an impressive vocabulary has been ridiculed, spat upon, trampled in the dirt? When every word of description that pops to mind is pretentious, supercilious, and futhermore not viable? Beats me. Here goes, though...

"Will America be the Death of English?" Edwin Newman opens the book with that line, and it's on the cover too, beneath a picture of the author, his eyes narrowed, his lips curled in a contemptuous sneer. Come on, you fool, he seems to be saying. Turn the page and meet your doom. And so I did, and was treated to the funniest, and most painful analysis of contemporary language I've ever read.

Here's from a dissection of the New York Times: "From James Reston, a reference to a serious economic crisis facing Egypt. For the Egyptian's sake, I hope so. A serious crisis is the only kind to have. Crises that are not serious are not worth the trouble. It's like the true facts politicians so often demand or, conversely, insist that they are giving us. True facts are the only facts worth having. False facts are no use at all, a point that escaped a State Department spokesman who said of an article in Foreign Policy: 'Some of the facts are true, some are distorted, and some are untrue.' " Nice, very nice, n'est ce pas? But doesn't it also strike uncomfortably close to home?

As a person who suffered through four years of high school with a coach who was fond of saying that we were in a "tension situation", and who last year listened to a professor, in attempting to clarify a mix-up in pages between her book and ours, say (without batting an eyelash), "Is there a pagination differential?", I suppose I should be grateful that Newman has decided to take on the clowns who are determined to destroy all meaningful communication. Among those he makes fun of: Nixon, Ziegler (of course), the whole Watergate crew, Rockefeller, Howard Cosell, Columnist Joseph Alsop, William F. Buckley, Jr. (yay!), and so on and so forth - you get the idea. No institution escapes his scathing eye. The section on sports, "Is Your Team Hungry Enough, Coach?", should be must reading for all aspiring sportswriters and sportscasters. (You might even want to mimeograph this section and send it along to Dick Young, Chris Schenkel, or any other Cliche King of your choice.)

Newman deflates all pompous political double-speak, cites the destructive influence of the media, notes the strange things done to words in the guise of "customs". He is not vicious or vindictive, though god knows he has every right to be, considering how difficult it must be for a man who can speak correctly in today's world to maintain his courage. The follies of current jargon are dealt with in an amused, detached fashion, but a very real concern for the state of language is evident. And he is right. When a Ron Ziegler can say to the world that "all previous statements on Watergate are "inoperative"; not "wrong", not "lies", but "inoperative", a critical examination of what people are saying is needed. After reading this book, I guarantee that you will never again say "be supportive of" without feeling a chill at the base of your spine, and any "y'know's" in your speech will be followed by a nervous apology. A tic may develop whereby you will not be able to say "you better believe it" without your fist leaping involuntarily to your mouth. So anyways, for sure, in a manner of speaking, this tome is a virtual masterpiece.

Having finished Strictly Speaking, I get up, stretch, grab the paper and turn to an article about Nixon's illness. His lawyer, one Herbert Miller, is talking, "underscoring", the Globe says, "the seriousness of Nixon's condition". To wit: "This postoperative complication was of such a magnitude as could have resulted in a terminal event".

Terminal event? Terminal event! Newmannnnnnnnnnn!

total awareness

by Lawrence Kornfeld

Our society puts a great deal of emphasis on self improvement through learning. That is the supposed purpose of this university. Not just to train us for jobs, but to make us more well rounded human beings through education.

This is a flawed approach. What universities offer is not true knowledge. The problem is that the human state of consciousness is so limited no one can really know anything no matter how many books he reads or lectures he attends unless he rises above that level of consciousness.

We follow our physical senses blindly believing everything they tell us. Yet it's been proven that they lie to us all the time. Just as an example, take a piece of granite. You're senses tell you the granite is solid through and through. Yet any physicist will tell you that, because of the structure of the atoms, there is more empty space in the rock than matter. In fact there is so much more empty space than matter it's very hard to believe.

But even the idea that there is empty space in the rock is not real knowledge, because the scientist that made this "discovery" had to rely on their physical senses to make their observations in the first place. Yet we are so obsessed with the pleasures these senses provide we go on passively accepting their lies anyway.

The only way out of this trap is to rise above what we call the "real world". Then we may know all things, not by books, but by direct perception.

This world is only a training ground to prepare us for entry into subtler levels of creation. In fact it is the grossest and most negative of all worlds. To think we are "well educated" when we know only this level is absurd. Of course I cannot prove any of this to you, but you can prove it to yourself by experiencing the subtler levels of creation yourself.

The fastest and safest way to do this is by a path called Eckankar or the "Path of Total Awareness." It involves leaving your physical body and travelling through subtler and subtler realms until you leave the negative worlds completely and reach the "pure spirit worlds," where you attain self realization and the knowledge that you are eternal.

This is called the art of dying daily, because you leave the body just as you would when you die, only you control the coming and going.

Through Eckankar you can break the karmic cycle of deaths and rebirths and become established in the higher planes permanently. Trying to do this by other means will take a great deal more time and can get you trapped in one of the lower worlds.

This is because you are unfamiliar with the higher worlds and don't know the traps that await you there. That is why there is an Eck master. He acts as a guide to start you on the right path and show you the way through these worlds.

The worlds are divided into twelve planes. These planes are divided into two grand divisions. The lower division is the "universal mind" or negative worlds. The higher one is the pure spirit worlds. The plane we are living on now is called the physical plane and is at the bottom of the negative worlds.

In Eckankar one travles to progressively higher planes gaining increased freedom and illumination as he goes along. Each plane brings the Eckist closer to god and thus greater purification and self knowledge.

When one reaches the soul plane which is the first plane in the pure spirit worlds he is beyond all limitations even those of time and space. The culmination of this is the god realized state or total awareness.

The techniques used to leave the body are called the spiritual exercises of Eck. Anybody who practices these exercises sincerely can experience the higher planes.

The lower worlds are called "negative" because they are controlled by a lower deity called Kal Niranjan. It is his duty to keep us trapped in the lower worlds until we find the Eck master and escape. He is here to make sure that when we leave we are purified enough for the pure spirit worlds. Kal sends us many false prophets and religious leaders who tell us that their path is best. In reality they are hiding the truth to keep us trapped, often without their realizing it.

Kal has many other tricks to trap us in, but his main one is attachment. As long as we are attached to anything on this plane, whether it's money, luxuries, or even people, we will never escape.

The way we become purified enough to leave these worlds is by experience not knowledge. That is our purpose for being here to develop ourselves by experience until we are ready to return to the god realm.

The ultimate purpose of all this is to become a co-worker with god. To do this one must spend millions of incarnations on this earth. Eckankar provides a short cut to this goal. When one meets with the Eck master for the return journey to the god realm that person has come to the last incarnation here.

Part of this return trip is spiritual liberation here and now. Spiritual liberation is a freedom that goes way beyond the scope of any political freedom. It means freedom from death and rebirth, attachments, passions of the mind, and the sufferings of this world.

It allows you to realize your spirit or true self. This self is indestructible. It cannot be injured, starved, or imprisoned in any way. It is eternal.

The present Eckankar movement was started in 1965 by Paul Twitchell who was Eck master at the time. It has since grown rapidly and now claims millions of followers around the world.

Eckankar itself is an ancient teaching that pre-dates the founding of all today's religions. The Naacal records, the oldest religious scriptures known to man contain references to it. Yet it has remained obscure most of these years because it is not for the masses. Most people are too steeped in materialism to take an interest in it let alone follow it faithfully.

Success or failure in Eckankar doesn't depend on any special talent or training it is a matter of attitude. One must have the right attitude to give up attachments, become disciplined, and wish to serve god. All of these things are essential. Ultimately everything depends on your attitude.

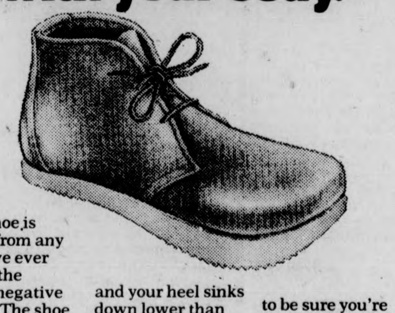
The shoe that works with your body.


This shoe is different from any shoe you've ever worn. It's the EARTH* negative heel shoe. The shoe designed to work in harmony with your entire body.
The heel of the Earth® shoe is actually lower than the toe. This allows you to walk naturally. Like when you walk barefoot in sand or soft earth and your heel sinks down lower than your toes.
The entire sole of the Earth shoe is molded in a very special way. This allows you to walk in a gentle rolling motion. And to walk easily and comfortably on the hard jarring cement of our cities.
But remember, just because a shoe looks like ours doesn't mean it works like ours. So to be sure you're getting the Earth brand shoe, look on the sole for our Earth trademark and U.S. Patent #3305947.
Your body will thank you.

What have happened down here is the wind have changed

by Mike Kostek

Sanderson Theater, Springfield

Are there any two 'pop' musicians keener on craftsmanship than the two wonders that came to play at the half-full Sanderson Saturday night? Randy Newman and Ry Cooder exhibit an unfailing ear for the guts of their musics, and are able to fill a hall as solo performers with as much of the true spirit of music as a few million bland band aggregations.

Ry Cooder brought his good humored yet serious blues to life with a deft hour of high class singin' and playin'. Switching between six-string guitar and mandolin all night, he embellished several of his fans' favorites ("Comin' In On A Wing And A Prayer", "F.D.R. In Trinidad", "I'm a Fool For A Cigarette", "One Meat Ball") with some playing that bordered on the monster class. Always a great time with Ry.

BELOW THE SALT photos by Debbie Schafer

Ryland P. Cooder opens musical doors with his mandolin.

Randy Newman looks like a curious combination of an eagle and a turtle squinting up on stage. Sitting alone at the piano, he was nervous and ill-at-ease most of the night until he detected a true appreciation for his craft from the crowd.

And craft is the word to describe his music. Not a word wasted, not a note awry, Randy plays his songs in concert with even less frills than on record, down to a seemingly sparse average time of about two minutes each. Since Springfield is a minor stop on his tour, we did not get to hear the fourty piece orchestra that backed him up in Boston and New York. But that's perfectly all right, as we got a lot closer to Randy through just his voice and piano.

Randy Newman gazes upward and outward.

Randy's piano playing is a model of perfection in its restraint, mainly from the Stephen Foster - Scott Joplin mode, conveying a rolling, ever-steady back-up flow. But it is his voice and lyrics that make him exceptional. He is able to sing us songs of love, both perverted, mislaid and true, songs of bums and winos, songs of midgets, shucksters and kingfishes, songs of normal lover's prayers, having tea in Dayton, Ohio — 1903 and God's song. And he makes them all work through brilliant voice inflections, pauses and em-pha-sis on the right syl-la-ble. Mighty mighty is the sensitive power of what surely is one of the finest tunesmiths of our day.

A most memorable evening of some of the highest class, highest quality music ever heard in this area.

In Concert:
Donovan
15 November

If Donovan has never been a musician, in the technical sense of the word, neither has he ever tried to create the impression that he was. In fact, up until two or three years ago he wasn't too proud to be seen playing his guitar with a capo. A great singer? Uh-uh, although his phrasing has usually been impeccable — And he's not a great composer-lyricist certainly, and so the inevitable question: What makes him stand out among the many who possess the above mentioned talents in so much greater abundance than he?

I think his 'secret' if any, lies in his delivery; even in these latter days, when he's moved away from the simple subject matter which lent itself to his style so well and addressed himself to more worldly topics, he manages to carry off even those pretentions by the sincerity he brings to them — Not attempting to convince with the weight of his seriousness, but childlike, simply expecting to be believed because he himself believes it.

Mr. Leitch's capacity for bringing a touch of innocence to unwieldly situations and subjects has certainly been stretched to the limits for the "concept" presentation he's touring with, a musical discussion of our generation and the world it lives in, from beginnings in the fifties, through the disillusionment and seeking of the sixties, to an optimistic projection for the upcoming generation bringing the world together in spiritual unity. Strangely enough, such a concept, and its accompanying gimmickry (scenery, back-up band, dancers, and in a couple of cases, pre-taped orchestrations) was not at all offensive, except in the lamest spots, where it leaned just a wee bit toward an adult Sesame Street roadshow. Belief is contagious.

On the other hand, it was not in any way uplifting; I doubt that anyone walked out of there reassured about the future of mankind — This is because Donovan's main strength is also his greatest weakness. The very casualness of his delivery which allows the audience to at least suspend its disbelief prevents him from having any emotional impact at all. Likewise, the sets and theatrics removed his subject from the realm of reality, making the entire production pleasant but without personal relevance, like listening to mommy and daddy reading to you long before you could understand the story-line. It was the presence that mattered, not the meaning. And it was in that sense that I enjoyed the concert — as an echo of the days when our generation was in its 'childhood' and the spirit of our innocence was embodied by our humble minstrel.

In Concert:
Beach Boys
Roger McGuinn Band
Springfield Civic Center
17 November

The fastest "sell out" concert in the history of the Civic Center turned out to be quite an event. For some reason, the powers that be deemed to cover half of the floor with seats (in the past, the floor has either been totally filled with chairs or totally empty) which meant that those who got there too late to get the precious seats had no choice but to stand all night. It was a thoughtless set-up, and one which was really inexcusable.

Roger McGuinn opened the show and was heartily received. He was spectacular, sounding looser, more relaxed, and projecting better than he ever did with the live Byrds. With a fine newly assembled back-up group (including guitarist Richard "Big Bad John" Bowden, an old Linda Ronstadt sideman and part-time comedian), McGuinn Rickenbackered his way through fifteen songs, only three of which were post-Byrd compositions.

From the opening notes of "Ballad of Easy Rider", McGuinn was in complete control, receiving such Byrds standards as "Lover of the Bayou", "Wasn't Born to Follow", "Mr. Spaceman", and "You Ain't Goin' Nowhere". His singing just hit the spot and was especially strong and moving on "Chestnut Mare" and "The Lady". Stronger than ever. His encore consisted of "Eight Miles High", "Tiffany Queen" and an abundance of humble thanks. Welcome back Roger, we missed you.

McGuinn is back in.

But the crowd, mostly between the ages of 15 and 19, was there to see the Beach Boys, now a nine man group. As a result of the astounding success of Endless Summer (a collection of their early surflove songs released early last summer and ironically, their first number one album), the Beach Boys have never been so popular. Just the mention of their name brought a standing ovation. Only seconds into "I Can Hear Music", the first number, many of those fortunate enough to have seats were standing on them, clapping along. This music buff has seen Dylan, the Who, and the Stones in similar settings and has never experienced such a complete and continual crowd frenzy. The crowd clapped along, sang along, stood on their chairs and on each other, and basically lived the Beach Boys for two solid hours, only quieting down somewhat for the more obscure (to these younger, johnny-come-lately Beach Boys fans) "Feel Flows" or "I'm Waiting For the Day". Otherwise, the excitement kept building and building, with the crowd, as one, going completely coo coo on "I Get Around", "Good Vibrations", "California Girls", "Surfin' U.S.A.", and "Fun Fun Fun".

After almost thirteen years, superstardom has finally come to the Beach Boys, and it isn't the result of their real musical masterpieces (Surf's Up, Pet Sounds, Smiley Smile) but of their simple, catch-teeny-oldies. The crowd went crazy at the mention of the Endless Summer album, but was silent at that of Pet Sounds.

All night long, I expected Mike Love or Carl Wilson to ask "Where were all of you during the sixties?" but the elementary school truth would have been too telling.

Live Music:
Jerry Garcia & Merle Saunders
Paul's Mall, Boston
14 November

Known as the Group, and with little advance notice of their appearance except for a few ads billing Jerry Garcia of the Grateful Dead as apparent sole performer, this aggregation sold out Paul's Mall three consecutive nights.

Undoubtedly most of the audience went to hear Garcia perform, aware that the Dead had only recently played their farewell-to-the-stage-for-a-year-or-so-concert.

What they saw and heard was a fine show in which every member of the band shared the spotlight.

Organist Merl Saunders contributes a unique jazz-funk-rock style to the band's sound, a derivation of his rhythm-and-blues and rock roots. The rest of the band keys around Saunders, picking up on his riffs and extending them further.

Their jamming is loose and characteristic of most of their music. Leads switch from Saunders to Garcia to saxophonist Martin Fierro, who appeared on the Dead's Wake of the Flood album.

Drummer Bill Humphries, who replaced regular drummer Bill Kreutzmann after the New York show for unexplained reasons, gets in a few solos, demonstrating a fine drumming style. John Kahn (who spent three years with Michael Bloomfield and has backed Paul Butterfield, Brewer and Shipley, and Maria Muldaur) seems content to stand in the background, everpresent cigarette hanging from his mouth.

They opened with a Dylan tune, "It Takes a Lot to Laugh, It Takes a Train to Cry", from their latest album, Live at Keystone. Fierro put in a fine exhibition on sax in this one, giving way to a good lead performance by Garcia on guitar and vocals.

"Expressway (To Your Heart)", from the Group's first album together, Fire UP, followed. They brought their loose jamming style to songs like "That's What Love Will Make You Do", and "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down." The music was quick and lively, drawing on all the musicians to put in a good combined effort.

The show lasted for one hour, too short to please the appreciative crowd. For those who waited five hours to get front row seats, or two hours for back row center, the show was well worth the wait and the ridiculous drink prices Paul's Mall is known for.

—Hugh Owen

MANFRED MANN'S EARTH BAND — THE GOOD EARTH — (Warner Bros. Records BS 2826)

As relevant as its title suggests, this disc begins with the sound of a rooster crowing. As it goes into the first cut, "Give Me the Good Earth," you could take the first few bars of it and use them as the background music for an advertisement. It grows from there, producing diverse variations of sound.

That's what this whole record is all about. I would not consider it full of songs for just plain listening (although it definitely put some life in a rainy afternoon), but it gives me the idea that there is some story behind the arrangement. You could almost close your eyes and dream up some kind of animated action taking place on a screen as it plays, perhaps a terrestial version of Yellow Submarine.

Yes, this is the Manfred Mann who was a figure of the teenybopper rock of the Sixties. If the name sets off a twinge of nostalgia, better get ready for something else!

—Linda Sherksnis

In Concert:
Raspberries — Albatross
November 16
Amherst Cinema

The Cinema was the place to be the night of the 16th if you wanted to hang loose, listen to some rock and have a really gay time. Sure, the cheering section for Springfield's Albatross could have turned this thing into an R-rated affair, but the younger crowd most likely was unaware of their beer-flowing-resultant attitude, as the bands had them dancing on their feet.

The local group tried to keep the crowd from getting restless during a fuse blowout that delayed things with a display of drumming delights. When the amps were ready, Albatross smothered the hall with ripping raunch. Their jumping antics clicked with a restless light show privided by a capable pair, one fifteen and the other sixteen years old.

"Go All the Way" was the degree to which the Raspberries went to put forth a significant show. Lead guitarist Wally Bryson said that the aim of the group was to share feelings and communicate with their listeners through their songs. There could hardly be a better example of reaching out, touching and moving! As they are both performers and persons, they are not moody. After their first performance (they put on two shows that night), the four Raspberries were in an energetic mood in their dressing room, knowing they got waht they had sought in their musical message.

A version of "Let's Pretend", much more subtle than the version recorded in summer '73, was the opening number before the group jumped climatically into the recent "Overnight Sensation". This was easily their most effective act of the night, involving mellow to charging transformations with sound and body. Vocatlist Eric Carmen and his microphone dominated the front stage at every angle in the first-mentioned song.

To sum it all up, this is the kind of thing that you would like to continue all through the night. At 1:45 a.m., is there such a word as "tired" in the front rows?

—Linda Sherksnis

CLIFTON CHENIER — OUT WEST (Arhoolie)

Art Van Damme may deny it, but accordion is eminently suited to playing blues. The more folksy sounding accordion is a welcome relief after listening to endlessly repetitive whining guitar cliches for so long. Clifton Chenier plays Cajun blues accordion, singing in French, and has been attracting notice the last few years. This album features a very complimentary band that includes the other Steve Miller on piano and guitarist Elvin Bishop.

All the tunes are spirited and honest with some straight from the soul tenor sax fills by John Hart. Saxophone and wash board add to the ensemble sound. Clifton's hard-on-the beat accordion solos sway you forcefully into that basic rhythm and you will soon find yourself just a — sittin' and a — rockin'.

This and Clifton's previous albums for Arhoolie are all highly recommended to any type of music listener. Help free the accordion from the bondage of champagne music and ethnic weddings.

Firesign: The Bluish Persuasion

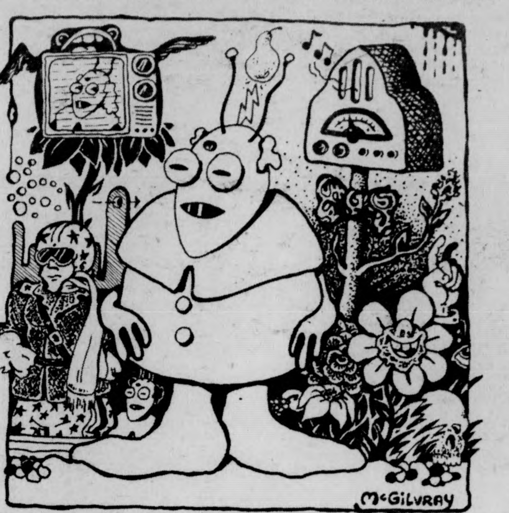
by David Miller

EVERYTHING YOU KNOW IS WRONG
The Firesign Theater
Columbia KC 33141
Total Playing Time: 42:00

It happens every time. The New Firesign Album arrives and I wind up saying the same things as I did the last time. "This album is the most this, this album is the most that, and the biggest since Bozos—Dwarf—Not Insane." Well, I'll tell ya, I'm right every time, but I'm also wrong every time because they generally top themselves with every new release. So it is that Everything You Know Is Wrong has been sitting on my turntable for near two weeks before I can begin these self-indulgent lines to you. 'Cause I'm not hot-doggin' ya — this record is the scariest and most dramatically powerful of all of the group's work to date, with a mix of comedy and gravity which ought to please anyone who's ever enjoyed the Firesign Theatre.

Our guide and narrator is Dr. "Happy" Harry Cox, Jr., trailer park resident and explorer into the unknown , the originator of such mind-breaking records as Strangers At Our Door and Gas Music From Jupiter. He's investigating rumors and suspicions that the aliens have landed among us (as a matter of fact, the folks in the trailer next door are aliens), but first he's got some things to fill us in on. We're talking about altered consciousness, not just psychedelic, but social and historical as well. There are a lot of things that we don't know; facts and experiences which have occurred and been real; but our carefully structured worldviews won't let them in. As a result of this distortion, everything we do know is wrong, or out of its true context. When you realize that our American Forefathers smoked dope, what do you then think about the Revolution? "Happy" Harry Cox knows about this consciousness conflict, and much of Side 1 is given to Cox' historical exploration of facts and experience which we don't know, including an Indian wire recording of a performance of "Doctor Firesign's Eclectic Buffalo Show" at the end of the last century, a demonstration which ended with the unintended but irrevocable consciousness-expansion of the two "medicine" hucksters, Drs. Archer and Bowman.

But Cox has more to talk about than that, and Everything You Know is much more than an elaborate lecture. Cox has also been checking out stories of appearances of aliens, stories in existence for about a century now. In this he is aided by "The Mindboggler" Nino Savatte (who's mind broadcasting from a steel box in Russia) and his nudist landlord Art Wholeflaffer. His evidence includes newspaper stories, an episode of the TV travelogue "The Golden Hind", and recorded messages left with his answering service. And while he's on the trail of that puzzle (Have the Aliens landed among us? What do they want?), there's also the problem of daredemon Rebus Knebus and his leap into the center of the earth. It seems that a huge comet has burrowed its way toward the center, and Knebus intends to jump in. Only one problem: there's supposed to be a sun at the center, and Knebus might not make it back.



Well, naturally things tie together somewhat. Just as Cox and Wholeflaffer are uncovering proof of an alien culture, Knebus discovers a paradise at the center of the earth. And just after all of human civilization has followed Knebus in to Fresh Air and Breakfast, the real extraterrestrials land, greet the solitary Cox and ask where everyone went.

OK, so we are under attack from Superior Consciousness and that is what Everything You Know Is Wrong hinges on. Once again bending an old cliche to their own purposes, the Firesign Theatre has taken the usually scary image of an alien invasion and made it into a positive metaphor for new and unifying systems of thought and perception. Thus the comet which burrows into the earth is not (as in so many Sci-Fi movies) a source of destruction, but the source of a pathway to heaven; the resident and currently "Invading" alien cultures are not potential slavemasters but new sources of enlightenment; and our worldviews, if they don't take these new alternatives into account, are not only incomplete but (along with our knowledge) wrong.

Recorded at the Warner Bros. facilities in Burbank, the production of Everything You Know Is Wrong is superb. Worth noting especially is the background music, licensed through something called "Music Industries" and first used by the group on Phil Austin's Roller Maidens From Outer Space. The dramatic structure of the record is tight, with scenes shifting back and forth, delaying the climaxes until they cannot be contained; the settings are within the media, as is always appropriate for our time. Comedy continues throughout the record; old Firesign fans should especially appreciate the Bear Whiz Beer and Magog Bros. commercials, as well as the whole "Golden Hind" sequence. Firesign "analysts" (such as myself) will discover several important trains of thought continued from the preceding albums, especially those beginning with TV Or Not TV.

Everyone will be Freeked Out. Our brain is not the boss; there is no one to blame and nobody to scare! And there are still many things we don't know.

—Your Sacred Cowboy

Everything You Know Is Wrong
Firesign Theater
(Columbia KC 33134)
Playing Time: 41:58

This is no record; this is real. Too Fucking Real, if you ask me. The Firesigns have always been ones for tinkering with media, but this time they've gone too far. I hope.

It's just a little bit too weird a coincidence that this album should come out the same week, and in many cases the same day, as the big UFO story in the news a couple of weeks back. If it had been just any typical UFO-sighting type story I could have written it off as a Firesign-of-the-times, a cosmic quirk; but the correspondences between news story and album force me to suspect, and indeed, to honestly hope, that this is some sort of hoax for album publicity purposes.

The news items alleges that the government has been in possession of the wreckage of a crash-landed UFO, and the twelve or fourteen bodies found therein, since around the late 1940's; the bodies are little and blue. The aliens of Everything You Know Is Wrong are likewise little and blue (Gee, they don't look bluish), and, according to one source within the 'documentary' context of the album, a large group of them have been living out in the Arizona desert since ... 1949.

The news story also predicts that the government will confirm the story in mid-December and further, will ask the nations of the world not to fire upon UFO's in the future because they are friendly. The Firesign album's back cover features the Theater members grouped around a "Welcome Aliens" booth which also sports a banner which reads, "The Inter-Galactic Friendship Convention." Well, seekers, all of us want to know, just as much as I want to know: Who's responsible?

I hope to God the Firesigns started all this; I hope so for their sake. How would you like to be in their shoes right now if they didn't? How do you know they wear any? Don't accept blue moss from strangers.

forever an act, a dumb act

In Concert:
THE CHRIS RHODES BAND
June Millington and Second Wind
Hampshire College
Nov. 15

Most concerts get off to a late start — but this late? What was publicized to begin at 8:30 actually got started at 10:45, with June Millington and Second Wind, and The Chris Rhodes Band didn't take stage until 12:50.

As if that in itself wasn't enough, there were horrendous sound system hassles (the cause of the initial delay, supposedly) that plagued the entire evening and, to my mind, utterly destroyed what could have been a truly worthwhile event.

I could say that the entire mess was outrageous, amateurish and inexcusable, but why should I be nice about it? Actually, the people in charge seemed to be trying their best to deal with the apparently insurmountable problems.

The warm-up band's set was laid waste by the poorest quality sound mix imaginable, causing them to resort to obviously unrehearsed improvisational material that they were evidently uncomfortable with. And, to the indifference of of the audience, they trodded on. Perhaps some other time.

During the commotion (a surprisingly well-attended commotion, by the way) I made way to the "press room", where I found guitarist David Landau and the sax player for Chris Rhodes working on the opening number. I couldn't believe my ears. They were tightening up some really inventive lines, and fulfilling my wildest jazz fantasies. And what an amazing guitar player! I knew right then all the hassles will have been worth it — they were going to come out soon and absolutely blow the audience away in amazement.

It's ten minutes to one and The Chris Rhodes Band is on stage — go! Wait a second, why does everything sound so muffled? Oh my God I can't hear the guitar player! The crowd in front of the stage is dancing — they must be able to hear something. The sound system crackles, then everything sounds good. At last — see I told you they were gonna be dynamite! What happened to the vocals? Not again.

Since I'd already been there for five hours, and a few songs later the sound system was still terrorizing us, I left, unable to bear seeing the superb Chris Rhodes Band victimized. I hope things got better after I left. Nevertheless don't you dare ever miss hearing Chris Rhodes.

Live Music:
Sonny Terry and Brownie McGee
The Rusty Nail
Nov. 17, 1974

Sonny Terry and Brownie McGee put on nothing less than a great show Sunday nite at The Rusty Nail. There was some doubt that it would come off though as someone had the poor foresight to place Fat and their highly-amplified music on the same bill with the slightly amplified blues sound of Sonny and Brownie (and Candy McDonald on drums). But, as it turned out, the dancers ended up sitting on the dance floor and totally appreciating these famed blues men.

Their history is basically unimportant to the new-comer, but it is interesting to know that Sonny (World's best harp player and showman) used to play with Woody Guthrie, Cisco Huston, and others, and joined up with Brownie and guitar (which he still plays though it is pretty taped up) around 1940.

What is important is their inherent ability to radiate (even the AEC couldn't ignore their gammas). From the time the almost-blind Sonny was led to the stage and gave us one of his laughs with his hands held straight up in the air, everyone knew their geiger counters would be blown off the scale. What's amazing about these men is that their records give off the same great feelings of two dudes having a hell of a time playing their music (the blues with a smile). I had a chance to meet these men after the show, but because they were tired and, more importantly, because I felt that I already knew them from their records (their old ones are hard to find, but keep trying), I felt that a few hellos would be basically meaningless.

The thing that is most appealing about their music is that it isn't all straight blues. They tell stories, before and during songs. Sonny layed a good one on us Sunday before he sang "Mah Baby Change da Lock on da Doh." In other songs, on their discs, like "God and Man", they take parts and weave a story through the song. Or they can be just whoopin it up like Sonny showed us on "Sonny's Thing". He said "Dar's 25 different hoots in dis thang", and he preceded to show us his hoots and fantastic hand motions that bring added enjoyment to his harp playing.

It was a testament to their music that just 20 minutes after bodies had been flailing to Fat, these same people were sitting and singing along with Brownie on "Walkin Blues", a song which they added new verses to from the LP version. I highly recomment their latest LP which is had easily on A&M records. It's You Bring Out the Boogie in Me and, among other people besides Sonny and Brownie, it includes John Mayall, Arlo Guthrie, and Sugarcane Harris.

DUCKS DELUXE — DUCKS DELUXE (RCA LPL1-5008) time 39:30

Funny deal hear, as this is the way Chuck Berry and Velvet Underground are played in bars in these decade decadence 70's. Where before the good old English lads would listen to Chuck and Muddy Waters and then go out and play in groups called Yardbirds and Bluesbreakers and try to be like their inspirators, these ducks use (need?) a shine, a sheen to go along with their Roxy-mannered vocals, flash-splash playing a good humor. Thang is, these guys are smarter than your avg. blues rocker and therefore got more of a View on the sitch. Don't mean they hafta play better tho', but they do in spots. Hot Pub Rock, marred mainly by a lack of definite personality. An 'almost ducky' C+.

DEATH WISH — HERBIE HANCOCK (Original Soundtrack Recording) (Columbia PC 33199) time 40:31

Herbie's new found 'music to listen to without paying attention' (Head Hunters, Thrust) suits him well here, as he has crafted a soundtrack that is as even-edged and congenial as your usual Quincy Jones conglam-glomeration.

Not to say Herbie's fallen to the bland level of Quince, but a lot of Death Wish's music sounds in the 'great' "turn off your mind, relax and float downstream — let the music say it for you" Hollywood tradition. Now this of course benefits film as narrow-minded and socially ill-at-ease as Death Wish. However, the possibilities for expansion are outlined in the title theme, a swirling expanse of lines and tensing emotions that sums up the entire potential of film, which does throw some good gut punches along the way. The rest of the time is spent in the 'here he moves there' syndrome. Wait for the single. A well-done plerg C+.

THE MAD CAT

Don't let it rain on my kitty. How absurd. That fucking cat really pains me in the ass. Strutting around as the 'almighty highness' after she was pregnant seemed like the only right thing to do. After all, she had seen it all. Now.

There it goes again. Lying on her back with her bent paws waving "Hi", demanding attention; receiving praise; laughing at those who try to 'humanize' her. Sure enough. "Oh, look at Kitty. Ain't she so cute when she tries to act sexy?" Turns the old bag on.

Got enough kicks yet, cat? Must have. Going down cellar. It must either be getting sick of this old lady or going down cellar to get warmed up. Jump on the washer, then jump on the water pipes, then crawl along the water pipes to the furnace pipes. Big deal. You might think the cat finally decided to talk to us as the old lady said she did one night while it was napping. What a laugh.

Fifty-five bucks tied up for the cat's bed and she sleeps down on a furnace pipe. I'll fix her.

Comfort Table

HOME COMFORT RESTAURANT
by Frederic C. Weiss

When Elliott Blinder and his friends moved to the Greenfield area a few years ago, they couldn't find a place to go out and eat tasty natural food. In response to this, they opened up Home Comfort Restaurant at 25 Bank Row in Greenfield.

It is difficult enough to get a total picture of any restaurant in one surprise visit. This problem is even more acute in the case of Home Comfort, because the restaurant is so versatile, serving different types of food throughout the week. On Wednesdays they serve international cuisine (from Italy, China, France or Mexico). On weekends the menu is standard, dealing with dishes like eggplant parmigiana or shrimp et scallop newburg. Whenever you go, you are missing some of their specialties.

We went on the night they were serving "Cuisine of China". Starting with such appetizers as Spinach Soup, Braised Eggplant Salad, and Sweet and Punget Cabbage Rolls, the food was clearly in the tradition of Home Comfort: well prepared, complementing each other, and surprisingly tasting like the original ingredients. The latter cannot be taken for granted. In many Chinese restaurants there are so many chemicals (like MSG) that after you eat something you find yourself saying "that was..."). For better or worse, you can never say that about Home Comfort.

For example, I didn't like the Braised Eggplant Salad; I felt it was too soggy, and not tasty enough. In fairness I must point out that I don't like eggplant normally, and Carolyn Hull-Ryde, who reviewed the restaurant with me, thoroughly enjoyed the Eggplant salad. Both the soup and Pungent Cabbage rolls are warm and yummy.

For the main course we had Deep Fried Szechuan Fish ($2.75 a la carte, $3.95 for the dinner). Both were well-prepared and quite tasty, but we felt that the Fried Szechuan Fish, although cheaper, is much better. Quite simply, there isn't enough to the Sweet and Sour Shrimp to justify such a lofty price.

The fried Szechuan fish is not as, good as the fried seaweed of New York Chinatown fame, but for Greenfield it is just fine. Both dishes were especially cooked for each person (no food just hanging around waiting to be ordered).

The meal was filling, and by the time that we got to dessert we were hesitant. However after some pondering, we ordered pumpkin pie and walnut pie. The latter was terrific, and if you go up to Home Comfort don't miss it. Note: the apple pie also looked quite good.

Home Comfort is a nice place to go to. But while the place is homey, there is nothing homey about the price. An evening at Home Comfort can take a chunk of money out of your pocket. To eat as well as we did would cost you ten dollars for two people. Also, the restaurant's location (20 miles north of Amherst) creates the situation of having to go there, and not just drop in.

The best nights for students are Thursday night when they show movies while you eat, or on Monday night, when there is live entertainment. It is hard to keep up with the menu because every day there is something new. Perhaps it is best to call Elliott Blinder at 774-3930, and he'll tell you just what is going on.

Freedom of the Press

by Luis Manuel Medina
Photography by Bill Howell

Freedom of the Press is a column intended to present different opinions from people working and-or connected in some aspects with any type of mass communications. As the readers can be aware, Freedom of the Press was born with the American Revolution, and had become a distinctive aspect of this society.

Dean Tucker - Executive Editor - Daily Collegian. Former Editor - Harvinger Gardner Community College.

"I think at the present time the press have more morality than government institutions have."

"In mass media I prefer newspapers, especially the editorial pages, because I think that in the most part it: 1. Presents the opinions of each writer. 2. Has more intellectual value than the new stories. 3. Some people like pool, but I like to read writers' opinions."

In molding public opinion — "I'm not very satisfied in the way that free enterprise works. I think it is not as free as the name suggests. Very large business organizations mislead the public a great deal, taking great advantages of the wealth to guide the opinion with few considerations to the common man."

"We need to make public influence in the opinion and editorial pages."

Bill Densmore — Managing editor - Collegian.

In molding public opinion: "The newspaper should report as many issues, as should be important."

On Campus issues: "The most important thing is to reconcile if the university is going to be like Harvard as an institution of quality and not quantity. For students in general, the dorms and dining commons and how the classes are."

On Non-Campus news: "What we are going to do concerning the energy crisis, how we are going to do about a generation of shortages."

Jerry Lazar — Collegian's Editor-In-Chief

The Collegian "should represent the student voice perspective in UMass life, culturally, politically."

"I think any newspaper is responsible to its audience to inform, entertain and persuade. Theoretically, a newspaper is to inform and tell what to do and present all points of view and editorialize, molding public opinion on their many roles, not only reflected in the community, but to lead the community."

Fred Weiss — Collegian Columnist - Below The Salt - Assistant Editor

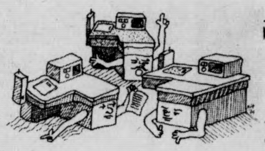
"Freedom of the press means giving newspapers the right to print whatever they feel is relevant to their readers.

"The reader's question is: 'What is relevant?' a hard question to answer directly. But briefly it is to publish the news that affects the people who read the paper, and have as much other news as possible."

"On the other hand, newspapers must be responsible for what they print. The word 'freedom' doesn't give any paper the right to libel any individual.

"Perhaps the most important thought, because it is so rare indeed, is that in covering the news, newspapers must remain independent from outside pressure groups for the same reason that the Government cannot blatantly censor anyone. Small, but powerful interest groups, should not be able to 'censor' news coverage indirectly."

Copi Machineachine



The following letter was found in our office by Elan Dresher.

To the editors:

I wish to register a complaint concerning the three copy machines in the University library. It is not just that these machines do not work properly. I claim that they are in collusion to rob and humiliate the public that they are supposed to serve.

Several days ago I badly needed to copy an article. The hour was late, the copy services were closed. I went to the machine on the first floor. Please copy this article — there was no answer, it wouldn't even take my money. A clever ploy, I found out later, to rattle me and put me off my guard as I approached the machine on the second floor.

The second machine was humming, its buttons were lit. Thank God! Here is a quarter, please copy this article — the machine took the money, did a little dance, and stopped. Maybe it's stuck, I thought in my head. Here is another quarter, please copy this article. This time, it not only kept the money, but in addition it tore up the first page of the article. Then be damned, damn you, I don't need you, I cried, and then I realized that I had but one machine left. I was now at the mercy of the last copy machine.

The third and last machine is high on the twenty-first floor. You have to go out of your way to reach this machine. It knows that if you come to it, you have already tried the other two machines. It knows that only desperate people will bother to make the trip just to get something copied.

The third machine did not look eager to copy. "I only copy articles that I like," the machine told me.

Shocked, I answered: "Your job is to copy what we give you."

"Perhaps you would like to try the machine on the second floor instead?" the machine smiled. I showed it the article.

"Maybe I'll copy it — I stress maybe, the machine said blandly. "By the way, I only take nickels."

"Nickels? Only nickels?" I was outraged. "This is a thirty page article. Who walks around with thirty nickels?"

"If you don't like the way I do my job, I just might resign completely," the machine snorted. "Say, I bet you need that copied pretty badly, don't you? Maybe the other machines will do it for you."

I was licked. I took the elevator down and went out on Pleasant Street begging for nickels. It was a cold night. The wind was blowing. It was raining. My article got wet.

Why does the University tolerate such things? The library staff is obviously intimidated by the machines. When asked, they will refuse to reveal the truth about them. Is the first floor machine broken? They don't know — "It was working yesterday, I think" is the reply. Does the machine on the twenty-first floor make change? "I don't know. I think so." Do you have change, just in case? "No." Do you know where I can get change? "No." Hasn't anyone complained about this before? "I don't know. No. Excuse me, I have work to do."

Of course, there have been complaints, and library staffers have good reason not to want to discuss them. Last year, three students wrote a letter to the Collegian complaining about the machines. Since then, they have "withdrawn" from the University. Their whereabouts are unknown. Another student who complained publicly has also disappeared. Authorities say she is taking her junior year abroad, but it's easy to see through that one — she's not a junior. A member of the administration who circulated a memorandum proposing to revamp the entire copy service of the library was shortly afterward sent to Brazil on a university advisory commission. He was soon arrested on trumped up espionage charges, and his name has recently appeared in an Amnesty International report on torture. The memorandum has been forgotten. The administration refuses to discuss the matter. The police will not investigate.

What is the source of the power that these machines have? How they have been able to go on year after year, silencing all who dared oppose them? Their chief weapons are our fear and our silence. For we outnumber them, seven thousand to one. The time has come to stand up to the machines. We must refuse to carry nickels; we must refuse to be intimidated; we must unite to drive these nefarious machines out of our community. I, for one, will work unceasingly toward that end.

Sincerely,
John Zolaski, Pierpont

Postscript: We attempted to contact Mr. Zolaski in roder to discuss certain parts of his letter with him, but we have been unable to reach him. He has not been seen in his dormitory, or in any of his classes. His friends, who wish to remain anonymous, do not know where he is. Administration officials insist that no one by that name has ever been registered at this University. We have been advised to drop the matter. The machines remain as they were.

"The left will finally succeed when they find a mimeograph machine that works."

DRAGON FLY — JEFFERSON STARSHIP (RCA BFLI - 0717)

Total Playing time: 42:00

The dwindling number of Jefferson Airplane hanger-oners are in for another schizoid offering. It seems that whenever Kantner, Slick or the entire Starship conglom (here including John Barbata, David Freiberg, Papa John, Pete Sears, and Craig Chaquico) get the inspiration to really get behind what they're doing, it's only short lived and surrounded by overly familiar, repetitious drivel.

None of the post-Airplane efforts, individually or collectively have come close to having that something extra which abounded from Surrealistic Pillow, After Bathing At Baxters and Crown of Creation. Aaaah, those were days. So in the tradition of Manhole, Baron von Tollbooth and so forth, Dragon Fly has its moments of being good, of being tolerable, and of being bad.

"Ride The Tiger" is a beautiful ethno-cultural love song with typical but exciting music by Kantner, and "All Fly Away" is an infectious time-space fantasy with lovely vocals. Otherwise, the songs, while instrumentally smooth, are ultimately unexciting and at times shallow. "Caroline", a Kantner-Balin composition featuring long-lost Marty Balin on vocals is a disappointing drag, with a lyrical and spiritual naivety which befit the sixties but is dated and out of place today.

Grace Slick is still singing well, though it seems as if she is trying too hard at times, and both Chaquico's guitar work and Papa John's fiddling are impressively tasty. The Starship are known for their live shows and should release a concert album which would assuredly be more fulfilling than their continuing series of half-flights.

An "I never grade 'em" B-.

THAT'S ENTERTAINMENT

Reviewed by Judith Wolinsky-Soloway

Not many movies can boast a cast that includes a 12-year old Judy Garland, Clark Gable singing and dancing, Esther Williams swimming with Jimmy Durante and Gene Kelly dancing with Jerry, the Mouse of the Tom and Jerry cartoon fame. But then the MGM lion has finally reached his 50th birthday, and what would be a nicer birthday present than to put all these stars into one film.

The newspaper ads announce "boy do we need it now," as if the depression and breadlines are just around the corner and there are no escapist, fantasy films, like those popular in the 1930's. True, there is an appalling lack of film musicals these days, but today's audiences wouldn't sit through vapid plots of college "rah-rah" campus days or scenes of cowboys singing while the stagecoach rides into town.

What was most interesting about watching That's Entertainment was learning about the history of American film musicals through "mini-lectures" with examples, by such leading figures as Frank Sinatra, Michey Rooney, Debbie Reynolds, Fred Astaire, Gene Kelly, and Elizabeth Taylor (yes, there are even two scenes of her singing!).

Did you know that the first all-dancing, all-singing musical was made in 1929 and featured the song "Singing in the Rain" (a song which popped up in several MGM musicals)? Or that when "sound films" became the wave of the future, many silent film actors who, it turned out, lisped or had foreign accents lost their jobs? This led to the influx of stage actors from "back East" seeking stardom.

Because of the immense popularity of musicals in the 1930's, serious actors and actresses found themselves in musicals due to contractual arrangements. Few even reached the high level of mediocrity.

That's Entertainment showed such actors and actresses as Jean Harlow (Reckless), James Stewart (Born to Dance), Clark Gable (Idiot's Delight), and Joan Crawford (Dancing Lady) making determined efforts.

Who can forget all those Andy Hardy movies with Mickey Rooney and Judy Garland? One of the best edited segments of That's Entertainment was a collage of scenes from these films, several of which were directed by Busby Berkely.

What movie about Hollywood musicals would be complete without the perfection, class, and creativity of such master performers as Gene Kelly and Fred Astaire? Whether their partners were Ginger Rogers, a coatrack, Leslie Caron, or each other, they were always flawless.

Two classic scenes in American cinema, both included in That's Entertainment are Kelly's dream sequence in An American in Paris, considered to be MGM's masterpiece, and his rendition of "Singing in the Rain" in the picture of the same title. The full perspective of these two works on a full-size screen but loses that perspective on a late-night television show, which unfortunately is about the only place they can now be viewed.

Because of the short sequences, it was hard for the audience to get involved in a scene. Instead the audience could look at the costumes, makeup, (remember red lips and fingernails), and whether Garland was really concentrating on a scene — (she was in the Wizard of Oz!)

There was a note of sadness in the midst of the merriment. The once thriving huge backlot of MGM, where a New York Street sat next to a French chateau, is now the site of high-rise buildings and decaying lots.

Movie scenes, such as from Good News with Peter Lawford and The Bandwagon with Astaire were followed by the performers talking to the audience in front of what remains today of the sets used in the movies.

The film might have a family look, after all, Judy Garland, daughter Liza Minelli, husband Vincente Minelli, and Jack Haley all appear or are mentioned in the film. That is because Jack Haley Jr., Liza's husband is the editor, writer, and director of That's Entertainment.

In spite of what some critics might call nepotism, Haley has done an admirable job. He sifted through thousands of feet of film and included many outstanding moments that are part of the history of musical films.

Whether or not MGM can match its past accomplishments in film musicals is debatable. What it does have is a righ history captured on film.

That's Entertainment . . .

"rich history captured on film . . ."

The heads of residence of John Quincey Adams dormitory are currently in the process of obtaining search warrants from the student attorney general in order to search dorm rooms and confiscate furniture taken from dorm lounges.

Orchard Hill Area Government was prevented from conducting room searches due to a restraining order brought against them by Student Senator David Pike through the student judiciary. The search will be conducted during intercession when "students are not renting the rooms," said Pike.

According to Student Attorney General Cindy Iris, obtaining a search warrant or waiting until intercession are the only legal methods of searching rooms and repossessing furniture.

Iris stressed that the warrant must go through the proper channels and be issued to authorized officials. "In asking for a warrant," she said, "they must show 'probable cause'.

"This means that a floor counselor must sign a statement declaring that he saw lounge furniture in a particular room.

"I can issue a warrant to an area director," she continued, "or even a head of residence, although that's stretching it a bit. I can't give one to a floor counselor."

Iris can not issue a House Warrant which would be a blanket entry into all rooms, although there is a possibility of a corridor warrant. It is more likely that individual warrants will be issued after probable cause for particular rooms is shown.

'Due Notice' must also be given dorm residents after the warrant is issued. This is usually four or five days.

"I'm impressed that people are willing to take the right steps," said Iris. "Before they were just searching rooms with no legal authority to do so."

The three heads of residence are Phil Chanin of Lower JQA, Eileen Stewart of Middle, and Jean Davis of Upper.

According to them, dorm furniture in private rooms was not a problem in past semesters. "The situation became acute this fall," said Davis.

In explaining why they decided to get a warrant rather than wait until intercession, Chanin said, "We've been trying to do something about it for about a month. The sooner we get this over with, the better."

"There were at least eight couches in one of the lounges in the beginning of the year," he continued, "and now there aren't any."

Stewart said, "I think most people would say they'd prefer to have the furniture in the lounges, rather than in individual rooms."

She said her floor counselors were willing to sign a probable cause statement.

The heads of residence stated that all the floors voted on whether to allow furniture from lounges to remain in individual rooms.

"If people keep taking furniture back after it has been taken from them," said Chanin, "we'll have to find another way."

Student Senator Pike said he is presenting an amendment to SGA which would bar area governments from searching rooms.

"A university official would have to get a search warrant," he explained.

"I hope this isn't over yet," Pike said. "I hope someone picks it up."

Money woes mount

Compiled From Wires

Prices rose again in October, wages shrank further and thousands more people lost their jobs, according to government and industry reports yesterday.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported the Consumer Price Index rose 0.9 per cent in October and 12.2 per cent over the past 12 months.

Prices in the past year rose three times faster than the 1970-71 inflation that led to wage-price controls. It was also the highest inflation rate since 1947 when the end of World War II price controls sent consumer prices up 9 per cent.

The government said the purchasing power of average workers was down 0.3 per cent from September and 4.9 per cent from October, 1973, despite pay increases, averaging 8.8 per cent.

Average weekly earnings of $158.84 last month could buy $103.68 worth of goods after adjustment for inflation and taxes. In October, 1973, average weekly earnings of $147.63 could buy $108.07 worth of goods.

Chrysler Corp., which has already announced plans to idle 64,200 factory workers before Christmas, confirmed yesterday it will lay off "substantial numbers" of white collar workers.

Chrysler spokesmen said the exact numbers of clerical and other white collar workers who will be laid off had not been determined.

But United Auto Workers Vice President Douglas A. Fraser said a figure of about 15,000 might not be too far off.

Higher prices for food, automobiles, clothing and housing were behind the increase in consumer prices, the Labor Department said.

Some prices did decline in October, notably for meat, which was down 1 per cent, and gasoline down 2.7 per cent to an average of 53 cents a gallon for regular and 57 cents for premium. Fresh fruit prices also fell.

But over-all food prices increased 1.3 per cent in October, with prices of cereals, bakery products, eggs, prepared foods, sweets and non-alcoholic beverages leading the way.

Food prices in October were 11.9 per cent above a year earlier, the Labor Department said.

The consumer price index in October stood at 153.2 of the 1967 average of 100, meaning that goods which cost $100 in 1967 now cost on the average $153.20.

New auto prices were up 4.5 per cent unadjusted in October, and 1.1 per cent adjusted. Clothing prices were up nine-tenths of one per cent unadjusted and one-tenth of one per cent adjusted.

In other economic developments yesterday:

— General Motors said it will suspend production at 9 of its 22 U.S. auto assembly plants for from one to two weeks in December, laying off some 30,000 workers.

— A United Auto Workers official predicted deep layoffs in the auto industry after Jan. 1 that could push the number of idle workers above the 150,000 that will be out of work before Christmas. Industry analysts concede layoffs will be substantial because of the 1.6 million unsold cars — enough to last 80 days at current sales rates.

— The U.S. Labor Department says retail prices increased 2.2 per cent for consumer goods in the past three months in the Boston metropolitan area.

— The Ford Motor Co., which earlier this week quietly increased average prices of its cars by $75, said it was dropping the price of its two-door subcompact Pinto by $150 to stimulate lagging sales.

— New labor contracts covering 4.7 million workers to be negotiated in 1975 will probably include basic wage increases of at least 10 to 12 per cent, the government's top labor mediator said.

UMass students join in nationwide fasts

From Wire And Staff Reports

Thousands of Massachusetts students and Americans around the nation joined at least 3,000 UMies yesterday in a "Fast for a World Harvest" sponsored by two international famine relief groups.

A "hunger banquet" was scheduled for last night at MIT to end a day of fasting there and at up to a dozen other Boston colleges, including Harvard, Wellesley, Boston College and Boston University.

Oxfam-America, one of the famine groups which will collect and send food to drought ravaged areas of Africa, said about 200,000 persons nationwide participated in the fast. About 5,000 students participated in Boston, and another 1,000 fasted at Holy Cross College in Worcester.

Winchester High School enlisted sponsors to donate money for each hour students there went without food. But an Oxfam spokesman said there was no exact figure on the amount of money that would be collected.

In May, $150,000 was raised in a less well-publicized effort.

Officials of Oxfam-America and Project Relief nationwide, co-sponsors of the fast, said half a billion people are chronically malnourished around the world and "half of these are children, whose growth and mental ability are being permanently affected."

Nathan Grey, a national Oxfam spokesman said there was no way to tell how many participated nationally. "When the figure comes from us it's always conservative. We can hardly handle the phone calls. We've got friends of friends calling friends," he said.

Gary Goodrich, Boston coordinator for the campaign, said 250,000 participated based "on calls we've gotten from schools, both high schools and colleges. Also a smaller number of businesses, churches and small town newspapers from Atlanta to San Francisco have been phoning in all week," he added.

Gray said governors in Tennessee and Utah issued declarations of fasting for the day. Oxfam blames part of the world food problem on the fact that Americans eat too much meat. It takes about eight pounds of grain to make one pound of beef.

At UMass, about $4,200 is to be donated to Oxfam because on-campus UMies chose not to eat 5,615 meals yesterday. At the five colleges up to 1,000 more students were reported to have fasted yesterday.

Meanwhile, a Collegian campaign to raise money at UMass for famine plagued areas of the world moved into its third day yesterday.

By Tuesday of next week, a table will be set up in the Campus Center concourse to collect donations from commuting students who will not be solicited via a dorm-by-dorm canvas by Collegian staffers next week.

The Collegian is seeking $1 from every UMass student, according to news editor Mike Kneeland. Kneeland has put aside his duties as news editor to head the campaign.

Donations will be given to Oxfam-America, Kneeland said.

Miller defends new contract

CHARLESTON, W. VA. [UPI] — United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller came home to the coalfields yesterday to defend a proposed new contract he said was excellent but widely misunderstood by striking miners.

"I think it's fair to say the rand-and-file membership of our union don't know what is in it," he said.

But Miller said no when asked if the brief visit to his home state was an effort to circumvent the union Bargaining Council's directive of Wednesday to seek changes in the proposed agreement with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association.

Miller, after holding a news conference, returned to Washington, D.C., for consultations with the council to determine when to return to the bargaining table. An aide said talks would probably resume today or tomorrow.

The strike by 120,000 union members, under way since Nov. 12, was expected to drag well into December because of the delay in submitting the tentative agreement, reached last week, to the rank-and-file.

Veterans expected for conference

By JOE COTTER

Progressive News Service

Some 500 veterans are expected to attend the Northeast Conference of Veterans being held in the Student Union tomorrow. The conference is an attempt to "form a more cohesive framework of New England Vets", according to Pat Power of the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs.

"We hope to provide an exchange of information on the availability of alternatives to the existing inadaquate programs", he said. "The conference will also be geared toward those veterans in the community who aren't exposed to centers of information such as those you find in a university."

The Veterans Coalition sent speaking invitations to the Presidential Clemency Board; Senator Vance Hartke, head of the Senate Veterans Committee; Commissioner Boone, past head of the Mass. Department of Corrections; and all 16 of the U.S. Representatives and Senators in Massachusetts.

None of these people will attend.

Pat Power explained how their negative responses re-enforced an attitude that many vets hold toward Washington. "I think it's typical of what the veteran has received since the inception of the Vietnam War" he said. "We are tired of getting the run around concerning our problems from a rhetorical group of paper shufflers. Before the elections we received numerous verbal agreements for attendance, but now that the elections are over it's a whole different story. All of a sudden prior committments have arisen for these individuals. What it amounts to is that we are forced to organize ourselves with no help from congressional leaders or traditional veterans organizations."

However the conference will have speakers and workshops covering everything from jobs and upgrading discharges to vets movement history, organizing and lobbying.

"We would especially look forward to seeing people from the community who are not veterans" said Power, "as many of the workshops concern all people, particularly those on prisons, tenants, amnesty, racism and sexism. We hope to remove some of the stereo-types people have of the Vietnam Vet as a killer and a drug addict."

The list of attending speakers includes a representative from the Gold Star Mothers for Amnesty.

There will also be representatives from the State and National VA offices, State and National Departments of Labor, Urban Planning Aid of Boston and the Local AFL-CIO as well as three inmates from the Hampshire County House of Correction.

The conference will begin at 9 a.m. with an informal meeting in the Cape Cod Lounge. The speakers will address the conference in the Student Union Ballroom at 10 a.m. and the workshops will be scattered between the Colonial Lounge, the Commuter Lounge, the Cape Cod Lounge, and the Dukes Room for the remainder of the day. Schedules are available in the Veterans Coalition office (411 Student Union).

Playboy director says competent people needed

By PAUL BRADLEY
Staff Reporter

Donald L. Parker, director of training for Playboy Enterprises, said in a recent speech that there is a real need for competent people to fill management roles in the business world. Speaking before about 200 School of Business Administration students and faculty as the keynote speaker at the SBA's Career Conference held yesterday in the Campus Center, Parker said business "really needs effective management people and today's students are in a good position to fill these needs."

Parker said business needs people who want to be held "accountable and responsible for their actions and careers. He encouraged students to "steer their own careers and not simply be a victim of circumstance."

Speaking about his own company, Parker said the hospitality business "is an industry that has a tremendous potential" for young people and noted that there are currently over 100 management trainees on the payroll at Playboy.

Parker also encouraged students interested in the management end of business to try to get practical experience in a business establishment so that they can apply the theories that they have learned in the classroom.

He said students should seek a job close to the one that they really want, but that they should not expect a "perfect" job, but instead be willing to learn from other jobs before advancing in their own fields.

Parker spoke as the guest of the SBA Ungraduate Advisory Council, sponsors of the Career Conference. According to Phil Verdi, a member of the Council, the conference gives SBA students "the chance to interact with members of the business community. They can learn more than they do in class, because they can apply theories that they have learned."

The Conference consisted of seminars with members of the business world. Students had the opportunity to meet with the guests on an informal basis, as well as hear prepared remarks and hold group discussions. Any recruiting was done on a strictly informal basis.

Guests at the conference included representatives from Merrill-Lynch, Polaroid, Compton Advertising, the IRS and the Government Accounting Office, as well as local businesses. Representatives discussed what the opportunities in their companies were and the job prospects for the coming year.

UFW boycott discussed

By ELLEN GAVIN
Progressive News Service

A meeting was held yesterday between two Clergymen supporting the UFW boycott of non union grapes and the manager of a Springfield Big Y Supermarket. Rev. Ken Childes and Rev. Jerry Spaford represented 23 Clergymen who had written a letter in support of the grape boycott.

According to Rev. Childes, Bib Y would not reverse their policy of selling non union grapes, however they are negotiating with Steve Rivers, head of the Springfield Boycott Committee and there will be a statement forthcoming.

The meeting grew out of an incident Saturday when five UFW supporters were arrested at the Wilbraham Road Big Y for trespassing and disturbing the peace. The picket was organized because Big Y apparently went back on a verbal agreement they had with the UFW.

Frank Dorman, a member of Clergy and Laity Concerned, was one of those arrested for what he called "an act of civil disobedience protesting the availability of scab grapes at the Big Y."

According to Dorman a group of 20 people were picketing and leafletting outside the store. Five people entered the store, spoke to the manager informing him that they would not leave until the grapes were removed.

The manager contacted the Big Y regional manager who refused to act on their demand.

Thirty minutes later the police arrived and arrested Frank Dorman, Steve Rivers, Kathleen Duffy and Tom and Valerie Booth.

They were locked up in Springfield Jail and bail was set at $35. They remained in jail for 3 or 4 hours.

On Monday they were arraigned, and each of the five pleaded "not guilty." At this point the group was allowed to make a statement concerning their actions. A trial date was set for Dec. 10.

Rally protests forced dorm living

By LAWRENCE KORNFIELD
Staff Reporter

A group of about forty students marched around campus for over an hour yesterday to protest mandatory dorm residence, in a rally sponsored by the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

The police responded by locking all the doors to Whitmore and refusing to let demonstrators in. Several officers were on hand, two on horseback.

Charlie Richardson, one of the demonstration's organizers, said; "It shows that the administrators are afraid of student activism."

Demonstrators marched through the Campus Center three times chanting slogans like "Students United can't be defeated;" and "UMass get off your ass."

Richards said he was not disappointed by the turn out. "This is just the beginning of the fight...It's always hard in the beginning for people to come out and make a statement."

The demands listed in a leaflet passed out by the demonstrators included the abolition of forced dorm living and meal tickets, Student control over dormitories, and University support for rent control.

Selectmen may decide future of cable television

By AL COLARUSSO
Staff Reporter

The future of cable television at UMass will, in all probability, be decided at a meeting of the Amherst Selectmen on Monday, December 2 according to Cable Advisory Committee member John Caldwell.

The Advisory Committee will on this date report to the town's selectmen its assessment of the area's cablevision needs over the next 10 years.

"We want to explain what we think the town should have," said Charles Keenan, another Committee member.

The public meeting of the selectmen will be in the form of a question and answer session. UMass students will have an opportunity to voice their opinions concerning cable television and public access at the University.

The Advisory Committee plans to recommend that five access channels be set aside for schools of higher education in the Amherst area.

UMass would, if the plan is adopted, have complete control over one of the access channels.

This channel would be available for use by anyone of the various student organizations involved in the broadcast media.

The access channel would give interested students a good chance to gain valuable experience in video programming.

Since the December 2 meeting will have an impact on the extent of the cable system at UMass, "a show of force on the part of University students would probably have a favorable influence on the selectmen" according to Caldwell.

Stamp log jam cracking

By CHRIS DILLARD
Staff Reporter

The UMass Food Stamp Program expects to clear up its backlog of applications by the beginning of December, according to John Fisher of the Student Organizing Project. (SOP)

This reversal came about in a telephone conversation with Jerry Dunn of the Springfield Area Office when he told Fisher Friday that the area office would send one of their employees to pick up the applications and to restart the official interviewing.

According to Fisher, the welfare office plans to have the situation cleaned up by December 1. "I take that with a grain of salt, but at least things are moving," he added.

Should the situation get bogged down again, Fisher said a lawsuit would be used to apply pressure to get the situation cleaned up. Fisher explained the lawsuit was a harrassment measure that would be used as a last resort. He said the possibility of a lawsuit was what had probably stimulated the area office to act last Friday.

The lawsuit is ready to go now, Fisher said. "We have enough plaintiffs to go to court. It certainly won't hurt to put pressure on Governor Sargent because it affects everybody on welfare, not just students.

Fisher said a food stamp official told him that interviews by a food stamp employee will still have to be held. This is in addition to the screening interviews conducted by work-study employees in the UMass Food Stamp office. There is a possibility of some sort of mass interview being conducted to speed up the process.

A forward adjustment allowance is also being considered for students whose applications have been delayed by the welfare department. It would allow students to receive a proportionately greater bonus during the first few months of receiving food stamps, as a partial reimbursement for the delay. Then, the student would pay the originally determined amount of money for the monthly supply.

Another option for students suffering from the delay in processing of applications, is an appeal for retroactive food stamps. This procedure takes about two months, but Fisher said he thought students would receive the retroactive stamps. "It is important for people to appeal and to keep us notified."

Fisher said students who are going to be away from the address they have given to the Food Stamp Office for intercession should make arrangements to have their ATP (Authorization To Purchase) forwarded as it is illegal for the U.S. Post Office to do so.

Artist stresses energy, freedom

By ANNE HAMBURGER
Staff Correspondent

Evolution naturally brings us to a higher state of complexity, conserving the previous organization. True or false? Donald Burgy, a conceptual artist who appeared at Herter Hall Tuesday night, believes advanced technology will open the way for greater freedoms.

Segments of three video tapes were shown. In the first Burgy drew an analogy between the functioning of the tree and the functioning of the artist. Before the tape was shown the statements of two artists, Cezanne and Klee, who had previously drawn this analogy, were mentioned.

Burgy restated Klee, "I'm just the trunk of a tree. I take in a kind of energy from my ground. It rises through me, branches out, and becomes something entirely different from what it was.

Burgy stated his concept of the analogy "Trees live by intercepting energy gradients that flow from above as light, and below as nourishment from their roots from the ground. Artists live the same way by intercepting energy gradients that flow from above as money or information and from below as nourishment through their roots."

The first video visually shows Burgy walking through the forest, spouting philosophies on the functioning of the artist in comparison with the tree.

Every artist must confront the nature and rational behind the use of material or medium, to present an idea. In Burgy's first piece, he did not make use of the beauties of video, and the private personal way it exposes emotions. Film could just as easily been used.

In the second video, Burgy philosophized on the artist's relation to evolution. He said, "Art is the forward leading edge of evolution, and he saw the artist as participating in the origination of new ideas for progress. In the second video the audience sees scenes of Burgy discussing his ideas, as well as scenes of a man and woman having intercourse. The video took on an air of absurdity and dry humor, which the audience did not respond to.

Some of the ideas presented are so obvious that to repeat them leads to triteness. Thus, since triteness was not intended on Burgy's part, there was confusion as to whether this dry humor was.

The most interesting ideas conveyed were presented in the third video in which the nature of the artists' involvement with creating, Burgy believes, that if the artist successfully portrays his needs, the art becomes a means for satisfying them.

was discussed, as a pregnant woman was shown taking a bath. He stated, "A man only becomes an artist; to be an artist is to fail at art.

Brite Unklers in an article called "Art and Information brings up an interesting point. There are significant ideas and intelligent ideas just as there are bad paintings and good ones. The time has come it seems, that the new non-object art can be judged in terms other than novelty and artistic license."

One of the things Burgy failed to do can best be said in a statement by Jack Burnham, "The revelation is the essence of the art."

Tuesday night was a combination of "good and bad paintings." What Burgy needed, was less of the interesting ideas that we are all aware of, and more revelations.

Black, white bus boosters hold teach-in

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Pro-busing supporters addressed 100 students here Tuesday night on the issues of busing and racism. The teach-in was organized by the Task Force-Boston School Crisis and was moderated by Michelle Frank of the Center for Racial Understanding at UMass.

The six participants in the panel discussion were: Don Halfkeeny, a member of the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression; Linda Lawrence, a white Hyde Park High student who went down to North Carolina; Victor Texiera, a student who is bussed from Dorchester to Roslindale High; Michael Weir, a black UMass student; Lee Grant, a white mother who is active in the Hyde Park Grass Root Community Group; and Pat Bonner Lyon, a black mother who works with the Task Force on Education.

Issues discussed were: racism and the political machine that enforces it; the need for white parents and white students who are tired of racial violence to stand up against those opposed to busing; the need for unity of black and white people to change the situation in Boston; the need for better quality education in the Boston Schools; and the role UMass students can take in seeing that every child has a right to a quality education.

Halfkeeny explained that anti-Busing people have been organizing for over ten years. He also said "Boston schools in Roxbury and the South end have always had white students in them but there has never been a major problem any more than with white people living in the Black Community.

Weir said "students have been bussed for quite a long time. White students have come into Boston Tech in the very heart of Roxbury for a number of years and that community hasn't been violent and those students were not attacked." He also called for a mass movement of black and white people to support integration.

Linda Lawrence said the Boston School Committee asked the four students not to go to North Carolina. "We (the four students) failed our first term and are failing the second term because of our involvement."

She also described the environment in North Carolina as "incredible. The schools are like college campuses." She also said she brought back a lot of ideas but the School Committee is making it difficult to do anything. "We are pretty much powerless," she said.

Students assaulted with starter gun

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Two youths, using a starter pistol, harrassed students in Cashin dormitory Tuesday night, said Captain Robert Joyce of the UMass Department of Public Safety.

The starter pistol is not a real gun, but resembles one closely, according to Joyce.

"It only fires blanks, but it sure can scare people," he said.

The two youths, who are non-students, were charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, at Hampshire District Court, Wednesday.

The disposition of their cases has not yet been determined, UMass Police said.

Police records also report a two car accident in lot 66 near Mark Meadows Elementary School. There were no injuries. Damages to the vehicles are valued at $700.00.

UMass Police also recovered a stolen motor vehicle Wednesday night.

Officers observed a car in lot 22 without its headlights on. The vehicle started up when police approached it. The officers pursued the car down Rt. 9 to the intersection of Rt. 9 and West St. in Hadley, where the stolen car hit a telephone pole. Two male youths got out of the car and fled on foot.

"We have a pretty good idea who the youths are because of identification left in the car," said Joyce.

Investigation on the case is continuing. Joyce said there will be warrants out for the arrests of the youths shortly.

Nixon told

Dean testimony impeaching

WASHINGTON [AP] — A deeply worried Richard M. Nixon was told in April, 1973 that John W. Dean's disclosures might lead to his impeachment "on the ground that you committed a crime."

Nixon reacted by working out a story to protect himself.

"I have got to put the wagons up around the President," Nixon was heard telling top aide H.R. Haldeman on a tape recording of April 25, 1973, played yesterday for the Watergate cover-up trial jury.

Ironically, what seemed to concern Nixon most was that Dean might have taped a conversation a month earlier, on March 21, when they discussed the blackmail money demands being made on the White House by convicted Watergate burglar E. Howard Hunt, Jr.

"I just wonder if the son-of-a-bitch had a recorder on him," Nixon said. "I didn't notice any, but I wasn't looking."

The playing of four recordings, none made public previously, ended the government's use of tapes as its chief witness against Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman, John N. Mitchell, Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson — all charged with conspiring to cover up White House involvement in the Watergate affair.

Nixon is an unindicted co-conspirator in the case but President Ford's pardon makes him immune from criminal penalty.

Dean, who had been the President's counsel throughout the Watergate turmoil, had gone to prosecutors early in April to spill the whole story.

Part of that story was that Nixon had said in the March 21 conversation that there would be no problem in raising a million dollars to keep the Watergate defendants quiet.

In the first of three April 25 conversations played for the jury Ehrlichman told Nixon, "I think it's entirely conceivable that if Dean is totally out of control and if matters are not handled adroitly that you could get a resolution of impeachment in the Senate."

Nixon said: "That's right."

Ehrlichman continued: "On the ground that you committed a crime and that there is no other legal process available to the United States people other than impeachment. Otherwise, you have immunity from prosecution."

"Right," said Nixon.

Senate overrides Ford vetoes; information bill becomes law

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate yesterday easily overrode vetoes of two major bills, dealing a serious blow to President Ford.

By one-sided margins, the Senate refused to sustain Ford's vetoes of an $851 million vocational rehabilitation program and an expansion of the 1966 Freedom of Information Act.

The Senate voted 65 to 27, three more than the required two-thirds, to override the veto of the Freedom of Information Act amendments and 90 to 1 to reject the veto of the vocational rehabilitation program. Only Sen. William L. Scott, R-Va., stuck with Ford.

The House Wednesday overrode the two vetoes by huge margins.

Since taking office Aug. 9, Ford has vetoed 18 bills but only three have been overridden.

Ford said expansion of the Freedom of Information Act, giving individuals greater access to government information, could jeopardize diplomatic relations and national security secrets. He said the vocational rehabilitation bill would duplicate existing programs.

The legislation making government information more accessible to the public was vetoed before Congress went into a 30-day election-period recess and now becomes law.

But there is a dispute between Congress and the administration, which may go to the Supreme Court, over the rehabilitation program.

House approves bill for mass transit aid

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House yesterday gave final congressional approval to a $11.8 billion mass transit aid bill which President Ford endorsed.

The six-year aid bill, passed by the Senate Tuesday, now goes to Ford who said in a telegram to House leaders that he would sign it.

"It represents a responsible step in our efforts to reduce energy consumption and control inflation," Ford said.

The 288-109 House vote surpassed the hopes of the bill's sponsors, who had feared a "squeaker" vote because of a dispute between the House Public Works Committee and the House Banking Committee over whose transit aid bill should be considered.

But Transportation Secretary Claude S. Brinegar, and the mayors of New York, San Francisco and numerous other cities made a last-minute lobbying push, pleading that the death of the bill would mean higher transit fares or reduced services.

The bill could grant $7.8 billion funds for transit construction and improvements, to be handed out on a case-by-case basis.

Another $4 billion would be distributed on a population formula basis to be used at local option either for construction or for 50-50 federal operating subsidies.

This money for operations was considered the key to the bill by many big-city mayors whose transit systems are in financial trouble. The larger construction fund can also be used for operations if it is paid back within two years.

Ford flies to Korea after sightseeing day

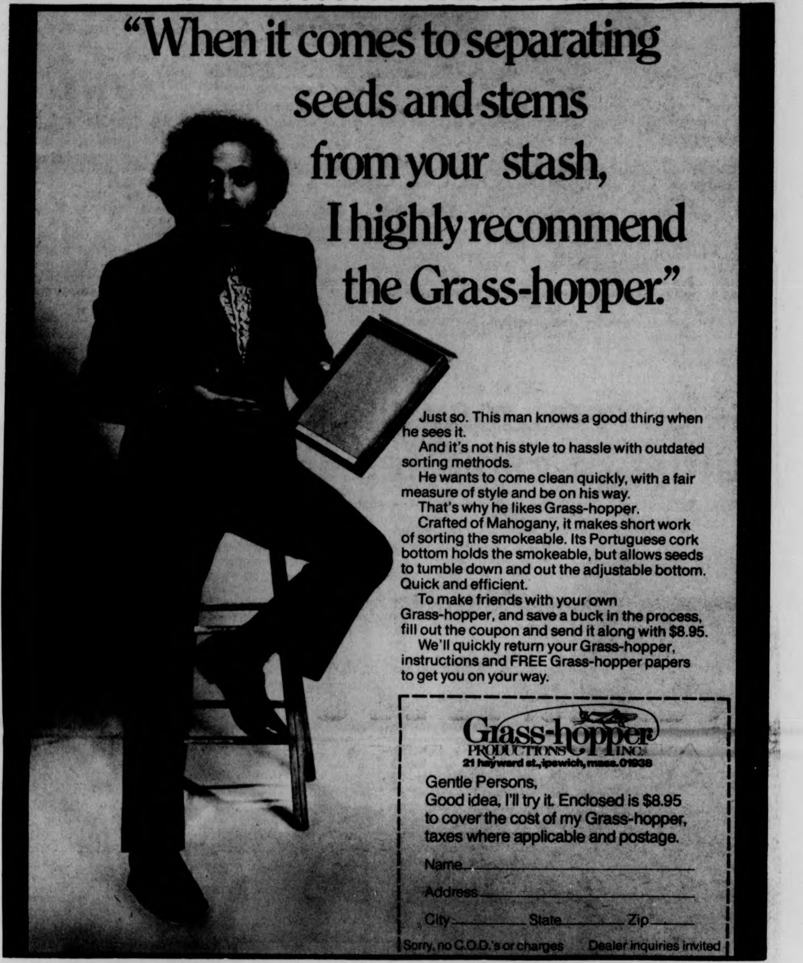
Compiled from Wires

KYOTO, Japan — President Ford had a "wonderful time" yesterday sightseeing in this ancient imperial capital before heading for a day of official business in South Korea.

Ford ignored scattered demonstrations by anti-American hecklers in Kyoto, and his Korean plans were not deterred by a rash of protests in Seoul designed to call his attention to what dissidents said was the plight of political prisoners there.

A top member of Tanaka's ruling Liberal Democratic party said Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka had decided to resign because his support had eroded over inflation, the issue of U.S. nuclear weapons in Japan and whether Tanaka used his office for personal gain. No resignation date was set.

The President was in apparent high spirits as he completed his historic visit to Japan, and his press secretary, Ron Nessen, told reporters, "He's having a wonderful time." He quoted Ford as saying the entire trip to Japan had been "inspiring as well as productive."



"When it comes to separating seeds and stems from your stash, I highly recommend the Grass-hopper."

Just so. This man knows a good thing when he sees it.

And it's not his style to hassle with outdated sorting methods.

He wants to come clean quickly, with a fair measure of style and be on his way.

That's why he likes Grass-hopper.

Crafted of Mahogany, it makes short work of sorting the smokeable. Its Portuguese cork bottom holds the smokeable, but allows seeds to tumble down and out the adjustable bottom. Quick and efficient.

A Statement Of Concern

We, the undersigned concerned people, deplore the recognition given to Yassir Arafat, head of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, by the United Nations. This endorsement given to a guerrilla organization whose stated purpose is the dissolution of the sovereign state of Israel, can only further the new immorality of diplomacy by terror. Tactics of bloodshed, blackmail, and political expediency and can hardly lead to constructive negotiations, but rather to a further deterioration of an already unstable situation which could plunge the people of the Middle East, and perhaps the whole world, into a bloody war.

Israel can hardly be expected to negotiate its own destruction. The Jewish people are as entitled to live and express themselves within their own sovereign state as any other people in the world. Any "solution" which compromises this right is unacceptable to the Jewish people and people of conscience throughout the world.

AT&T head says case hurts consumers

Compiled from Wires

NEW YORK — The Ford Administration's anti-trust suit against American Telephone & Telegraph Corp., if successful, could destroy the company and result in poorer telephone service at a higher cost, AT&T Chairman John deButts said yesterday.

"We'll fight this one to the end," deButts said.

He said the anti-trust suit filed by the Justice Department could hurt consumers as well as stockholders.

AT&T is the world's largest and richest publicly owned corporation and has three million shareholders, the most of any U.S. corporation.

The stock market bounced erratically in a narrow range yesterday, registering no clear-cut reaction to the Justice Department's anti-trust action against American Telephone & Telegraph.

The Justice Department accused AT&T and its 23 operating companies of restraining competition through monopolistic practices in a U.S. district court suit. The government demanded the communications network to divest itself of Western Electric, its manufacturing subsidiary, and Bell Laboratories, its research arm, along with its long-distance telephone operation.

DeButts told a news conference AT&T is one of the most efficient and profitable companies in the world and said he could not understand why the government took the action at a time when President Ford was urging business to become more productive.

"It was in the public interest, Congress ruled, to have a telephone monopoly," deButts said, adding that the principle had been upheld by Congressional committees, regulatory agencies and the Justice Department itself.

Maine governor urges N.E. states to form regional power pool

BOSTON [AP] — Calling for the New England states to band together to regulate energy, Maine Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis told the New England Council yesterday that energy is too important to leave in the hands of others.

Speaking at the council's annual meeting, Curtis said New England and New York state should follow the example of the electric utilities, which have formed regional pools.

"The safety of our people and the preservation of our land, water and other natural resources are too important and the cost of our electricity is too high," Curtis said, "for officials to any longer accept without question forecasts of energy demand determined exclusively by private industry."

Curtis said such a compact of states also could regulate offshore oil and natural gas drilling. The federal government would fail to provide sufficient environmental safeguards, he said.

of a dwindling coal supply. However, there have been no announcements by other major producers of layoffs.

Miller said he came to Charleston to try to explain some of the contract terms to miners.

He said there had been some minunderstanding because the UMW Constitution prohibits releasing the contract until the council approves it.

Miller said there were about 10 areas pending "where we hope to make some improvement," but he did not elaborate. However, he called it a "very good tentative agreement, one we should have had 20 years ago."

Suspects charged

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. [AP] — A burly, onetime bar bouncer and a companion were charged yesterday with murdering six people in a bakery just over a month ago.

In a courthouse filled with police, Ronald Piskorski, 25, and Gary B. Schrager, 31, both of New Britain, were ordered held on $500,000 bond.

The owner of the Donna Lee bakery, a clerk and four customers were shot at close range on Saturday night, Oct. 19. Called about 9 p.m. by someone who found the door open, police found cars running outside, apparently belonging to some of the victims.

Mondale drops out

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sen. Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota yesterday took himself out of the running Thursday for the 1976 Democratic nomination.

"Basically I found I did not have the overwhelming desire to be President which is essential for the kind of campaign that is required," the 46-year-old liberal told a hastily called news conference in a crowded Senate hearing room.

N-plants liable

WASHINGTON [UPI] — In a victory for environmentalists, Congress has abandoned for now its attempt to set limits on how much money atomic power plants would be liable for in the event of an accident or other nuclear catastrophe.

The Joint Committee on Atomic Energy said Wednesday it is dropping the matter for now and would not attempt to seek an override of President Ford's earlier veto of the legislation.

Blasts kill 14

BIRMINGHAM, England [UPI] — Bombs shattered two crowded pubs 100 yards apart within two minutes yesterday night, killing at least 14 persons and wounding 70 more. Others were reported missing in the rubble.

Police said seven persons perished in each of the explosions, the first in the Mulberry Bush and the second in the Tavern in the Town in the Bull Ring district of this industrial city 110 miles north of London.

MPA fires King

BOSTON [AP] — The board of the Massachusetts Port Authority voted yesterday to fire Executive Director Edward J. King. The position will be filled temporarily by the authority's secretary-treasurer, Edward T. Hanley.

The board voted 4-2 in a closed session to "vacate the position of executive director."

Privacy for whom

Tuesday was landmark day for American students. That was the date on which a federal law passed last year went into effect. The law guarantees parents and students the right to view any and all files on them maintained by colleges, universities and schools they attend.

The law, quickly dubbed the "Buckley amendment" after its sponsor, Sen. James Buckley (R-N.Y.), has provoked widespread confusion at campuses statewide and is the subject of a court suit by six Harvard University graduate students. UMass President Robert Wood, in an on-again, off-again stance toward the law at first asked that its effective date be postponed. Then on Wednesday, he waffled and said that he thought the law was sound and could be adjusted by HEW rulemaking.

The reason University administrations are concerned is simple: they do not dispute in principle that individuals should be able to inspect records maintained on them for truthfulness. But they are upset about the law implications on files maintained before it went into effect.

For instance. Suppose you were a guidance counselor in a Massachusetts high school. As a routine matter, you write recommendations for students of yours and send them to colleges. There are two questions raised by the privacy law in such a situation.

-- What effect will it have on the recommendation if the guidance counselor knows that it will eventually be read by the student?

-- Should recommendations written by counselors prior to Tuesday be now considered public and available to students? Remember that the counselor wrote it thinking it was confidential. fidential.

Of course there is a tremendous difference in magnitude between the problems Harvard has with the law and the problem UMass faces. UMass, because it is a large, state institution, does not rely heavily on confidential information in admissions or in other areas.

However Harvard, because it is highly selective, and because it is private, can and does rely on confidential information -- not just from guidance counselors but from private citizens. What about their right to privacy?

Ralph D. Jones, UMass registrar has suggested the plan UMass will follow. When students request information which was originally submitted as confidential, the person who submitted the information -- usually a guidance counselor -- will be asked in a letter whether he wishes the material viewed.

Of course if the guidance counselor refuses to yield the information, and UMass abides by the request, it will be in clear violation of the Buckley amendment as it now stands.

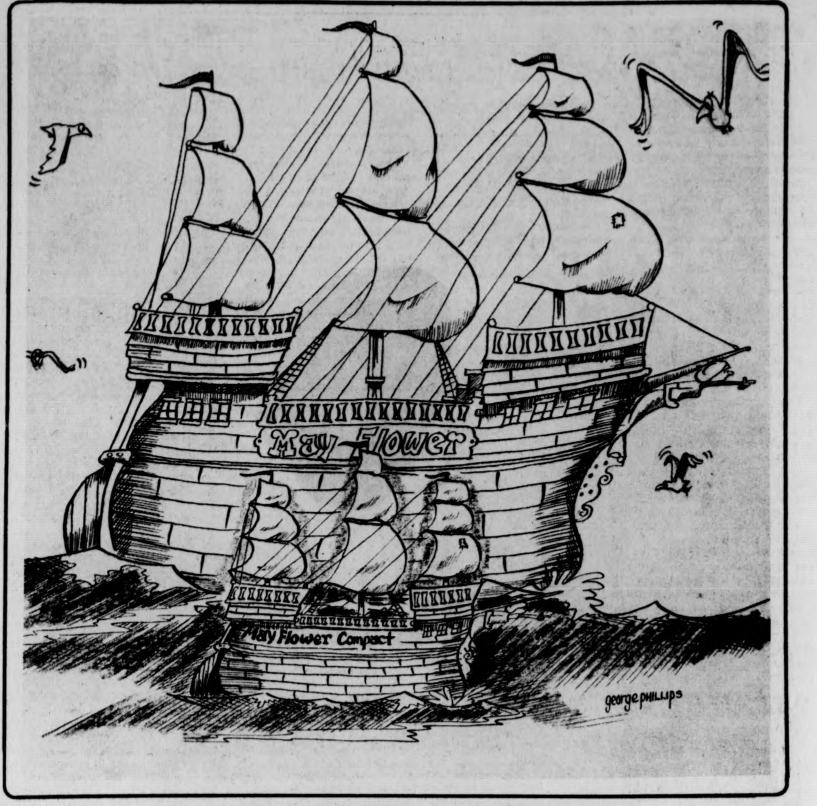
The law states that federal funds shall be withheld from an institution which "effectively prevents" students "the right to inspect and review any and all official records, files and data" related to them, including all material that is incorporated into each student's cumulative record folder."

The law says such material shall include: academic work, level of achievement, attendance, test scores of any kind, interests, health data, family background or teacher and counselor ratings.

"Laws," as older members of the system tell us students, "are not made to be broken." To refuse to release any information to a student 45 days after the students requests such data is against the law. We support the action of the six Harvard students and wish them success in their suit.

While the law stands, it should be enforced. However, we seriously question whether it should be retroactive. Not only the privacy of students is at stake -- but also the privacy of those guidance counselors who have submitted information to their files believing it would be confidential.

We support an amendment to the privacy law to exclude documents submitted before the law was passed in the Senate last spring. Meanwhile, the law is the law. Let it be enforced by the courts if necessary.



Letters to the editor

No football is a good idea

To the Editor:

New Englanders are known for being practical, which was again proven last week when the University of Vermont decided to drop their football team for the 1975-1976 season. Why practical? They will save 1.5 million dollars, that's why. I wonder how much UMass could save from next year's already impractical budget if we followed Vermont's impressive decision. The amount of money put into our football team, aimed at their apparent "big time" aspirations, could easily be redirected to other sports, or even that reason why we are all here, education. If Vermont will save $1.5 million, a school of our comparative size might be in a range of somewhere near $3 million. Whether this is way out of line or not I don't know, but even $1.5 million saved would satisfy me. The $74,000 taken from our $30 annual athletic fee alone is only a starting place for the possible money to be saved from other budgetary sources for equipment, trainers, travel, food, scholarships, printing, and the salaries of seven (7) coaches.

The football team could survive here on the club level, such as the crew team, and enjoy great success and even national prominence such as the crew, at a fraction of football's present cost. We can take the money saved and put it towards paying off one of the school buildings or the dorms, increase teaching positions or course diversity, and even redirect the money to all other sports and keep men's gymnastics. Our priorities have to change.

Many people have pointed out to me the tremendous improbability of a decrease in football expenditures because of the stadium. The stadium is probably the most impractical structure on campus. For an additional fee during it's construction it could have been fitted with astro-turf and lights, then it could be used all year and for other purposes such as soccer, lacrosse, rugby, and intramurals. As it is now, the stadium is used five or six times a year for home games, while most of the people entering it then have free tickets anyway. If football were a club sport they could charge admission for everyone to help defray expenses and pay for the stadium.

I'm calling on all students to take a good hard look at the football program as it exists today, at its inflated cost. Is it worth the price of other more beneficial student oriented projects compared to those benefits reaped by playing a major collegiate football schedule?? I think it's time we used this large sum involved in football for the mutual benefit of all students. It's also time a lot of students woke up to the impractical use of funds on this campus, and joined together to direct them toward the best interests of as many people as possible. Face it, football today is a luxury we can ill afford, at least with the big business aspects it has here at UMass. Yes, today even football has become an unnecessary luxury.

More for poor

To the Editor,

I think the Dining Common's management should be commended for enabling students to donate their meal tickets Thursday in order to raise funds for "Oxfam-America." But, perhaps more could be done. There are times during the semester when I realize I won't be using my tickets on a given day, and I'd like to think that someone could benefit from them. If Thursday's D. C. plan were in effect all semester, students could turn in tickets before their scheduled day of use and a portion of the meal's cost could be donated to a hunger prevention fund. Students cannot be reimbursed for unused meal tickets, but it wouldn't seem so wasteful if the needy could in some way benefit. People are starving all year round, not just on a particular Thursday in November.

Thanks for blood

To the Editor:

Last week the Red Cross Blood Drive at the University of Massachusetts collected a total of 1315 pints. This is a record volume, and those who made it possible, donors and workers alike, can take pride in the fact that they have contributed generously and unselfishly to one of the most humanitarian of causes.

We would like to thank the senior citizens and members of the Junior Women's Club who made the sandwiches and ran the canteen; the members of the University women who took care of publicity, registration, reception and other clerical duties, as well as acting as donor aides and canteen helpers; the members of Gamma Sigma Sigma and Alpha Phi Omega who worked before and during the drive, and the volunteer nurses, student nurses, doctors and Red Cross personnel. Most importantly, we wish to thank each and every donor; it was their response, after all, that determined the success of this community endeavor.

Mrs. Carl P. Swanson
Blood Drive Chairman for

Reverse education

To the Editor:

Now that people from the South have come here to show us how to integrate our schools, why don't we return the favor and send some people there to show them what books to read?

Pastors of journalism

> ''One good schoolmaster is worth a thousand priests.''
> —Robert G. Ingersoll

If one good schoolmaster really is worth a thousand priests, then there are three thousand priests teaching journalism in the basement of Machmer Hall.

It's a shame that people like me wait until there is some sort of trouble to write a column about three really fine professors like Howard Ziff, Larry Pinkham, and Ralph Whitehead of the Journalistic Studies Department. The trouble referred to is the current hassle over the single track, Journalism-English only major that has been supported by these three as an interim program on the way to a full Journalism major at UMass, something we have never had.

Fortunately, the students majoring in Journalism who attended last Monday's meeting of the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee recognized the importance of the JS-English proposal to the future of Journalism at UMass and voted to support it by an 18-10 margin.

It was a victory that Ziff and company deserved. They comprise about 95 per cent of the work behind the Journalism program at UMass, a program encompassing some 240 students. For three people to teach, counsel, and try to find jobs for a body of students that large is quite an achievement. For it to be done as well as it is done is amazing.

From the point of view of student input the department has been one of the most responsive on campus. Ziff has sought student opinion on everything from the hiring of new personnel to the strong and weak points of courses he has wanted to propose. He has instituted courses that students have expressed a need for, such as an investigative reporting course last Fall and this semester's course in editorial writing taught by Pulitzer prizewinner Roger Linscott of the Berkshire Eagle.

Realizing that as yet the department does not have enough personnel to give everyone the complete journalism education they need, Ziff has urged students to take advantage of other university programs that emphasize their particular needs, such as the Outreach program. I utilized this program myself, spending a semester in Washington to gain insight into my interest in political journalism. My post internship study is being sponsored by Professor Whitehead, a one on one course on the topic of political morality which integrates my Washington experience with new learning.

It has been a hallmark of these three professors to dig in and get involved with students, and their contact hours with students probably rank among the highest on campus. To add to all this, at least one of them is teaching a course overload this semester. All three will be overloaded next semester.

In short, Howard Ziff, Larry Pinkham, and Ralph Whitehead have gone the extra mile for students on this campus who are interested in Journalism, and it's time they received a little recognition for it. Let's hope they're allowed to continue their work without anymore hindrance, and that one of the few good things in the world of UMass academics meets with the success it without doubt deserves.

Waiting for Rocky

I might have doubted it a few weeks ago, but now it seems that Nelson Rockefeller has won over the Senate Rules Committee. They'll undoubtedly recommend confirmation either unanimously or with one dissenting vote. Rocky is a heavyweight, of that there can be no doubt. That book of Lasky's about Goldberg could've cost the Rock the Vice Presidency, but he had his answers all ready for them. When Goldberg took the stand I thought to myself, this is it, it's all over. But his testimony was relatively tame, and the book issue became less and less important. The money give-away is still a hazy area, and I imagine the House Committee will try to go into it even deeper.

To be generous is certainly no crime, unless of course there are ulterior motives involved. But it seems that, as far as the Senate Committee is concerned, the issue has been resolved. No matter what they brought up, Rocky had the answers, or he knew where to get them.

Senator Scott kept bringing up the overworked point that no one on the committee was asking questions concerning Rocky's views on the burning issues of the day, as if his views would make a big difference on the question of confirmation. If all they had to worry about was Rocky's ability to perform as V.P, he would have been confirmed weeks ago. There aren't too many people in public life today who couldn't do that job. That is not to say that the Vice Presidency is irrelevant. I think that events over the past ten years have proved otherwise. But it is a fact that a Vice President is whatever the President wants or needs him to be. In the case of Ford and Rockefeller, the word is need rather than want. I think it safe to assume that Rocky will be a "working" V.P.

What is lacking through all this, of course, is public approval. Rocky has learned from past experience that this can be more important than testifying before a committee about loans. This concern about confirming a man for the Vice Presidency, who had run unsuccessfully for the top spot previously, was brought up by Senator Pell. It was a good point, and one, as I pointed out in a past column should be given serious study and reflection. But typically, the issue seemed to bounce off the heads of the other members of the committee. We mustn't give them anything too difficult to think about, especially ethical problems that are not spelled out in the Constitution. The Senators should remember that no matter who they are investigating, the main concern should be the people. I think the people have given their verdict on Nelson Rockefeller before, at least a couple of times. This obviously carries no weight with the committee.

It is clear to me that changes must be made in the 25th Amendment, which, I might add, was drafted by Birch Bayh at a time when our leaders were standing around wondering what the hell to do about having no V.P. The Amendment had nothing but sensible and good intention behind it, and to call for a change now does not discredit Bayh in any way. (And as long as people are speculating about possibles for 1976, don't overlook Bayh.) Of course no one could possibly have foreseen events similar to those of 1974. The reason behind any vacancies in the top offices should have an effect on how those vacancies are filled. In other words, the Constitution should perhaps regard vacancies due to abuse of office in a separate light from vacancies due to poor health or death. Or perhaps an appointed Vice President should not be allowed to assume the Presidency permanently, but serve as an acting President until elections can be held. The newly elected President and Vice President would then serve a full four year term, and not simply the remainder of the previous term.

There are several versions of proposed changes being discussed, and while the debate goes on we await the arrival of Vice President Rockefeller. No one will be more eager to see him take the oath than Pres. Ford. Let's face it, he needs all the help he can get right now, and if Rocky has any ideas then let's hear them. I'll never be convinced, however, that Rockefeller should be the V.P. I don't care how many millions he gave away, or how many damn books he had written. The larger issue is that he is attaining a position through highly irregular means, when he could not attain it by the will of the people. Ford is in the same boat of course, so they'll make quite a pair. And that's probably the only thing that the two have in common. But, you know, it'd all be worth while if they'd just introduce Ford to Rocky's tailor. Like I said, he needs all the help he can get.

Food shortage and dog days

By MURDOCK MacRAE
And JOYCE KOSOFSKY
Staff Reporter

Man's best friend may be his own worst enemy in the world's food shortage problem.

In Amherst alone, the pet population is a staggering figure. All you have to do is visit an apartment complex, dormitory or walk downtown and you can picture the situation for yourself.

Meanwhile, the World Food Conference in Rome is trying to keep the world from starving. As the world's supply of food diminishes, the current pet population increases at 10-20 times faster than the human population.

Here's where the connection comes in.

Common house pets, cats and dogs, are of a monogastric mammalian species. That is, pets need the same dietary type of nutrition as humans.

Last year $1.5 billion was spent on pet food in the United States. However, 40 percent of this figure was bought for human consumption. The pet food was bought by low income or welfare recipients because of the poor welfare system and because of inflated food prices, especially meat goods.

Pet nutritional requirements for specific protein types and elements, such as phosphorus, nearly equal those same requirements for humans. With the pet population continuing to grow as such, it becomes just a matter of time before these animals evolve as a direct source of competition for food with the human population.

All is fine if you love your pet and can take good care of it. But this is not always the case. What happens after the cuteness of the puppy is gone? Often, these pets are left to fend for themselves. In such a case, the animal becomes what is known as a feral dog. (A domestic dog gone wild). The feral dog, as it becomes wilder and hungrier, will even kill for food. A while back a pack of feral dogs simultaneously crawled under a fence at the Franklin Park Zoo and attacked a deer.

Perhaps this should be taken into consideration the next time you see a cute kitten or puppy. Think of the animal's welfare. How many places will you be living in over the next five years? How cool is it to keep a dog in downtown Manhattan or downtown Southwest? How cool is it to keep your dog tied up outside the Campus Center barking while you're cavorting through the Bluewall? Let's be realistic and humanistic about the situation. With a shortage of food in the near future, will you be able to take care of yourself along with your pet?

As animal lovers, this situation upsets us. We offer no true solution but we do have a few suggestions:

—If your pet has just had a litter, talk to the people you give them to. Find out where they live and if you think that'll be a good home for the animal. Also, ask them to have the animal spayed or fixed.

—If your pet has had litters already, unless you're breeding it, have it spayed.

With a little caution and consideration perhaps there will be no feral dogs and no animals competing for your dinner. With a little care, we will just have our favorite house pets.

CASIAC offers info

So you're a liberal artist? So by choice or by default you've found yourself in the College of Arts & Sciences majoring in it, or one of its happy tributaries. Well what now? Preregistration is again upon us and another bout with education looms suddenly. Decisions have to be made. Decisions affecting the very core of your future existence, or decisions affecting no more than the hours you'll catch some Z's next semester. That's up to you.

Believe it or not, there are some people in the vicinity who are paid to help you through the process. Some of them live over at CASIAC, the letters that stand for the College of Arts & Sciences Information and Advisory Center which is located in E-20 in beautiful Machmer Hall, just a twelve second walk due west from the Student Union.

Change your major? Well you can start the process at CASIAC by picking up the necessary paperwork. Also available are add-drop cards, late add-drop cards and authorizations, withdrawal forms not to mention overload and underload cards and authorizations. Besides these and other bountiful burocratic manipulations, CASIAC also serves as a clearinghouse for other programs and academic endeavors. Aside from all of the traditional majors within the broad realm of the College, information about University Year for Action, Honors, BDIC, Outreach, UMass 200, University Without Walls, Womens Studies, Interdisciplinary majors, is dutifully available. CASIAC also serves as the center for Five College Information at UMass. Here you can find which course you want and how to get it at those four other eager institutions of learning just waiting for UMies to come.

Advice? Do you need advice? Well you're in luck because at CASAIC we have an army of eager and well trained students, faculty and academic deans to talk to depending upon the nature and breadth of your problem. Our Graduate School Advisor (Pat Rector), Pre Law Person (John Brigham) and our foremost Education Man (John Adams) are also available on demand. And so don't despair, help is available.

Pre-vets stop fowl delays

By BILL PARENT

Members of the UMass Pre Vet Club attended a meeting of New England State colleges last weekend in Bedford, New Hampshire in an effort to begin lobbying procedure for the establishment of a Veterinary School in the six state area.

Corliss Bautin, President of the UMass organization said that "the needs for a Veterinarian School are so critical that even if we do have this school built by the projected date (Sept. 1977) it still won't fulfill the overwhelming need for veterinarians."

The purpose of the Bedford meeting was to discuss ways of informing people of the need and to develop ways to pressure representatives to take action on the problem. Bills are currently being drafted for presentation to all State Legislatures in the New England area.

"The main problem" Bautin said "is reaching the people and building their awareness." Presently there are only 1000 veterinarians responsible for the care of a quarter of a billion livestock in the area. Last summer alone at one dairy farm in Deerfield over $5000 worth of livestock was slaughtered due to a lack of sufficient medical care for the animals.

Another problem faced by aspiring vets is the almost impossibility of entering out-of-state colleges for animal medicine. The organization cited that there is now a 95 per cent rejection rate and anyone with under a 3.7 cum shouldn't even apply.

The Pre Vet Club is now in the process of distributing pamphlets, bumper stickers, and seeking coverage by the local news media in an effort to inform the public.

In conclusion Bautin said "the volume counts, and we would like to see students take some action in the form of letters to local legislators."

Bitch box siphons off beefs

By BRUCE FREDERICK
Staff Correspondent

> "What, my friend, what are you going to do with this bitch?"
> —Marquis de Sade

The Student Senate Communications Committee offers a last-resort complaint service for students who have any problems with the University. Students with a problem or complaint, or who don't know where to go, or who aren't getting results through "normal channels," may be helped by the Committee's Bitch Box.

Students should write down their complaints, names, phone numbers or addresses, and put them in the Bitch Box located in the Student Union Lobby next to the Collegian stacks.

Students who would like to remain anonymous, don't have to sign their names, but the committee probably won't be able to do much without it.

Quicker, more personal help, is available in their office within the DVP office in the Student Union Building, according to committee members.

Keep in mind, however, that the committee cannot do anything about academic problems, such as student-professor hassles. These automaticaaly go to the Ombudsman. His name is Jay Savareid, and his office is in Rm. 919 Campus Center. If you have any problems with grades, instructors, etc. you should see him. He can and will help you.

What our Committee may be able to help you with is a problem with dorm living, a question about the Campus Center, or a beef about the way the University is run in general. If we can't get any direct action ourselves, we can at least refer you to somebody who can.

In the month or so that the Bitch Box has existed, we have received several complaints, an assortment of trash including cigarette butts, and a gum wrapper containing a gross looking, unidentifiable substance.

We might have received more problems, but some moron ripped-off the wooden box we were using. We replaced it with a cardboard carton, then another idiot gripped the table it was on. Finally somebody with a real problem stole the cardboard carton. We have just recently acquired a new metal ballot box from the Student Senate, which should be securely installed in the Student Union Lobby by the time you read this. We're hoping that the chain and padlock will keep it where it belongs, since our request for a guard dog and machine guns was rejected.

Actually, the grievance service is just one part of the Communications Committee's job. We are also responsible for keeping lines of communication open between different groups in the University, and letting students know what the Student Senate is doing. We also hope to give a lot of attention to commuters and their problems.

Up to this week, we have been fairly unorganized since we have been without a chairperson, permanent office, telephone and typewriter. However, our first organizational meeting was held last Monday, and we have gained seven new members, so we're starting to roll.

By November 18, we should be permanently settled into a corner of the DVP office on the balcony of the Student Union. If you think we can help you, or you think you can help us, stop by. We're always open to new members, and since we are open to new directions and ideas, the committee might be the place for you to start your pet project. Besides, it'll look good on your records.

Spokesman asserts Wood misquoted

A University spokesman said yesterday that President Robert C. Wood was misquoted in Thursday's edition of The Collegian.

Peter Gluckler, a University spokesman at the Campus News Bureau, said Wood has not withdrawn a request made in a letter to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass) that the effective date of a new privacy law be postponed six months.

In a letter to Kennedy Tuesday, Wood said the law should be postponed because of ambiguities in its interpretation. But Wednesday, he issued a statement of clarification from his Boston office saying the law could probably be corrected by HEW rulemaking rather than amendment.

A Collegian story Thursday stated in the first paragraph that Wood had "withdrawn" his request. According to Gluckler, the request has not been withdrawn.

The exact text of Wood's second statement was:

"I strongly support the concept of the so-called 'Buckley amendment,' which guarantees to students and parents the right to examine certain files. Indeed the University of Massachusetts has for some time made it a practice to make most such files available.

"There are, however, said to be some important difficulties with the law as it presently exists, the most serious of them in the area of 'third party' material, such as letters of recommendations, submitted in the expectation it would be kept confidential. There is also some concern about availability of information about parents' financial status.

"Accordingly, at the request of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, I asked Senator Kennedy to consider supporting a resolution to postpone the effective date of the amendment for several months, in order that these technical difficulties can be resolved.

"I believe, however, that these difficulties could also be addressed effectively through the process of regulations to be issued by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and this approach would not require postponing the effective date of the amendment.

"In any case, I repeat my strong support for the intent of this legislation and my determination that the University operate within the spirit of the legislation whatever method is chosen to correct its technical faults.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 22 — Born today, you possess many talents and a variety of interests to go with them. It will not be easy for you to decide upon which of many possible goals to set your sights, for you will be attracted to many at the same time that you will realize that you are not one of those who can follow more than one bent at a time. Indeed, unless you do make such a selection, you will see many of lesser talent than you possess passing you on the road to success. And, once made, the decision must stick; to change your mind could mean to forfeit success after all.

You possess phenomenal powers of memory, particularly when it comes to knowledge gained about other people. You have been known to impress, shock, and surprise people by your ability to tell them about themselves. Even so, it is to be hoped that you also are wise enough to know when to keep what you know to yourself, for there are times when to display too much knowledge about another can be more damaging than not, particularly when it is another's vanity that comes into play.

Because it is easy for you to acquire knowledge, whether through books, experience, or word-of-mouth, you may have less than a tolerant attitude toward those who find the learning experience a difficult, perhaps even an impossible one. You would do well to spend some time developing your natural compassion — an aspect of your character which may have been overlooked in the race to make gains in other areas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Financial matters may cause you some embarrassment today, but you can overcome your difficulties by letting the facts be known.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19) — Make every effort to pull the budget back into line. You may have been giving in too easily to temptation lately; mend your ways!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You would do well to let others know where you stand on issues vital to your own advancement on the employment scene. Listen to co-workers.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you are engaged in building of any kind, this is an excellent day for moving forward. Don't stand on ceremony with old friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Efficiency counts for more than anything else today if you're in the running for advancement. Don't make any plans without consulting others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — In both thought and deed, make it a point to be constructive. This is especially true if you attempt to criticize another's work.

GEMINI (May 21-June20) — Concentrate on being creative in your approach to the day's labors and all should go well. A business association may prove difficult.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You can count on present difficulties working themselves out in time. You can hasten things along, however, by gaining knowledge of the problem.

LEO (June 23-Aug. 22) — Be wise; don't push your luck where solutions to present difficulties are concerned. Take another's advice where the young enter the picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You can ill afford to make a mistake on the employment scene. Do what you can to enlist the aid of those with experience in your line of work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A matter of health comes in for more than its usual amount of attention. Don't let momentary comfort mislead you into lowering your guard.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — This may be an excellent day for the Scorpio with no health problems. For all others, however, it's definitely time to guard against upsets.

Minutemen face Eagle steamroller

By STEVE DECOSTA
Sports Staff

What's everybody worried about?

The Boston College Eagles have only won six of nine games this year, including their last four by the combined scores of 162-13.

And so what if the Eagles have not allowed a touchdown in their last three games.

BC quarterback Mike Kruczek only has a completion average of 68 per cent.

And who cares that Keith Barnette is the leading major college scorer in the nation with 104 points in nine games.

So what's the big deal anyway?

The big deal is tomorrow when the Eagles bring their flying machine to tiny, out-of-the-way Amherst for what they fully expect to be at least as big a rout as last year's UMass-BC debacle, which ended with a 59-14 advantage for the Eagles.

Coach Dick MacPherson has his own pet name for his arch-adversary: "the big bully on the block."

"They're very big, very rich," says Mac, "and when they get you down they stick it to you. They don't ask for any mercy and they don't show you any either."

The fact is, the Minutemen seem to be in the running for at least a little show of mercy, with the ranks of their injured growing by leaps and bounds.

At one point in last week's game with New Hampshire, four UMass running backs, Jim Torrance, Rich Jessamy, Jerry Mondalto, and John Romboli were sidelined. Jessamy and Mondalto are still listed as doubtful performers this week, and Romboli should be available to punt but probably won't see action in the backfield.

With Romboli and Mondalto, the number one and two punters on the squad, injured at the same time, MacPherson was in a bind. "John Van Buren walked up to me and said 'I can kick, coach' and thank God they didn't have a rush on. To my knowledge," said Mac, "that was the first time he kicked a football all year."

The defense is also hurting injury-wise, with starters Paul St. Onge and Todd Holt on the wounded list.

Holt, a freshman who has started the last two games, sustained a broken hand in the Thursday practice before the UNH encounter, but kept the injury to himself. The hand didn't seem to bother the defensive back too much against the Wildcats, as he picked off one Jeff Allen pass and knocked away several others. But now there is speculation that Holt may have broken the other hand during the game and he is definitely on the shelf this week.

There is also serious doubt about the status of middle guard St. Onge, bothered with an ankle problem. "We're looking into the possibility of Paul playing on crutches," said MacPherson, "and if we can clear it he'll be out there."

The Eagles have some injury problems of their own, but none as serious as the UMass situation. Mike Esposito, the premier running back in New England, is still sidelined with a shoulder separation and isn't expected to play. But, as his coach, Joe Yukica says, "You can never tell about that guy. It wouldn't surprise me if he suited up and got into the game."

The only other major injury problem for the Eagles is guard Steve Schindler, who will definitely miss the contest.

The primary concern of the Minutemen will be stopping the Eagles' kicking and running games.

Fred Steinfort, the son of German immigrants, handles the BC place-kicking chores. This season, Steinfort is 29-31 on points after and 8-11 on field goals, including a New England record 55-yarder against Tulane.

The Eagle attack concentrates it potency on the ground, with Barnette and Earl Strong picking up the slack left by the loss of Esposito. Barnette, who has already picked up 935 yards on the ground, gets better every week, as he carried for 196 against Syracuse last week.

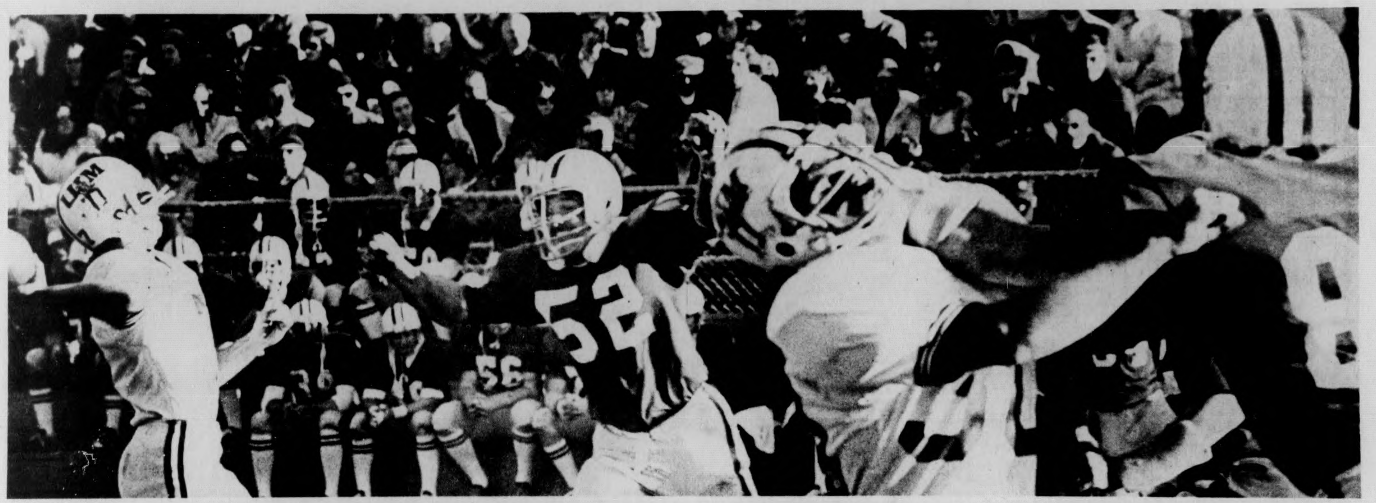
Even though Kruczek's passing stats are so good, the Eagles throw only occasionally, usually to break the monotony. The junior signal-caller has thrown an average of only 12 passes a game, most of them in the direction of junior wide receive Walt Zumbach.

Despite the on-paper advantage the Eagles hold, MacPherson is far from willing to throw in the towel, but he knows it won't be easy.

"We have to go after them and not give them an inch," said Mac, "because if you do, brother, they stick it right in your face."

"We've gotta be better than we've ever been before," the coach continued, "and we've gotta tackle better than we've ever done before."

Well said, coach. Well said.



Minuteman quarterback Mark Tripucka is rushed by UNH defender as he prepares to unload in last Saturday's game. In foreground, back Jim Torrance adds blocking protection. Operating against the BC defense this Saturday should be pretty difficult, as the Eagles have allowed only 13 points in their last four games.

Skaters face Lowell

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

The UMass hockey team travels to Tyngsboro's Skatethree Arena on Saturday night to faceoff against Lowell Tech, and the word from coach Jack Canniff is "we've got to tighten up our overall defense."

The pucksters opened their 1974-75 season with a 9-6 win over New England on Wednesday night, but Canniff was far from pleased with what he saw happening on the ice.

"Only the outcome made me happy," said Canniff. "When you play that poorly defensively you're lucky to get a win. We're in trouble if we can't hold other teams below six goals. We've got to play better in our own zone."

Lowell Tech is the second straight new Division II opponent on the Minuteman schedule. Lowell has looked impressive in pre-season scrimmages with Boston College and Northeastern. Last season they pulled the Division II upset of the year with a decisive 7-3 victory over Salem State (20-3).

Canniff was pleased with his teams offensive showing. The Minutemen were encamped in the New England end of the ice for most of the game. They were able to set up and fire almost at will on the New England netminders.

But, as Ken Dryden recently remarked, "playing shoot-em-up, and last goal wins, is not sound hockey."

Goal Judge Verdicts....Lowell Tech is the first of three road tests for the Minutemen, St. Anselms and Williams are on the agenda for next week. The next UMass home game is Dec. 6, against Norwich.

UMass forward Steve Nims is congratulated by a fan after Wednesday's 9-6 victory over New England College. (Staff photo by Daniel R. Smith).

Cowens back; Downing cut

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Celtics activated Center Dave Cowens Thursday, and placed second-year foreward Steve Downing on waivers to make room for the 6-9 pivotman.

Cowens, out since preseason with a broken bone in his right foot, could see action in Friday night's game with the Phoenix Suns.

Originally, Cowens was told by team officials he would have to wait another week before his return to the Celtic lineup. But the redhaired Center was in such good shape, after working out at the local YMCA, that it didn't take him long to get into playing shape once he started working out with the team.

Cowens broke the metatarsal bone in his right foot in an exhibition game against the Milwaukee Bucks after coming down hard off the boards while chasing a rebound. The Celtics have been alternating between Jim Ard and Hank Finkel at Center in Cowens' absence, and the team has a 9-8 record.

Mermaids place 2nd

By LAURIE WHITING
Sports Staff

The UMass Women's swim team placed second in its first meet Wednesday against Mt. Holyoke and Smith. The strong Mt. Holyoke team won first place title, with a score of 104-83-32. It was an exciting meet with many close races, particularly the relays.

Swimming in her first meet for UMass, junior transfer student Penny Noyes won both the 50- and 100-yard backstroke events in pool record times of 30.1 and 1:06.0 respectively. Penny also anchored the 400-free relay team of Cindy Whiting, Laurie Whiting, and Reenie Groden to an exciting come-from-behind win, with a 100 yard split of :57. The relay team set a new pool record of 4:05.5.

Returning stand-out, sophomore Cindy Whiting, took a first in the 200 yard freestyle, and a second in a closely-contested 50 yard freestyle. Cindy was the lead swimmer in the winning 400 free relay.

An outstanding performance was displayed by Carol Griffith in the 400 free, as she won the event in 5:01.1, a time almost equal to her best of last season. With a fine show of pacing control, Carol came from behind to win the event.

Other high point scorers for UMass were: Reenie Groden in the 50 yard butterfly and 50 yard backstroke, Diane Perry in the 50 and 100 yard breaststroke, and Karen Johnson in the 50 and 100 yard fly, and the 200 yard individual medley. Diver Carol Canterbury took second in the one meter diving competition.

B's lick Seals 4-2

BOSTON [UPI] — Dave Forbes scored two goals and passed for a third Thursday night as the Boston Bruins defeated the California Golden Seals 4-2 in a National Hockey League Game.

The loss extended California's winless road streak to 18 games, dating back to March of last season.

Forbes scored the first Boston goal at 2:48 of the first period when he tipped in a slap shot from the blue line by Bobby Orr. Dave Hynes put the Bruins ahead 2-0 at 16:27 of the period, skating from behind the net and picking his spot with a 25 footer that went inside the near post.

Forbes made it 3-0 at 14:46 of the second period when he shot from a bad angle while Seals Goalie Gary Simmons was out of position.

Two for the price of one

By SCOTT HAYES

Since the Collegian will not be published a week from today due to the Thanksgiving vacation, some long-range predictions are necessary. So without wasting any additional space, here are the picks through December 2.

Saturday, November 23

BOSTON COLLEGE 45; UMASS 19

The Minutemen will be up against a quality team, as typified by Fred Steinfort, the BC placekicker who can reach from 50 yards out. Hopefully the Eagles won't run up the score.

Sunday, November 24

BALTIMORE COLTS 20; NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 17

The injured Patriots will watch their problems grow as Colts try for third straight win.

CINCINNATI BENGALS 28; KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 24

Partisan Riverfront Stadium crowd should aid Bengal victory.

BUFFALO BILLS 24; CLEVELAND BROWNS 16

Bills should rebound after tough loss to Dolphins last week.

DETROIT LIONS 13; CHICAGO BEARS 10

This one may be decided in the last two seconds, as was the Giants-Lions game, but Detroit will be victorious.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 28; NEW YORK GIANTS 17

Cardinals should have an enjoyable Sunday at the Yale Bowl.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 20; NEW YORK JETS 14

Jets have improved since early season, but Miami is stronger.

WASHINGTON REDSKINS 24; PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 6

Super 'Skin defense looks like a good ticket to NFC Playoffs.

HOUSTON OILERS 26; DALLAS COWBOYS 21

Make it five straight "upset" victories for the Oilers.

GREEN BAY PACKERS 21; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 14

John Hadl has the Pack on the move, as Chargers will discover.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 13; LOS ANGELES RAMS 7

Fred Cox may be the difference in what promises to be a battle.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 35; DENVER BRONCOS 31

Raiders should become the first team to win ten games.

SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 28; ATLANTA FALCONS 13

San Francisco will most likely extend Atlanta's sloshing streak to six games.

Monday, November 25

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 21; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 17

Pittsburgh defense should help return Saints' offense to ineffectiveness.

Thursday, November 28 [Thanksgiving]

DENVER BRONCOS 27; DETROIT LIONS 23

Broncos spoil Thanksgiving dinner for Detroit and fans.

DALLAS COWBOYS 21; WASHINGTON REDSKINS 19

Dallas won't fall 28 points behind this time.

Sunday, December 1

BUFFALO BILLS 20; BALTIMORE COLTS 14

Bills end the good times of coach Joe Thomas and squad.

GREEN BAY PACKERS 13; PHILADELPHIA EAGLES 10

Victory may rest in the foot of Chester Marcol or Tom Dempsey.

PITTSBURGH STEELERS 21; HOUSTON OILERS 16

Hanratty, Bradshaw or Gilliam at QB should make little difference.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS 17; KANSAS CITY CHIEFS 9

Don Coryell and the Big Red just keep on rolling.

LOS ANGELES RAMS 28; ATLANTA FALCONS 6

Maybe the Falcons will manage to put some points on the scoreboard during their second meeting with the Rams.

OAKLAND RAIDERS 42; NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS 27

A long trip home from the coast for New England, after challenging one of the most physical teams in the NFL.

MINNESOTA VIKINGS 17; NEW ORLEANS SAINTS 13

New Orleans will have plenty to worry about.

NEW YORK GIANTS 28; CHICAGO BEARS 27

Not the championship confrontation that marked the 1930's and 40's, but it should be an interesting game.

NEW YORK JETS 31; SAN DIEGO CHARGERS 28

If it's possible for both New York teams to win on the same Sunday, this will be the time.

CLEVELAND BROWNS 23; SAN FRANCISCO 49ERS 20

Brian Sipe should win the battle of young quarterbacks.

MIAMI DOLPHINS 21; CINCINNATI BENGALS 14

Miami's versatility and depth will be Bengals' downfall.

Minutemen cagers are potentially "best ever"

By STEVE DeCOSTA
Sports Staff

Looking back at the years 1968-72, sports historians will probably call them the golden years of UMass basketball.

In that span, the Redmen-Minutemen had a combined record of 96-34, four NIT appearances, and three Yankee Conference titles.

The golden years have been fashioned mainly by three persons; Julius Erving, Al Skinner, and Jack Leaman.

Erving left Amherst three long years ago and has gone on to be one of the premier players in pro basketball today.

Skinner is recently departed, following the footsteps of his predecessor to the New York Nets.

But Leaman remains to continue his role as the most succesful basketball coach in UMass history.

An Leaman is determined that the golden years go on. "We have the potential to be one of the best teams ever at Massachusetts," he says confidently. "We have better material than we've ever had in the past."

Leaman makes these claims despite the loss of three starters from last year's squad; Rick Pitino, Peter Trow, and leading scorer and rebounder Skinner.

Perhaps the major influence on Leaman's optimism is Alex Eldridge, a 6'2" high school All-American from New York.

Eldridge has not been particularly impressive in practice, but that's all right by Leaman. "He has trouble getting started," says the coach. "He's like Al Skinner, he's not a practice player."

But the freshman has looked good in game situations. According to Leaman, "he's the type of player the crowd will make better."

The Minutemen have more reason for optimism than just the promise of a single freshman. The squad will feature a nucleus of returning veterans that would make many an opposing coach green with envy.

For starters there is Bill Endicott, possibly the best guard in New England. A pure shooter, the senior tri-captain averaged 14.6 points per game in last year's banner season.

John Murphy should be aided by his move to forward, a more natural position for the 6'8" senior. His uncanny soft shooting touch, a definite asset for one so big, resulted in last year's scoring average of 14.6 The switch to forward should also improve Murphy's board work. Instead of battling seven foot centers, Murph should have a rebounding feast against smaller opposition.

Another Leaman experiment will move Jim Burke, formerly a guard, to the other forward slot. Burke, known primarily for his defensive prowess, was plagued with illness last year but is reportedly in excellent condition this time around.

The only real battle for a starting spot is at center where a pair of 6'8ers, Jim Town and Steve Mayfield, are rated just about even. Mayfield saw some action as a reserve forward in his freshman year, while Town will be making his first appearance as a Minuteman following a year of ineligibility.

The Minutemen should also be stacked in regard to bench strength. Greg Duarte will lead the reserve list, followed by experienced veterans Mike Stokes, Joe Semder, and Joe Artime.

Besides Eldridge, there are several other freshmen of note who should make their presence felt as the season progresses.

Derek Claiborne, a high school teammate of Eldridge has shown a lot of poise in the backcourt and, according to Leaman, "he runs the team very well."

Mike Pyatt, another New York City protege, stands 6'5" and is a remarkable leaper. "He has a lot of raw talent," says Leaman. "He just needs some seasoning to be a standout ballplayer."

The only frosh standout of local note is Chuck Stevesky of Auburn. "He's a good shooter," admits Leaman. "When we recruited him, we figured he could help us a lot in a couple of years."

Teamwise, the Minutemen figure to be more explosive offensively, but could fall prey to some defensive shortcomings.

"It should be the type of team students love," says Leaman, "but gives coaches gray hair."

Leaman has always been the type of coach that puts a premium on the fundamentals such as rebounding and defense, so it comes as a slight shock when he says "we should score a lot, but we'll also be scored on a lot. But that makes for excitement."

With the upgrading of the schedule, excitement will probably be the rule rather than the exception. The Minutemen will, as usual, face such New England powerhouses as Providence, Boston College, and Connecticut, but this year have added such notables as Fairfield, West Virginia, and Duquesne. Add to this the quality of teams like Centenary, North Carolina-Charlotte, and Dartmouth in the season-opening Hall of Fame tournament in Springfield, and the schedule looks formidable indeed.

The fact of the matter is that nearly every opposing squad has improved since last year.

"It's all a relative thing," says Leaman. "The thing is how much do we improve against how much everybody else improves plus what did they start with."

"We won't have the quickness of last year's team," the coach continued, "but we have more overall size. "Personnel-wise, I would say that Massachusetts is very much better than last year."

It remains to be seen if the improvement is for real. Leaman, usually a man of reserve in regard to compliments, is ready and if his optimism is any indication, the golden years of UMass basketball should continue.

Are you kidding? The look on guard Billy Endicott's face tells it all during a game last year. It was the same game that one of this year's tri-captains, along with John Murphy, and Jim Bruke learned that you can never win an argument with an official.

A reason for optimism? Alex Eldridge

UMass basketball Coach Jack Leaman is the most successful coach in the school's history but his frequent temper tantrums, like the one above, make one wonder if he is also the most excitable coach in UMass history as well. Do excitability and success go together?

By RON ARENA
Sports Staff

For those who manage to squeeze into "the Cage" this coming season to witness the hopeful heroics of our beloved Minutemen, a new face should quickly strike their attention. That face belongs to a freshman flash named Alex Eldridge, and in combination with the rest of his body provides a bright new star for Coach Jack Leaman.

Eldridge, a 6' 2" guard and an all-American from New York City, is expected to see a great dead of playing time even though only a first-year man. At Taft High School in the Bronx, Alex averaged 20 points and 7 assists per game. He captured numerous awards in his high school career: all-America, all-city, all-Bronx, and top 100 prep school all-American. Perhaps just one award would have been more suitable—"all-everything." A highly sought-after athlete, in addition to UMass, Eldridge received offers from Tennessee, Marquette, South Carolina, St. Johns, and Hawaii.

One might ask why, all the recognition for a 20-point player? In a league very competitive for a high school level, more impressive than his scoring was his ball-handling and his leadership on the court. Replied Eldridge when asked what his best asset was, "The ability to control the tempo of the game. I like to handle the ball. That's my philosophy, control the game." Adds Coach Leaman, "He handles the ball well and runs the team well. He's quarterback of the offense. He's not an overpowering scorer, but his job is to get the ball to the shooters, and he does that as well as anyone I've seen."

Many feel Eldridge will be the next UMass basketball star, following in the footsteps of Julius Erving and Al Skinner. But Eldridge regrets any comparison to other players stating "I'm myself. I don't like to be compared with anybody." And as far as joining Erving and Skinner in the pro ranks, he responds, "I'd like to make the pros, but if I don't, I'll just do something else. You can't play forever." This easy-going attitude also contributes to his potential of being a star. Says Leaman, "He has the right kind of attitude to make it."

Another factor on his seemingly never ending repertoire of qualities, arrives from his non-shyness to play under clutch situations. "I love pressure" he claims. If any upcoming games resemble those against Providence College and Boston College last year, Eldridge should receive ample opportunity to perform under these pressure conditions.

On this year's squad, he feels "We're going to surprise a lot of people. My personal goal is for us to win the N. T. T. Again the unselfish attitude of Alex prevails.

Now! UMass goes to town

By GLENN POSTER
Sports Staff

Jim Town will be playing basketball for UMass this year. Town, a sophmore from Glens Falls, New York, sat out all last season because of a discrepancy in his high school transcript. NCAA probation would have put the UMass athletic department in an embarrassing position had Town played.

Heading into 1974-75, Jim Town suddenly finds himself with a new role. "I'm basically a rebounder. I'd like to help out John Murphy on the boards. Right now I'm not doing as good a job as I'd like. My offensive work will come around with game experience-something I haven't had in two years. And I'm still learning new things here like how to box out my man, something I didn't do in high school."

Town was also a versatile athlete in the small community of Glens Falls, located just outside Albany. He played three positions on the football team: tight end, lineman, and punter. This fall Dick MacPherson decided to go with John Romboli as the Minuteman punter instead of Jim Town.

"John is really a great guy. He beat me out for the job and he deserved it. Coach MacPherson knew what my position was. He wanted me to go out for basketball," said Town.

There were other schools in the country who were interested in Town's football services. "I got a lot of Letters from schools where football was the big sport on campus; places like Arkansas, SMU, and Tennessee which wanted me for basketball as well. I also heard from schools in the greater New York area around Manhattan."

Now the question arises as to how Jim Town found out about UMass. "Coach Gaudette came to a tournament game my senior year in high school. He didn't get a chance to talk to me, but he left some information. I knew that Julius Erving had come here so I came to look at the school and really liked what I saw."

What factors influenced Jim Towns final decision to come to UMass? "It had a good basketball tradition. Tennessee was a good football school, but its basketball team doesn't go anywhere. UMass goes to the NIT."

Some feel there may be pressure on Jim to perform last year after hearing so much about him through the local press. But Jim says that it doesn't bother him, he's had a lot of publicity since his high school days. "Right now I feel glad to be back in the swing of things. I enjoy the competition. I felt a part of the team last year because Coach Leaman always has a great bunch of guys. And it's the same on this team."

Finally Jim related his frustrating experiences of last year. "The decision came as a surprise to me. Naturally I was disappointed, but I couldn't do much about it. Appeals were made to the NCAA. It was very tough having to watch a game knowing that I could contribute to the team effort."

And this year: "We have a talented squad. The defense and rebounding are coming around. We'll score a lot of points. And we'll handle the big men. Last year, especially against Jacksonville, the big men handled us."

But Mark Donohue must play the waiting game

By JAY LUPPOLD
Sports Staff

Mark Donohue wants very much to be with a winner.

He wants to be with a winner so much that he passed up a Dartmouth education and everything else that comes with being an Ivy League graduate to play basketball for the University of Massachusetts.

But you won't see the 6'8" native of nearby Greenfield on the court with the Minutemen this season because of one of those funny NCAA eligibility roles that says a transfer student has to sit out a year before he plays with his "new school".

Donohue is willing to make the sacrifice though. "I can't wait to be a part of it, but I can. It's like a sacrifice of the immediate future for the long range future. It will be two years to look forward to," reasoned Donohue.

He will still have two years to play at UMass, however, even though he also played two at Dartmouth. The year of ineligibility does not take off any playing time.

It was a very hard and thought out decision for Donohue to leave Dartmouth; he loved it. But for the reasons of a temporarily troubled basketball program and a very sad situation, Mark decided to take the step. And judging from the frame of mind that Donohue is in now, he made the right choice and he is going to make the best of it.

"The situation at Dartmouth really got me down," he said, "the basketball program up there was at a bad time. There was a new coach, Tom O'Connor, who at 25 was one of the youngest in the country and on the varsity there were four sophomore and only one senior," he went on.

So, what eventually resulted from a hopeful season ended up with Big Green finishing with a 4-22 record, and it was a tough situation to live with. Everyone on the team got down on each other, it was a young coach, and it was a miserable situation.

Donohue scored 10.7 ppg and had about eight rebounds a game including three games where he scored 31 vs Penn, 28 vs Harvard and 25 against Boston College in a schedule that included some Big Ten action and some other very impressive clubs.

"We were pretty young and had to do some traveling. We lost the first couple of games close, but before we knew it we were 0-8 and it was all downhill from there," the likeable center-forward to be pointed out.

Oddly enough the hardest transition for Donohue to make at UMass, besides all those other cliched problems, is the fact that he is living at home. The social life that he had at Dartmouth is no longer there, and it will take a while for him to get settled. "But the guys have been great, this is a great bunch of people here and a great program that is on the up and up," he added.

Coach Jack Leaman couldn't be happier to have Donohue. "Mark is a class kid and we're proud to have him with us. He has been tutoring some of the freshmen and he has fit right in," said the boss.

"Primarily right now I want to be a great basketball player playing for a great team and I totally believe this will happen," said Donohue.

Who could ask for anything more? Right, Coach.

Skaters shoot for division II playoffs

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

The UMass hockey players slowly filed out of the visitors dressing room at the University of Vermont.

"Wow," said Minuteman forward John Muse as he approached a Collegian reporter. "We went this far this season and we're only going to lose two regulars. Pretty good, huh? You know I'm already looking forward to next year."

Next year is here. The "this far" that Muse spoke of was a near upset of Vermont, the 5th ranked team in the nation, in the semi-finals of the Division II playoffs. Vermont, the eventual Division II champion, will not be a problem for the Minutemen this year. Ex-Collegian hockey scribe Bill Balou called Vermont, "the Rockefellers of Division II." "The Rockefellers" have moved up to the higher rent district of Division I. Filling the 4 X 6 hole that Chick Rheault's graduation left is the problem.

Rheault, who played most of last season with limited use of his left arm, was the man who was counted on to make the big save, and he usually did. Playing with pain he inspired his teammates, and was the man they looked to as their leader on the ice.

Coach Jack Canniff has whittled the seven candidates for Rheault's vacated goaltending position down to a more workable three. Canniff is undecided on his final selection, but is optimistic.

"We have not settled on who is going to stand between the pipes, but we are confident that all three can handle the job," said Canniff. "I've got a feeling that one of these kids will come through for us," he added.

All three candidates for the job lack one basic ingredient — experience. The three are: senior Bruce Gledhill (Needham) who has never played in a varsity game, and sophomores Dana Redmond (Bedford) and Tim Riley (Arlington).

The Minutemen are deep at defense, led by senior Mike Ellis (Springfield), who has been a regular for two seasons and may be one of the best in the division on the blueline. Sophomore Tim Howes (Marblehead) back after a sensational freshman season will be paired with another sophomore Bob Jefferson up from the JV squad. Senior Bill Mintiens (Lynnfield) and sophomore John McCormack round out the top five spots. Canniff plans to use an alternate sixth defenseman, and that job is up for grabs. Holdovers Bob Quinlan and Dave Allesandroni and sophomore Tim Sweeney will be the grabbers.

Up front, the Minutemen have the potential to light the lamp at a steady pace. Canniff has been skating five lines during the pre-season and plans to skate four on a regular basis to wear down the opposition.

Kevin Connors (Arlington) will center an all senior line with John Muse (Brookline) and Steve Nims (Auburn) on the wings. This should be the Minutemen's best two-way line.

Billy Harris (Framingham) will center an all-junior line flanked by Jim Lyons (Medford) and Scott Stuart. Harris skated on Pat Keenan's line as a freshman and had 12 goals and 22 assists last year.

Sophomore Mike Merchant, who tied for the team scoring lead as a freshman, centers a line with sophomore Carl Burns (Arlington) on the rightwing and freshman Chris Lamby. Canniff on Lamby — "He's one hell of a good hockey player — when he gets some experience, watch out."

Scott McChesney will center an all freshman line with identical twins Bill and Bob White (Revere) as his wings.

"The White brothers are real aggressive hockey players," said Canniff. "They go charging into those corners and make things happen. And I don't know if they have a sixth sense, or what, but they always seem to know what the other is going to do. Both have great anticipation."

The Minutemen have a 1-3 record in pre-season scrimmages, but Canniff has been using five lines, eight defensemen and three goalies in a constant rotation. UMass dropped their initial scrimmage to Boston College 8-6. And the Eagles edged them in overtime last Saturday, 7-6. They had a sluggish outing at RPI resulting in a 5-1 loss and beat a team of ex-New England collegiate stars 5-4, on conditioning.

"This is the best skating club I've had since I've been at UMass," said Canniff. "If the forwards do their job and give the defense and goal time to mature, we'll be in there when playoff time rolls around."

The Minutemen will be playing a more extensive Division II schedule this year. They open their season with two new opponents, New England for their Orr Rink debut last Wednesday night, then travel to Lowell Tech on Saturday. Coach Canniff believes that the extra Division II games will benefit the Minutemen in the long run.

"The more wins you can get against Division II teams, the better the seed you get at playoff time," said Canniff.

The Boston Globe predicts that "Merrimack will be the super team in Division II of the ECAC this season." Merrimack coach Tom Lawler has Bill Pieri back in goal, Rick Kerrivan anchoring the defense, and two superb lines.

Salem State, with All-American defenseman Dick Lamby, will also be tough. Coach Canniff thinks that Bowdoin may be the team to watch. Army has stepped down from Division I and will also be in the fight for a playoff spot.

Goaltender job is still wide open

By TOM CROWLEY
Sports Staff

In hockey, the goalie is analogous to the center in basketball and the quarterback in football. They are supposedly the dominating position and a team can't win without a good one. But for the UMass hockey team, no one has dominated yet.

Bruce Gledhill, Jon Riley and Dana Redmond are the goaltenders for this year's hockey team and any of them could end up being the number one goalie.

"I hate to go into the season not knowing who the number one goalie is," said hockey coach Jack Canniff. "Last season, we knew who our number one goalie was. Even though he was out in the beginning of the season with a separated shoulder, Chich Rheault was our number one goalie."

There should be some evidence of who the number one goalie will be as the hockey team played last Wednesday night against New England College. And Coach Canniff is not an advocate of the "in-out-in" use of goalies.

"It just hasn't come to a head yet," Coach Canniff said of the lack of an apparent number one goalie.

"We've played in three game situations so far," Dana Redmond said. "Each of us felt we played the best in them."

Junior Bruce Gledhill was on the varsity last year but played very rarely. Sophomores John Riley and Dana Redmond are used to the competition for the starting not after last year when they did the same on the JV's.

Perhaps because of this tight contest for the number one post, the goalies have responded.

"The goalies have been better than I thought before the beginning of the season," said Coach Canniff. "The defense in front of them has collapsed before they have.

Even though the three have very little varsity experience among them, John Binkoski is teaching them some of his.

Binkoski played frequently last year for the varsity and played at UMass for four years.

"Last year I developed a close relationship with Coach Canniff and I wanted to help by working out with the goalies," Binkoski said.

During part of the practice, Binkoski takes the goalies aside and works with them.

"They practice all the phases; cutting down the angles, handling lot shots from both sides, agility drills and recovering from weird positons," Binkoski outlined.

In practice, he stresses talking to the defense and knowing what to do in a game situation.

"It's more mental than anything else," Redmond said. "We're playing on a different level now."

Riley said, "He points out what we're doing wrong and tries to keep us from screwing up."

"He keeps us talking to the defense," Gledhill added.

The protection of the crease will rest on one of these three for the season, and, hopefully, the post-season, too, but the toughest competition they face so far could be from their own teammates for the number one spot in goal.

UMass hockey recruiting

By DAVE EIBLE
Sports Staff

Excellence in college athletics depends a lot on recruiting. If you want to have a good football, basketball, or hockey team, you want to try and get the high school athletes who would do the best job for your team.

Russ Kidd, the amiable pipe-smoking assistant coach of the UMass varsity hockey team is a key member in the UMass hockey recruiting effort. Although head coach Jack Canniff has the final decision on all recruiting decisions, Kidd, who is also the JV hockey coach, does most of the scouting of players. Canniff is the varsity coach and just can't take that much time away from his main job to scout players throughout the state of Massachusetts.

Recruiting is a difficult job. Since most of the good high school hockey is played in the eastern part of the state, in and around Boston, Kidd's got to make several long hauls a year to scout players.

"If you're coaching in Boston, you can pop over to a high school rink and catch a game, but I have to go over a 100 miles to see games."

For Russ, Intersession is the busiest time of the recruiting season. "From the start of finals to the beginning of the second semester I make trips almost every day. It's difficult to make too many trips during the season since I have a team of my own to coach."

When recruiting a high school player, a recruiter points out the good points of a school. In UMass' case Kidd stresses the school's good academic reputation, its rural location, and lively social life. But since UMass doesn't play in a rink of its own, a severe recruiting problem exists."

"People can't believe we don't have a rink of our own. It's awful hard to explain why we don't. We have a lot going for us, but if we had our own rink, it'd be great.

But the lack of an on-campus rink is not the only thing that causes recruiting problems. UMass is Division Two in hockey and as such must compete against Division One teams like New Hampshire, Harvard, and Boston University for players.

"If we could show a kid a nice ice palace, it would make him feel good. He could picture himself out there. If you're a recruiter for a school that has a nice facility of its own, that can really help you sell your team. But we're also in Division Two. A Division One team means more ballyhoo and more recognition. If a Division One school wants a kid over a Division Two school, they'll get 'em. We're good but the difference between us and a Division One school is that they have two or three blue chippers."

Pat Keenan, a native of Weston Ontario, is the all-time Umass hockey scorer. He graduated in 1973, and is also the last hockey player from Canada to play for UMass.

"It costs a lot of money to go up to Canada. Our recruiting budget is somewhat limited so we've got to recruit in Massachusetts, and make our scholarship money go as far as it can. If we give a guy a full ride and he doesn't make the team or leaves school after one year, we lose the money which goes back into a general fund. So recruiting someone from Canada is a shaky proposition."

Recruiting like anything else has its rules of conduct. A recruiter can't talk to players at game sites, and usually you have to get the permission of the coach to approach a player.

Russ Kidd's philosophy about recruiting is a very simple one.

"I'm not like a big-time recruiter. I don't promise anyone cars or money or anything ridiculous. It's like a detective doing legwork. I don't come on phony to anyone. I try to be fair and honest to everyone."

The recruiter has a simple test by which he measures his success or failure: the team's performance on the ice. And in the case of Russ Kidd, the man who does most of the scouting and Jack Canniff who has the final say, the result of their efforts has been five straight Division Two playoff appearances and a championship in 1972.

That record speaks for itself.

Jack Canniff: He realized a dream

By RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

The year was 1967 and the UMass hockey program was about to awake from a long restless nightmare. It took a man with a dream to do it, but he did. That man was Jack Canniff.

In 1966 the UMass hockey team was 3-16. The program was dying. There was no recruiting program, no ice facility, and only a handful of rink rats wandered into their games by mistakes.

Canniff would change that. He felt he could build a team to compete with any in New England. He had a dream and he had a plan. The plan worked, the dream lingers on.

Canniff has been successful in hockey at every level as both a player and a coach. He played for EDDie Burns New England champion high school team at Arlington in 1949. From the tutelage of the most successful high school coach in the history of Mass. Canniff moved to the most successful college coach ever.

Canniff began an 11 year coaching tenure at Gloucester High in 1956. He came to UMass in 1967 after compiling a 104-30-22 record at Gloucester, and nine berths in the Mass. state hockey tournament.

The plan that Canniff had was to recruit the quality Massachusetts hockey players that weren't scooped up by Harvard, BU, and BC. Another part of the plan was to instill that winning tradition and attitude of his into the UMass hockey program.

His dream to bring this winning program into a new arena before packed houses of screaming UMass fans. Canniff was sure the dream would materialize. The athletic department had been talking about building a rink and 1970 looked like a reasonable completion date.

After two losing seasons in 1968 and 1969, Canniff has led his team to five consecutive Division II winning seasons and playoff berths. The winning attitude and tradition had been established.

In 1969 the Minutemen had a 10-8 record, their first winning season in ten years. Canniff led UMass to their first Division II playoff ever in 1970. In 1971 the Minutemen coasted through the playoffs to capture their first division championships. That year Canniff was awarded the Edward Jeremiah trophy as the NCAA College Division Coach of the year.

One aspect of the UMass hockey program that has not changed during the Canniff regime is the long awaited hockey arena. The UMass hockey team still remains a group of rinkless vagabonds. The month long intersession will once again turn them into a band of wandering gypsies scouring all over Massachusetts for ice time.

This is not the dream I had when I came here," said Canniff. "But with what we have to work with and the way we do things here, I have to be satisfied with the accomplishments that we have made."

For Mike Ellis college is more than just hockey

By JAY LUPPOLD
Sports Staff

For defenseman and co-captain Mike Ellis of the UMass hockey team, helping other people is a very big part of what he is doing today and what he will do tomorrow.

He is a physical education major. Right there a lot of people may say, "of course, what other athlete up here isn't". Well, first of all, that is not a correct assumption and Mike Ellis doesn't fit into that "skating his way through college" bit.

Ellis' concentration is physical therapy with the handicapped and retarded. Last semester he did his actual student teaching at Belchertown State School and now this semester is working at the VA Hospital in Northampton Monday through Friday from 8:30-3:00. "I really do enjoy the work, the people have touched me in a big way, they are really accepting and you can appreciate how they need someone when you help them", said Ellis.

Ellis, a solid 5'11", 180 pounder, is able to appreciate what it means to be down and out and to need somebody. He had been through four operations up until last year for a tumor behind his ear on his neck. And finally at the end of the fall semester last year he spent four more weeks in the hospital after a 7½ hour operation to finally rid himself of the problem.

"That was a tough time back then, I was emotionally messed up and about the only things I cared about were my family and hockey", he related, "and they both came through for me to get me out of the doldrums". Coach Canniff was there to tell me that I had a place on the team when I came back, which was very important to me", he concluded.

And Ellis thinks it was those bad times that prompted him to be able to relate to and enjoy what he is currently doing. "I wouldn't change my field for anything now", he said.

As for hockey, after being all-Western-Mass for three years at Classical High School in Springfield he elected to come to UMass, and after a lot of hard work and tough times as mentioned above, has come far enough to co-captain what he thinks is "the most exciting and quickest team" since he has been here.

The senior defenseman views his role as a co-captain (John Muse is the other co-captain) as a kind of middle man type of thing. "I kind of look at it as a meditating role more than anything else", he explained.

"I think the added speed we will have should also help out a lot in defensing teams because with the speed we will be having the forwards being able to get back more to backcheck to help out", he added.

And with the promising young talent that has been admirably recruited by coaches Canniff and Kidd for this year, Mike Ellis' counseling and mediating along with John Muse will likely be noticed for the 1974 Minutemen.

John Muse: Canniff's type of player

By WALT POWERS
Sports Staff

One of eight hockey players in a family of eleven, co-captain Johnny Muse plays a hard-hitting close-checking brand of hockey that has characterized teams coached by Jack Canniff.

John, a gregarious, 5'8" senior with an elfish grin plays right wing on a line centered by Kevin Connors with a burly Steve Nims on the left wing. It is a hard checking line by Connors, perhaps the team's most consistent scorers in the games that count.

Muse has never been an overwhelming scoring threat even in high school, but he possesses a hard, fairly accurate shot. He scored just seven goals last year, but two of them figured heavily in dramatic games. The first was against Merrimack with only 1.50 left in the game, tying the score 1-1 in a game UMass eventually won in overtime. The second was the last goal of the season for UMass, and he scored it against Division II Champion Vermont in the Division II playoffs. It came with just 2.50 left and narrowed the heavily-favored Catamount's lead to a 4-3 in a game that UMass came heartbreakingly close to winning.

John sees this year's team as more aggressive, better forechecking than last year's, and he cites three veteran lines and the loss of goalie Chick Rheault as the reasons.

"We depended on Rheault to make the brilliant save a lot last year, and knowing he won't be back there to save us will keep us more alert," he said.

Elected co-captain by his teammates, Muse sees his role mainly as an example setter. For the 22-year-old Brookline native, the honor is especially significant because he spent most of his Freshman year on the bench.

"I guess I took it for granted that I'd make the team," he confesses, "and I showed up for practice way out of shape. I busted my hump the next summer, though, and it paid off

Cage renovation doubtful for now

By Dave Ostrander
Sports Staff

Since April of 1972 there have been plans for renovation of Curry Hick's Cage. The only roadblock holding up progress is financial. Does anyone have $1,750,000 to spare?

That was the price tag given by Mr. "Bud" Cobb, assistant to the dean, responsible for upkeep of the three physical education facilities on campus: Boyden, Northeast, and the Cage.

He explained that the chances for any renovation looked "doubtful" in the immediate future, but explained that it was an uncertain matter that depended upon the state legislature's view of educational priorities.

Back in 1972, a study group was organized to look into Cage improvement, since the building of a convocation center, which had been in the works since 1966, seemed to have faded into the Western Mass. sunset.

The study group came up with the 1.7 million figure, which would be used to renovate many of the antiquated facilities that the forty-five year old Cage had to offer.

Priorities (I think I've been in Whitmore too often) were given to improvement in toilet, electrical, heating, and locker facilities.

As for seating expansion, this would only take place after these other areas were taken care of, In the plans the capacity would be increased from the present legal level of 4500 to 5500.

Mr. Cobb posed the question of whether the Cage would become a single sport facility, namely basketball, if the improvements were accomplished. Presently the Cage houses baseball (in early spring), basketball, track, concerts, and other types of public gatherings (would you believe a circus?)

Since 1961, when previous Athletic Director Warren McGuirk said the Cage would have to be replaced soon by a combination field-house-assembly hall, the UMass students have waited through a number of plans and years for a decent place to watch campus sports. That facility has been denied them due to past administration's hesitancy to act. True, the present athletic fee has not risen since 1962, but when the opportunity to acquire state funding was there, it was not taken advantage of.

For now, though, we have the Cage, and what it lacks in comfort, it compensates in atmosphere.

Those already indoctrinated to the Cage know of the electric feeling that courses through the rabid UMies. This year should be no different.

Key could be tremendous depth

Women gymnasts defend eastern title

By WALT POWERS
Sports Staff

Women's gym coach Virginia Evans has a problem: How can a team that loses four seniors holding every individual scoring record successfully defend it's Eastern title?

The solution, at this point, seems to be depth.

"This year will be tougher in that I don't have the people we know could have a good year," Evans says, "but hopefully with our depth, we'll always have six healthy people around who can do the job."

The graduation of Heidi Armstrong, Betsy East, Margie Combs and Anne Vexler marked the passing of an era at UMass, an era that brought Eastern (1974) and National (1973) titles to the school for the first time. East, Combs and Vexler were recognized all-Americans and Combs and Vexler each hold two of the team's four individual event records. "There's no question that we'll feel the loss of their leadership," says veteran Assistant Coach Mike Kasavana.

The loss of these seniors, plus Jodi Hitt, who left the team to concentrate on her dance work, however, should not remove UMass from national contention. A talented group of ten freshmen, largest in the program's history, led by a small, championship-seasoned coterie of veterans will take care of that.

Jeannine Burger will be the key performer on a team composed primarily of all arounds. An AIAW all-American in 1973, the senior co-captain is coming off an outstanding season that saw her capture the Eastern all-around title and a fourth-place finish in the AIAW nationals in vaulting. She could be hard pressed to retain her title by Sue Cantwell, a freshman ranked 15th in the nation by the United States Gymnastics Federation. Sophomore Linda Nelligan, coming off a wrist operation that will keep her off the beam, is the team's other returning Eastern finalist.

Injuries could affect all the remaining veterans except Junior Gail McCarthy, who is having a good fall training season on bars and vaulting. Junior Alicia Goode is coming off a leg injury that required surgery, and injuries have kept senior Gail Hannan out of action for over a year. The most costly injury could be that affecting co-captain Marion Kulick, whose sub-par ankle makes her a question mark.

"I don't like to use injuries as an excuse, because they hit everybody," Evans said. "But they're certainly not going to help us."

But the freshmen. Ah, the freshmen! This is the deepest, strongest crop of frosh the team has ever fielded and it is on their efforts that the new era in the women's gymnastic program will be established. Besides the aforementioned Cantwell, All-arounds Pam Steckroat, a Pennsylvania standout, Diane Lovato, one of New Jersey's better gymnasts last year, and Margie Magraw, the star of the Massachusetts High School State Meet last year, have had extensive competitive experience, and Cheryl Smith, Keely O'Rourke, Regine Hartime, Debbie Law, Cindy Severyn, Debbie Sargeson, Anne Olson, an exchange student from Oregon, all have the potential to contribute.

The start of the season is still two months away and as yet there is not set lineup. "We're not looking at total routines yet," Evans said. "Right now we're working on the big tricks, and we don't know yet if all the gymnasts can make them without a spotter." Both Evans and her assistant Mike Kasavanna expect more twists off the bars and vaults and more tumbling on the balance beam than ever before. And with the influx of qualified freshmen, Evans has placed a greater emphasis on all-around, though this does not mean they all will necessarily compete as all-around.

As in the past, the key meets of the season will include the National and Eastern Championships and dual meets against Southern Connecticut, Springfield, and this year, Penn State. On February 15th, the gymnasts will battle Springfield at the Cage in the continuation of a fierce rivalry that dates back to 1963, when the two teams met in the first women's dual meet ever held in New England.

February 1st, they will take on a revitalized Penn State team in a revolutionary co-ed meet at Penn State in which the men's team will also participate. Because of scheduling problems they will not face traditionally strong Clarion State this year.

A first place finish in the Easterns and a third place finish in the nationals is a tough act to follow and Evans isn't expecting miracles, but she's far from pessimistic about the coming season.

"With all the depth we have," she says, "I think we could have a pretty good year."

Mike Kasavana: male in women's gym

By JAY LUPPOLD
Sports Staff

Mike Kasavana is the assistant coach on the women's gymnastics team. This winter he will be going into his fifth year at the position, but his tenth here at UMass. He graduated in 1970 after captaining the men's team both his junior and senior years.

He stayed on to receive his Masters in Business and then his Doctoral in Information and Control Systems in SBA, but the girls don't call him doctor.

MIKE KASAVANA

Now 27, Kasavana has not wasted much time, always keeping himself busy at one thing or another.

With the above doctoral he has helped food services with statistics, and with the fiddling around with computers he helped to come up with a system to evaluate judges for the United States Gymnastics Federation.

Among some of Kasavana's other different time consumers are him membership on the AAU Trampoline and Tumbling and the United States Trampoline Association (USTA). Oh, and he is also the 1971 National YMCA trampoline champion.

In the summer, Kasavana is a camp director at a gymnastics clinic which is called the Catalina Island Gymnastics Clinic.

Some of Kasavana's weekends are also spent tumbling around, besides coaching the girls on Sunday (the team practices six days a week excluding Saturday). He teams up with a gymnast from UCLA named Steve Lerner in a trampoline act at Zelda's in Northampton. He doesn't waste a minute.

Kasavana is presently working on a manual on gymnastics safety and corrective spotting, which is what those people do who stand aside the gymnasts while they are performing.

One of Kasavana's primary objectives of being involved at the gymnastics program at UMass is that he would like to get people "to understand gymnastics, to try to get a mental as well as physical appreciation for the sport".

"In three to four years the women's gymnastics team has gone from a knitting circle to a national championship", pointed out the multi-talented Kasavana.

People would often think of a guy coaching a women's sport as different anyway, and Kasavana is well aware of this. "But I view women as athletes, of course we are all friends, but it is a professional relationship. And I think people all see this just by looking at what we have all achieved", reasoned Kasavana.

Something in the back of Kasavana's mind now is the idea of maybe getting together a traveling human circus. Sounds wild doesn't it, but don't put it past him. "I can think of it as being a feasible idea around 1976. It would really be something around the bicentennial, wouldn't it". It would be something around the idea of having traveling gymnasts, and wouldn't it be something around the bicentennial for the women's assistant gymnastics coach who has just recently taken up juggling?

Competitive athletic background makes gym coach Evans unique

By WALT POWERS
Sports Staff

With a background in both gymnastics and organized team sports, Women's gymnastics Coach Virginia Evans is unique.

Evans, a slender, athletic brunette, has coached gymnastics for seven years, the last two at UMass, and in that time her teams have captured two national championships and never finished out of the Eastern top five. Virginia, though, is a relative with the sport until her undergraduate days at Springfield College.

Coaching has always been an ambition of Ms. Evans. "I got turned on to sports in when I was in junior high school," she says, "and since then I've always wanted to coach or work with women's athletics."

Before attending Springfield College, Ms. Evans, who admits to being 33, started in field hockey, basketball, lacrosse and track at Central Morrisville High School in New York. "It's near the infamous Colgate," she jokes, referring to the football team's recent defeat.

It was her basketball expertise that landed Ms. Evans her first coaching position after graduating from Maryland with a masters in phys ed. At Towson State College she served a year as an assistant basketball coach before transforming a club gymnastics program into a competitive one. The team qualified for the DGWS Division II nationals in her initial season and won them in 1968.

In her final year at Towson, the 1971 Eastern Championship Meet was held there, and Evans served as the meet's director. She then joined the UMass faculty as a phys-ed teacher and assistant coach.

"Kitty Kjeldsen (Founder and coach of the UMass program) wanted an assistant," she says, and the only way she could get the phys-ed department to hire me was to sell me to the administration as a teacher."

When Kjeldsen retired after the 71-72 season, Evans took control of the team. In the 72-73 season she coached the team to a stunning victory in the IAIW National Championships and last year the team upset Springfield College to win the Eastern Championship meet. Both were firsts for the program.

VIRGINIA EVANS

Gymnastics, by nature, is not a team sport, and one of her primary objectives as a coach is the development of team awareness among athletes who had trained independently in the past. She encourages self responsibility, and long range planning, which means, for instance, that if a gymnast is hurt, her practice time is spent helping a teammate. "I've got the ultimate responsibility", she says. "But there is a lot of group input concerning our training procedures. I try to establish a hierarchy."

Evans, who is currently enrolled in a doctoral program in Sports studies in addition to her coaching duties, says she likes the university, and has no present intentions of leaving "—Well, I guess everyone dreams of coaching the Olympics at least sometime," she admits, "But I've got to be realistic,

For all-arounder Jeannine Burger

UMass was definitely the right choice

Senior Jeannine Burger strikes a pensive pose while working out on the beam in preparation for her final season as a UMass gymnast. Jeannine, a native of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania will compete in the All-Around bracket.

By Dave Eibel
Sports Staff

She's a small package of dynamite and after Joe Namath she's probably the second most famous athlete to come out of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania fifty miles north of Pittsburgh.

She is senior woman gymnast Jeannine Burger, co-captain of this year's UMass women's gymnastics team with Harian Kulick.

Last April, she sat in the back of a Ford station wagon driving through the palm-lined streets of Sacramento, California and cried her heart out after the team had finished third in the National Women's Gymnastics Championships at Cal State - Sacramento. But now, seven months later, Jeannine can look forward to another shot at the championship.

"I was disappointed that we lost. We didn't hit as well as we should have. And in a meet the team that hits is the team that'll win," said Jeannine prior to a practice this week.

Jeannine's beginnings in the sport can be traced to her participation in Turners Club back in Beaver Falls.

"I started in it when I was six. The club practiced marching and drilling but it wasn't really gymnastics. When I was eleven I tried out for the club gymnastics team that competed with other Turner's clubs in western Pennsylvania."

Jeannine started competing in grade nine, and finished third place in the all-around category in Pennsylvania three years running. She then applied to UMass, Springfield, and Southern Illinois University and four years later is happy she came here.

"Herb Vogel (the coach of SIU, the defending national champions) told me to go somewhere else, but I heard him talking to some people in Sacramento during the Nationals, and he said that telling me that was his biggest mistake. UMass has been great academically and competing in gymnastics at such a big school has been really exciting."

This year the UMass team will find itself beginning a new era of sports. Anne Vexler, Margie Combs, Betsy East, and Heidi Armstrong, who helped UMass to its first-ever national championship graduated and Jeannine finds herself the only senior on a team, the majority of which is made up of freshmen.

"It'll be really different not having those guys on the team this year. Those are the guys I competed with for three years, but potentially this will be the best team ever."

And although the nucleus of the team is made of up freshmen, Jeannine doesn't think inexperience will be a problem.

"I really don't consider any of these girls inexperienced since they've been through so much competition."

Jeannine could be a potential world class gymnast but at this point she'd rather avoid the heavily politicized Olympics or Pan Am games.

"The trials for the Pan Am games won't take place until March or April of 1975. If I go to graduate school at a place without gymnastics I probably wouldn't have a chance to try out."

"I wouldn't like the pressure and the politics of world competition. I've always enjoyed the sport and I wouldn't want to walk away from the sport disliking it."

Ms. Burger would have had a great chance of being an international class gymnast if she would have attended one of the many professional gymnastics clubs around the country. Pennsylvania has several excellent ones, but she says that going to college suited her needs much better than the rigors of a gymnastics club.

"At the collegiate level I feel gym is part of my life but not my whole life. I don't have to spend eight hours a day working out like I'd be doing for a club. I wanted a degree and I gained a lot more from college than I would have from spending four years in a gymnastics school."

The highlight of the season for UMass women gymnasts could be February first at State College Pennsylvania when UMass will face Penn State in women's and men's gymnastics on the same bill before what should be a capacity crowd of 10,000.

"It'll be the first meet that the girls are competing with the guys. At least five of the girls on the team come from Pennsylvania, including myself, so it should be a sort of homecoming."

And knowing what Jeannine is capable of on the balance beam, vaulting, uneven parrallel bars and floor exercise competitions, her competitive homecoming ought to be a happy one.

Women loopers rebuilding

By LINDA MACKLER
Sports Staff

There were sixty-five people at basketball tryouts Monday afternoon and because they are still in process, this season's team is not established. Coach Carol Albert is choosing the team on the basis of this week's performances.

"Nobody has a position locked up," Coach Albert said, "but the team should be decided by the end of this week."

One veteran will not be returning and may be sorely missed. Jenny Edminster, last year's top scorer and rebounder, has transferred to Southern Connecticut College. She had set a 12.4 scoring pace and taken 10.3 rebounds per game.

The team had a 7-5 record last year and won their first round game in the Regional Tournament at New York. They lost their second round competition, though, to second-seeded Queens College.

Coach Ablert says that she is looking for speed and jumping ability. There is not a lot of height. The three tallest possible players are only 5'10" tall.

"But," the coach said, "there is a good deal of mobility, so there will be better playing height than actual physical height."

She plans to concentrate on the fundamentals. Coach Albert expects to build the team this season.

"I think we have the nucleus for a strong team," she said, "that can be developed over the seasons."

The competition this year presents the same powerhouses as usual. Springfield College is a strong and traditional rival.

Southern Connecticut College is extremely powerful. They have been one of the top three nationally rated teams for four years.

On February 12th, for an interesting interlude, UMass will face an Australian touring team in the Curry Hicks Cage at 8;00 p.m. Coach Albert is also hoping to schedule a pre-season scrimmage.

Women swimmers are strongest in 4 years

By Linda Mackler
Sports Staff

"This is the strongest team I've had in four years," Coach Pat Griffin said preceding her swim team's opening meet tonight. "There are better swimmers and divers than ever before."

This statement will be tested at 7:00 p.m. against Smith and Mt. Holyoke Colleges in the north pool.

The UMass swim team was one of the top five colleges at the New England Championship and placed fourteenth in the Easterns. Their dual meet record of 4 - 6 is not truly representative of their talent, because they were competing against the four other top teams in New England.

The returning members include last year's individual MVP, Mary Ellen Dash, senior Laurie Seluk, sophomore freestylers Cindy Whiting and Carol Griffiths, and diver Carol Cantebury. There are two transfer students who appear to be promising newcomers. Junior Penny Noyes from Gardner College is a backstroker and freestyler. She qualified for the 1972 Olympic trials. Reenie Groden from Walpole University specializes in the butterfly and freestyle.

Mary Ellen Dash, on an exchange program at the University of Alabama will be back next semester for the majority of the meets. She was the New England champion for the 200 yard Individual Medley and remains the record holder with a time of 2:21.1 At the Nationals at Pennsylvania State University last year, Mary Ellen placed fifteenth in the 100 yard Butterfly, seventeenth in the 100 yard Freestyle, and nineteenth in the 200 yard Individual Medley.

Along with Mary Ellen; Cindy Whiting, Carol Griffiths, and Laurie Seluk represented UMass last year at Penn State for the National Collegiate Championships.

The four divers include Carol Cantebury, who took sixth place in the New England competition on a one meter dive, Karen Mastrobattista, Linda Schuld, and Janine Wong.

Wrestlers outside hopes for New Englands

By JOHN BOCK
Sports Staff

An appropriate name for last year's Minuteman wrestling team might have been "The Miracle Workers." After a 9-6 dual match season, third place finish in the Yankee Conference Tournament, and a 37-3 pasting by Rhode Island, their first place finish in the New Englands was nothing short of a miracle.

There is a chance that the 1974-1975 version of UMass wrestling might have to do the same thing. For a team that only lost two seniors to graduation out of ten starters, the wrestling room in Boyden Gymnasium has an awful lot of mat space for rent. Returning veterans at 126 pounds, 142 pounds, and 190 pounds have fallen to injury or personal mishap. Dick Muri, fourth at 126 and a senior injured a leg in a motorcycle accident and then separated a shoulder. Doug LeMire, third at 142, was forced to leave school for personal reasons. Robin Osborne, second at 190 and a very bright prospect, has been sidelined with a mysterious nervous affliction.

While the 1974 season ended on a good note the recruiting season was a lot less successful. Some very bright recruits chose at the last minute to take their talent elsewhere. As in the past the line of drop outs from the program could have filled a bus. Some forty wrestlers came out for practice in October and the squad is now down to about twenty-five. Football will send a few heavyweights but the injuries thus far in pre-season have been plaguing the depth-poor light and middle weights.

"This is the most skillful team we've ever had at UMass and how good we will be depends on how tough we are," speculated Coach Barr.

"We have no depth but fairly good balance and it is going to be really tough finding JV's to fill some of the weights," he said.

Toughness is a matter of personal physical attributes and a positive mental attitude. That is one thing that the Minutemen have enough of. A look at the line up reveals: Peter Sachon at 118 pounds is the man to beat. A sophomore from Somers, New York, Sachon is probably the strongest man on the team for his size and weight, and employs a super-aggressive wrestling style that gets him into trouble sometimes but always provides an exciting bout.

Paul Rodriguez, a junior from Valley Stream, Long Island, saw some limited varsity action as a freshman but was sidelined with injuries and academics last season. He has shown much improvement on his feet but needs work on his mat wrestling. He will be pushed by Sophomore Greg Tallon and Frosh Ed Sunter. Junior Steve Ruggeri was looking good up until he contracted mononucleosis and was benched until December.

The 134 pound weight class is one of the bright spots on the team. It will be very solidly anchored by senior co-captain Russell Chateauneuf. Russ is the defending New England University Wrestling Association Champion (NEUWA) in the weight class and a top fifteen finisher in the NCAA's last year. He sat out his sophomore year with a knee injury after a brilliant freshman year capped by his first New England Championship at 134. Last season he wrestled most of his bouts at 142 but saw the pot of gold was going to be at 134 and dropped the weight. Any opposition at this class might come from frosh Tom Hill.

The 142 pound class is the dartboard of the team. Leading contenders might be senior Alan Elmont, junior college transfer Bob Bennett, sophomore Dave Schutt, and freshmen Tim Fallon and Don Michaelson. Elmont may lack finesse but more than makes up for it by way of sheer physical punishing that has earned him the nickname "Ali". Bennett comes to UMass from Farmingdale Junior College on Long Island and looks good on his feet and better than average on the mat. Dave Schutt is by far and away the tallest middleweight and this height gives him an advantage on his feet. Tim Fallon comes with impressive credentials from New England power, Lowell High School. Finesse and quickness make him a contender but he could definitely use more strength.

At 150 pounds sophomore Steve Jabaut has set himself up as the man to beat. A third place finisher at 167 in the NEUWA, the Glens Falls, New York grappler looks better than ever at his best weight. He has the best high-crotch single leg on the team and is probably the most agile man in the line-up. He will see competition from Jimmy Jordan, a junior from Garden City, Long Island who sat last year out with injuries and academics. He is much improved in his mat wrestling and has been one of the few conditioning fanatics on the team. Kevin Griffin out of Brookline, might work in at 150, also.

The 158 pound class may be another bright spot if junior Co-captain Cliff Blom can overcome a knee injury to fill it. There was no doubt in anyone's mind that he was ready to wrestle three weeks ago but an injury incurred at the Colgate Open (where he placed second) has kept him off the mat for more than a week. If his knee is healthy then he will be at 158, if not then freshman Preston Kise may fill it or sophomore Mike Twardy. Both New York wrestlers, Kise comes with a very fine high school record. His only loss his senior year was to the state champ in the sections. Twardy saw JV action last year and has potential but is fighting to get down to weight.

A transfer from Montclair State College in New Jersey has established himself at 167. Tom Smith, a high school teammate of Jim Jordan, comes from a really good program at Montclair and brings his outstanding takedown ability with him. Depending on who URI and BU can field, Smitty may be a shoe in for top New England honors. Freshman Frank Kenney has proved to be good competition for Smith but needs experience.

Another veteran from the '74 championship team will probably anchor at 177. Bob Spaulding, sophomore out of East Greenbush, New York took a fourth at last year's New Englands and seems to be the most improved wrestler returning to the squad this year. A man with an excellent duck under, Spaulding has boosted his mat wrestling ability and conquered the weight problem of last year. He will be pushed by Bill Fickert, a freshman from Hampshire Regional who had the unusual distinction of placing third two years in a row in the Massachusetts State High School tournament while wrestling as an independent.

The 190 pound class is still a contest between seniors Bob Konowicz and Tom O'Connell. Konowicz has seen limited varsity action in the last three seasons but looks to be gunning for the number one spot this year. Strength and an awareness of mistakes are his prime assets. Junior College transfer O'Connell sat out last year with a severe shoulder separation but has come on quite strong this season. Defensive minded on his feet and a head-hunter on the mat, Tom admits that getting off the bottom is his main problem.

A team is sometimes judged by whether or not they have the big boy at heavyweight. UMass is ajudged quite sound because they have defending New England Champ Dennis Fenton at heavy. Currently on loan to football, Fenton brings a sigh of relief to everyone. His only losses as a freshman were to Ray Miro of URI (whom he subsequently beat in the NE's), All-America Tim Karpoff of Yale, and Don Mayorga of Hofstra, who narrowly missed placing in the NCAA's. Senior Steve Swartz has worked more than a little in hopes of giving Fenton a run for it.

As far as the New England wrestling scene is concerned it is still the Big Four — UMass, URI, and BU for the University Division and perennial toughs Springfield College in the College Division. UMass will have five home duals this season and highlighting these will be matches with Boston University (the season opener on November 26), Rhode Island on December 4, and Springfield College on February 8. All home matches are in Boyden Auxiliary gym and begin at 7:30 p.m.

THE CHOKER — Co-Captain Russ Chateaneuf displays one of the holds that made him the New England Champion at 134 pounds last year.

The Bigger The Woofer, The Better The Bass, Right?

Every speaker system has a "woofer." It's the large speaker that reproduces the bass. It has to be larger so that it can move enough air, because the lower the note, the more air must be moved to reproduce it. Which is why so many people who like bass will size up a speaker by the size of its woofer. (A bigger woofer can move more air with a smaller motion.)

But a big woofer can introduce Big distortion. Especially at loud volume when it can't get out of its own way. (That's called "cone-flex," when the edge of the woofer can't keep up with the center.)

Happily, there is a way to get better bass from a smaller woofer. By increasing the distance it can travel in and out. We can move the same amount of air, without the same amount of cone-flex. The bass actually comes out better . . . more crisp and clear.

And that's the whole secret behind the EPI 90. It contains some of the first successfully designed "long-travel" woofers. Small enough to eliminate cone-flex (8-inch with a 5½-inch cone diameter), but very compliant (it can travel a full ½-inch, whereas most woofers that size will only move 1/200-inch).

At Fred Locke Stereo, we've put the EPI 90 into a system designed for those who love smooth bass. The receiver is from KENWOOD . . . the KR 4400 . . . a well built model with sensitive FM and all the power you'll need for exceptional bass (25 Watts ASWP/channel at less than .5% distortion from 20-20K Hz). The turntable is from BSR . . . their new model 2520W changer . . . complete with walnut base and ADC K7E cartridge. And of course the EPI 90 speakers (also available in walnut as the EPI 100).

For a long time people who liked bass have heard that "bigger is better."
But our EPI 90 system is better than its biggers.

Men's gymnastics situation remains static

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

When the semester ended last spring the future of the gymnastics program was up in the air. During the semester a committee supporting the gymnastics team has solicited about 12,000 petition signatures that they presented to the dean of the School of Physical Education David Bischoff, Chancelor Bromery, and President Wood. The petition called for the hiring of a full-time gymnastics coach after this season which the Athletic department, under the direction of department head Frank McInerney, did not plan to do.

Over the summer nothing changed except that premier gymnast Gene Whelan transferred to Penn State so that he could attend a school where he could be assured of quality coaching and competition. Also most of the recruits, 10 of 12 to be exact, that Coach Tom Dunn was trying to get to come to UMass went elsewhere because of the uncertainty of the future of the gymnastics program here.

As the situation stands now there are plans by the Athletic Department to hire a part-time gymnastics coach after this season. Present coach Tom Dunn has been put in charge of the search to find someone willing and suitable for the job.

Early this fall before assistant Athletic Director Bob O'Connell went to the ECAC league meetings, the men's gymnastics team decided that they would like to remain in the EIGL. Those teams therefore have been scheduled for next season also. This scheduling is in line with the New England level provision that all minor sports at UMass will be abiding by from now on. Gymnastics will be in the same situation as all the other minor sports in this respect.

As of right now, Coach Dunn has had about 15 people contact him regarding the position as a part-time coach. About five of these people, Dunn said, he would regard as good for the job.

The position, as it is now proposed, would be simply that of a part-time coach with no faculty status whatsoever involved. It could be that the person would be a graduate student whose pay would be in the form of a stipend paying for school or it could be a non-student who is employed elsewhere in the area and can work in the time to give to gymnastics.

Obviously, this situation means that the caliber of the men's gymnastics program will not be where it was at in the past. With only a part-time coach, it is unlikely that the time needed in practice hours to develop a top team will be available. More important, though, is the recruitment factor. A part-time coach will be paid basically for the practice hours. The time that recruitment might take up would probably be optional to the person who takes on the job. It is possible, though unlikely, that someone could take the job that would be willing to put in that extra time. But the way the Athletic Department seems to be feeling about the gymnastics situation it seems that anyone in the part-time position would find no encouragement or motivation to do that.

With the matter of a full-time coach for gymnastics now a thing of the past, it can be expected that some of the top gymnasts that will still be here will be seriously considering transferring to schools with what will then be better programs.

If recruitment is, in fact, non-existent than the caliber of gymnastics here will go into such a nose dive that soon the program itself might be non-existent.

For now though, this season is at hand for this year's gymnasts. Being in the EIGL again next year and having a part-time coach makes it appear that there will be a solid gymnastics program, but it is one that really has many question marks.

Coach Dunn may leave sinking ship

By BEN CASWELL
Sports Staff

Men's gymnastics coach Tom Dunn is the commander of a sinking ship. After coming here three years ago and building the Gymnastics program to a national level he will most likely leave here next year seeing his efforts disintegrate into big time sports ethics and economic uncertainties.

Originally Tom Dunn came to UMass on a one year stint filling in for former gymnastics coach Eric Kieldsen who left the job to go on sabbatical. The one year turned into three and the program and Dunn were probably both the better for it.

Born in California, Dunn's family moved around a lot before settling in the suburbs of Chicago. It was here in his junior high school days that Dunn got involved in the fine gymnastics programs that these schools had to offer. "My first contact with gymnastics came as a result of my interest in pole vaulting," said Dunn. "I read where a gymnastics basis would help pole vaulting so I enrolled in the gymnastics physical education program the school had rather than the regular physical education program."

From there it was all uphill in gymnastics for Tom Dunn. His family moved to Indiana where he won six state individual high school championships.

Dunn then went on to Penn State where he did his undergraduate and one year of graduate work. At Penn State he was the team's captain in his senior year and in that season also captured the NCAA championship in the parrallel bars.

In coming to UMass to coach Tom was hoping that he could add to his collegiate experience and to his academic credentials. Coaching would give him a new dimension of gymnastics and from the looks of his success it is a dimension that he dealt with quite adequately.

In his short time here at UMass, Tom has done with his program what other coaches have taken years to do. The development of men's gymnastics here was aiming for top qualities. Now with the coaching situation and all the problems that result from it, it is likely that the caliber of men's gymnastics will fade.

Tom Dunn could be here next year although it is unlikely. As for the future Dunn said, "I would like to stay at the college level, coaching and teaching gymnastics. But the job market is very bleak right now so I really don't know about next year. It could be early yet, things could open up somewhat in the spring. I could end up in the high school level but before that I would probably open up my own private gymnastics school."

As the economic crunch comes down on us all, it comes down just a little harder on Tom Dunn. Had it been a different time and place based on his performance thus far he would have himself a secure coaching job here at UMass for some time to come, if he wanted it. But it seems not to be, for a number of reasons but the overriding one being that unfortunately ever-present money factor.

So the future is uncertain for him but the present season is at hand and in a nature that seemed true to him Tom Dunn said that is what is most concerning him now.

Swimmers enter 1974-75 season with sense of quiet optimism

By BOB HIGGINS
Sports Staff

You can feel it when you enter the Boyden Pool area during a men's swim team practice. There is a feeling of unity and quiet optimism that has been missing in recent years. No, nobody is predicting championships or even New England recognition. But there is a general feeling that, after last year's achievements, the team has turned the corner and is on the road back to respectability.

Last year was a big year for the swimmers. After a couple of disastrous seasons (including a 1-11 1972-3 year), they turned things around and wound up with a promising 6-7 record. Along the way they set five new school records and scored 20 points in the New England Championships. And the general attitude among the team is that this year could be even better.

"At this point we're in a better position thn last year at this time," said second-year Coach Bey Melamed. "Last year we were averaging about eight guys at each workout. This year we're averaging around fifteen."

Only two simmers were lost to graduation, which is usually a good sign. However, the two men who graduated were the co-captains, George Kwiecien and Dick Blaisdell, and both were important to the team. Blaisdell was a steady performer in the freestyle sprints and the relays, and Kwiecien, besides being the team leader, was a fine backstroker and a cog in the medley relays.

the loss of Kwiecien leaves the team weak in the backstroke events, according to Melamed. "We're going to have to give up points in the backstroke and the medley relays, he said. We have one excellent one (Dave Boucher), but we don't have a second."

Coach Melamed feels that one of the team's strong points is in the long distance events, and it is not hard to see why. Last year's freshman phenom, Ben Crooker, is one of the best in the New England, and now has a year of experience. "He's one of the best things that happened to us last year," said Melamed of "Iron Man" Crooker. This year, however, he has some competition in the persons of Harry Blyden and Mike Kerwin.

One area in which the aquamen performed comparatively well last season was in the diving events, but that may not be this year. "It appears that Jeff Crouse will not be with us this year," said Coach Melamed of the talented diver

The Minutemen have a relatively tough schedule to contend with as well. They open with Wesleyan, a team which they almost beat last year. Later meets include UConn, Maine, and Vermont, all of whom, Melamed admits, "we can't come close to."

Still, there is a good chance to improve upon last year's record, and this is the attitude among team members. "I think we're better than last year," said Crooker. "At the beginning of last season there was a feeling that the team wasn't worth much, after what happened the few previous years. During the season last year we built a feeling of pride and enthusiasm, and this year we're starting out with that," he said.

With problems and several new faces

Gym-men look for '74-'75 success

By Ben Caswell
Sports Staff

Gymnastics preview — Caswell

The Men's gymnastics team, with some new faces and some old faces, is looking to another successful season despite money and coaching problems that will come in the future.

Personnel-wise the team is not in as good as shape as they were last season resulting from graduation and trouble with recruitment.

Gene Whelan and Steve Scuderi were the team's top all-around men last year and they are both gone. Whelan transferred to Penn State, a move that no one can fault Gene for, if they realize the future of gymnastics at UMass. Whelan, even if he were still at UMass would not have competed this season anyway because with just one year of eligibility left he is saving it so that he can compete next year. Scuderi, along with last year's co-captains Jay Thompson and Rich Seikunas were all lost through graduation.

This year coach Tom Dunn has three or four men that he will be counting on to take over the all-around jobs. Co-captains Bill Brouillet and Roy Johnson are two of the definites at all-around. Brouillet was the squad's number two complete performer last year to Whelan. Johnson was red-shirted last season, sitting the year out with a dislocated elbow.

The third all-around spot will be probably shared between brothers Steve and Paul Marks. At the present it appears that Paul will be the starter as Steve is sidelined with a broken finger he suffered last week. Paul has been hampered by a back injury since the second week of school and he is just now finishing his recovery from the effects of it. Although Paul has not been able to train as he would like he will still have to be relied on for that third all-around spot at the present time.

A new rule introduced into dual meet competition this season states that only twelve men, rather than fifteen can be used. Where before a team could have three all-around competitors and two specialists in each of the six events, now with the three all-around men there must be a few people that are multi-event competitors.

The sophomore Marks brothers could see some action in the multi-event role but the key multi-event man will be senior Tim Beasley. Beasley will compete in the floor exercise, still rings, and the parallel bars. A shoulder injury though has slowed his workouts on the rings. Another multi-event man will be junior Jon Brandon. He will perform in the long horse vault, the parallel bar, and the high bar. It is possible that Brandon will only go in two of those events depending on his performance and other team members status regarding injuries.

Other possible multi-event men include two freshmen, John Forshay and Dave Kulakoff, both from Long Island, and a transfer student Joel James. Forshay is not expected to see any action until mid-season while he recovers from an achilles tendon injury. His event man, those being vaulting, and the high bar.

In addition to the all-around and the multi-event men the team has a well rounded squad of specialists. Junior Charley events will be floor exercise and vaulting Kulakoff's areas of concentration are the pommel horse and the parallel bars. James could possibly be a two

John Hake, sophomore Henning Geist, and junior Dan Barter are all high bar specialists.

This years squad will be counting on people that have

Hall is the floor exercise man. On pommel horse is sophomore Chris Brown. Still Rings specialist is another second year man, Peter Lusk, who was outstanding as a freshman last year. Senior Jack Fabbricante will be doing the long horse vaulting. Junior Andy Hammond is the parrallel bars specialist. In the high bar competition is where the team has its greatest depth. Transfer not yet proven themselves. Injuries will also be a bigger than ever factor because the team lacks the depth to replace people adequately.

UMass is still in the EIGL this season and will also be in it next year. Their competition will not be as difficult as in the past with Penn State out of the EIGL. Temple and Southern Connecticut will be the teams to beat in the league, with the league winner qualifying for the NCAA's.

At this point the team is hurting with some injuries. Their first two meets of the season are against Boston State and Lowell Tech though and they should be able to get by them. Army is the last meet before Intersession and that one could be tough. The time between then and the next meet after semester break will be well-accepted by the team to get everyone into shape.

Faces to watch

- Roy Johnson — all-around
- Andy Hammond — bars
- Tim Beasley — multi-event man

UMass lifters no. 1

The UMASS Olympic weightlifting team is No. 1 in the state. Also, one of the lifters is No. 3 in the country, that being Doug Cooney. The team can't receive acknowledgement by the school for funds due to the N.C.A.A. It is considered too dangerous a sport, as well as boxing. Also working against the team is required membership in the A.A.U. Thus all Meet expenses must be personally covered.

Team members include middleheavyweights Doug Cooney (captain), Eric Wiseman (pictured) Rudy Woloss, and John Donelly. Other members include Brian Wiseman, John Kennedy.

§ With the American Olympic tryouts coming up, there is a good chance two of our lifters will be representing the U.S. in Montreal in 1976.

Winter intramural preview

TOM CROWLEY
Sports Staff

As the weather gets colder, the Julius Ervings and the Mark Spitzes start coming out of the woodwork and playing their talents down at Boyden.

Yes, the winter season for UMass intramurals is about to get under way.

The Co-Rec Relay Swim team competition will start Dec. 2 and run through Dec. 4. This consists of relays, a 200 yd. free style, a 200 yd. medley, a 100 yd. butter-fly, a 200 yd. backstroke, a 200 yd. breaststroke and a "novelty" stroke for 100 yds.

The application date has already passed by as this event opens the winter season.

The Volleyball playoffs will start in the next two week. Teams from men's, women's, and Co-Rec will compete in Wilt Chamberlin-like fashion, in their respective divisions, for the campus title.

Basketball, one of the biggest sports as far as intramural participation goes, has an entry due-date of Dec. 5. This is for both women and men's basketball. But Co-Rec basketball is being introduced this year and has a entry date of Feb. 7. The guidelines will be available at a later date.

Play does not begin until the second semester for all basketball action. Men's and women's begin on Feb. 3 while the Co-Rec begins Feb. 9.

Squash entries are due at the beginning of next semester by Feb. 5, and play begins Feb. 17.

Then for all you male chauvinists and Bruno can easily get into, wrestling has a deadline date for entry to Feb. 6. Restricted to men only, matches will begin on Feb. 26.

Mermaids or mermen have till Feb. 20 to enter themselves and races begin around March 10 for swimming action.

The last winter intramural sport is bowling. Entries are due Feb. 27 with the Co-Rec teams splitting the pins starting March 10.

For information and entry forms, go to the Intramural office in Boyden.

Women skiers lack team depth

Peter McDonnell
Sports Staff

Coach Marcy Wertz of the Women's Ski Team is hoping to direct her team to a Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference championship following three consecutive second place finishes.

Radcliffe, which has won the title for the past ten years, has to be favored to take it all again. However, Ms. Wertz, whose teams have drawn increasingly closer to Radcliffe in her three years of coaching, is confident that UMass along with the University of New Hampshire and Southern Connecticut will give the champs a good run for their money.

The women skiers will also be accompanying the men's team to both of the Can - Am series and are expected to make a good showing against the Canadians.

From last year's team, Ms. Wertz has lost Betsy Hussey and Galen Good to western schools with more competitive programs. Hedda MacConnell, another excellent skiier from last year's team, has been graduated.

Returning is Rachel Courtney, outstanding last year as a freshman, along with sophomores Debbie Mellett and Theresa Hutton.

Also returning is senior Jean Hayden, and Betsy Fulter, a junior, both of whom had some very good races last year.

Coach Wertz is hoping to recruit a few more good skiiers before the start of the season.

"One thing we don't have is depth and we are willing to take a look at anyone who thinks she can help the team."

PIONEER
TP-232. Mini 8-track stereo player. $49.88

If you've just quit smoking and don't know what to do with your ash tray, take a tip from Pioneer. Install a TP-232. It's really tiny for an 8-track stereo player (you got it; small enough to fit most ash trays). And what it doesn't have in sheer bulk, it makes up in sheer features.

7.6 watts RMS, 15 watts peak power. Track indicator lights. Automatic and manual program change. Separate volume, balance, and tone controls.

360S TEAC $379.50

Two years ago TEAC introduced the 450, a cassette deck so good a lot of reel-to-reel machines were suddenly out-performed, never mind other typical cassette decks.

The 360S is now following the leader. You still get the same advanced transport drive system that produces an incredible lack of wow and flutter (less than 0.07% WRMS). And all the other engineering accomplishments that first made cassette decks respectable in sophisticated systems.

Things like Dolby* circuitry, enhanced by a tone generator and calibration controls, peak indicator light, tape memory and automatic shut-off.

We'd be happy to give you a demonstration of the 360S. The major difference between it and the 450 is price. Which makes it a leader in its own right.

Track squad hopes to better mediocre season

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

If leadership means anything to a team, then the UMass Indoor track team has an edge before the season even starts. The trackmen will be co-captained by harriers Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin, who led the Minutemen runners to the IC4A Championship last Monday.

The team is similar to last year's 3-5 squad that placed second in the Yankee Conference meet and fourth in the New Englands. The strengths of this year's team lie in the jumping of the Adamson brothers, Mike Geraghty and Pete Ryan as well as the distance events, which are bolstered by the entire cross country team.

A group of freshmen and the fact that all except five team members are returning (five trackmen graduated last year) this season, should make the 1974 indoor squad considerably stronger.

Once again, coach Ken O'Brien will be depending on the jumping events and the distance events as his main point producers. Freshman Joe Martens, a 6'6" high jumper should compliment senior Mark Hughes, who has cleared 6'5" in the past.

The pole vault, which was a very weak event last season and may have cost the Minutemen one or two meets, will be much stronger this year. Dan Grigus, who improved throughout the 1973 season to establish a new school record at 14', will have some help in freshmen vaulters Ted Powers and Marty Clevenger, as well as Dean transfer Eric Gudmand.

In the distance events, the cross country team will fill most of the spots, as the veterans and freshmen will be used interchangeably, according to O'Brien. Devin Croft, Chris Farmer, Thomas, Gillin and Robb Leary most likely will begin the season running the two-mile, and drop to the mile or 880-yard run as the season progresses.

Sophomore Tom Lonergan, an improved and versatile weightman, should be the team's mainstay in the weight events. Lonergan will see action in three different throwing events, the shot put, 35-pound weight throw and the discus. Although Lonergan will be backed by Gary Graves in the 35-pound throw, the weightmen don't have the necessary depth, and it's likely that the throwing events will be a major weakness this season.

Speedy Toney Pendleton leads the sprinters and should receive support from Tom and Larry Beland. The team is perenially strong in the springs, and the 1974-1975 season should be no different.

The hurdle corps lost its leader with the graduation of Jim Hennessey, one of last year's co-captains, and although it is tough to replace a competitor like Hennessey, four of the top five hurdlers will be returning. Consistent Curt Stegerwald, Pete Famulari, Al Suprenant and Skip Cobb should provide a solid group of hurdlers.

Steve Crimmin, runner-up in the New England 440 last season, paces a fine group of middle distance runners. Crimmin is a co-holder of the school record in the 600-yard run with a time of 1:12.3. Crimmin, junior Mike Gillen and sophomore Jim Hunt have experience in the middle distances, and freshman Mark Healy from Portland, Maine, a 1:12.8 600-runner, leads a group of impressive freshmen. Pete Bloom, Dave Lupinski, Steve Ridge and John Tsoukalis represent four of the eight finalists in last year's 880-yard run at the high school state meet. Mark Hansen, a runner-up at the high school New Englands, round out a collection of middle-distancemen that will rely strongly on its depth. Because of the many middle distance events, a good team needs depth, and the runners will probably be shifted around in the 600, 880 and 1000-yard runs.

The team goal for the indoor season is to get ready for a maximum effort as the outdoor season approaches. For the new team members, the indoor season provides an opportunity to find their relative abilities, gain experience and become physically conditioned.

The trackmen are hoping to place third or fourth at the New Englands, and send several individuals to the IC4A competition. The biggest task for O'Brien will be keeping the team together and ready to compete after the month vacation that splits the season into two parts. If the team can keep its early season momentum through semester break and not have to start all over again in February, the season, which begins December 3 at Rhode Island could be a very successful one.

Skiers open defense of New England crown in Canada

By PETER McDONNELL
SPORTS STAFF

The big news from the 1974-75 University of Massachusetts Ski Team is that it is one of seven American schools to be invited to compete in the Can-Am Intercollege Alpine series of races. The team will be racing against seven Canadian universities at Mt. St. Anne, Quebec, on Jan. 9-11 in a series that preceeds the UMass regular season schedule.

The team has also been invited to a second Can-Am series at the conclusion of the season, Mar. 14-16, to be held at Sunday River in Bethel, Maine.

Meanwhile, the team has a New England Intercollege Ski Conference championship to defend. UMass competes in the Southern Division of the NEISC, where UMass has captured either the divisional or conference title for the past five years.

Even though the team will miss the excellent, all-round performer, Kurt Syer, who has been graduated and gone on to the Air Force, this year's team strength is its depth. Seven veterans of last year's championship team will be back, including Tri-Captains Dick McWade, Steve Tonelli and Jim Hawkins.

McWade, a senior from Groton, was Coach Bill MacConnell's most dependable skiier last winter and expects to have another good year.

Shrewsbury's Steve Tonelli, a junior, should be better than ever after recovering from a successful summer knee operation. He raced much of last year with a nagging bone chip in his knee but still managed to win two races, one by an incredible margin of five seconds.

"The key to success is early rigorous training to get the team up for an international race so early in the season. Last year the team peaked late; barely in time to win the conference championship. This year we need to do it early and have made careful plans for that."

The dry-land training which consists primarily of running and weightlifting, began on Nov. 15 and will run for a month. The snow training will hopefully begin Dec. 23 at Haystack and run to Jan. 24, with time out for the Can-Ams and a Dual Meet with Boston College, Jan. 19. The team will train all day every day Monday through Friday and take weekends and major holidays off.

Coach MacConnell's record for his 12 years with the UMass Ski Team shows a better than six-to-one win-loss ratio. Besides which his teams have never finished below the top third of competing schools in the conference.

Jim Hawkins, of Greenfield, another junior with an exceptional 1973 season will round out the nucleus of this year's team.

More outstanding potential is the Peck Brothers, Gary and Larry, who along with Bill Nebesky and Ben Ferris gave outstanding performances last year.

Two freshmen with half a lifetime of distinguished amateur ski racing behind them will add strength to the team. Dale Maynard from Williamstown is a veteran Tri State racer and Arne Hammerlund of Brattleboro raced competitively in the Vermont League for the past several years.

Because of the Can-Ams, the season will start earlier than usual and Coach MacConnell wants his team ready for a good performance in Quebec.

Dick McWade of Groton, a senior tri-captain is a picture of determination as he races in a slalom event. The men are the defending New England Intercollegiate Ski Champions.

Ford, back in U.S., hails military food talks

From Wire Services

WASHINGTON — President Ford arrived home from his week-long Asian journey last night and declared to an airport audience that he had established with the Soviet Union "a sound basis for a new agreement that will constrain our military competition over the next decade."

He said his visit to Japan, the first by a U.S. President, was also historic because it marked a change from a one-time military security alliance to a broadened relationship "to include energy and food."

The President said his summit meetings near Vladivostok with Soviet Communist leader Leonid Brezhnev went "very, very well" and that the two found "a large measure of agreement" on the important issue of further limitation of strategic arms.

"We discussed the issue fully, and, in the end, we established a sound basis for a new agreement that will constraint our military competition over the next decade," he said. "We often agreed, but not always. When we did not, we stated our differences quite frankly," he said.

UMass hosts vets conference

By Progressive News Service

Some 200 people representing 40 veterans' organizations throughout New England attended the New England Regional Veterans Conference Saturday, at the Student Union.

The conference, sponsored by the Veteran's Coalition for Community Affairs, began at 10:00 a.m. with introductory speeches from Pat Power of VCCA, John O'Keefe, VCCA, Brian Mulcare and William Stewart, WSO. The conference then divided up into workshops situated throughout the Student Union building.

The morning session was devoted to workshops on veterans benefits, prison reform and discharge upgrading.

Jim Readon coordinated the benefits workshop which dealt with the existing bill now on President Ford's desk and what specific cutbacks Ford had asked Congress to implement.

Pat Johannesen, VCCA, conducted the prison workshop through the use if video tapes taken in the Union St. Jail in Northampton by inmates. Present at the workshop were three inmates from the jail who were able to answer questions as to their needs as prisoners and society's responsibility to them.

Russ Wild, coordinator of the discharge workshop, said the meeting was both productive and educational. "It brought to light the many flaws that exist in the present setup for a veteran to get his discharge updated and a number of suggested improvements were aired," he said.

The afternoon session began with a workshop on Amnesty conducted by Charlie Atwood, VCCA, who recited portions of a letter received from the Clemency Board explaining the President's rational for the Board's existence. Atwood went on to give the Veteran's Coalition stand on amnesty and the reasons behind it.

Pat Simon, President of Gold Star Parents for Amnesty showed a 30-minute amnesty film and gave her reasons for promoting a campaign asking for unconditional amnesty. "Only 11 per cent of all draft age men served in the military," she said. "Ten to 20 million people legally avoided the military and nobody's talking about their motives."

Dave O'Connell, VCCA, along with guest speakers from the AFL-CIO, the US Dept. of Labor and The UMass Career Placement Office addressed and fielded questions from the audience at the jobs for veterans workshop.

John O'Keefe, VCCA, addressed the tenants and housing workshop and pointed out the need for local voter registration from UMass as legislation is needed to provide tenants with the tools to deal with landlords effectively.

The minority veterans workshop was conducted by Joe Andrews, a UMass student. The workshop exposed the problems of racism and sexism in the military said Andrews.

The conference wound up with an organizing workshop on the 10th floor of the Campus Center. Frank Harrison, organizer at the VCCA explained the thrust of the meeting. "Because of the peculiarities of individual state legislatures, there exists a need for some sort of communication network or organization on the state level rather than the regional or national level," he said.

An organizational meeting of all state and local veterans groups will take place at UMass-Boston on December 7th. As a direct result of veterans' needs brought out by Saturday's conference.

John O'Keefe gave his view on the reasons the VCCA started the conference, and where they will go from there: "The Veterans Coalition sponsored this conference in order to provide informative dialogue on substantive community issues, as well as focusing on veteran-related matters. We will continue to direct our efforts toward these goals," he said.

Credit union pledges taken

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

In three days members of the Credit Union Coalition collected close to $15,000 in pleges to a potential student owned credit union, according to John Fisher of the Student Organizing Project.

"A credit union is a cooperatively owned and democratically controlled financial institution chartered and supervised by the National Credit Union Administration, an arm of the Federal Government," said Peter Birbaum, president of the coalition.

"It's essentially equivalent to a bank, only owned by depositors," added Fisher.

Fisher and Birbaum agreed the $15,000 was a lot more than they expected to get by setting up a table on the C.C. concourse for three days. Said Fisher: "Still we haven't begun to do more than scratch the surface here."

The credit union, once opened, will be governed by a board of directors elected by its members.

"The SOP has been the original source to get it stated. Our role is not to run the credit union....We will instead operate as a resouce," explained Fisher.

"The credit union is required to insure all deposits by law." Fisher added: "The Federal Government keeps a fairly tight watch on all credit unions."

The union will make money for its members by providing loans for members at a set interest rate.

Birbaum said: "The actual decison as to whether all income above basic expenses would be used to pay dividends to shareholders or whether some of it would be diverted toward developing other student services is one of the directors of the credit union would ultimately make."

The credit union will also sell food stamps and provide certain types of insurance. Fisher expects the credit union will offer life insurance at about $20 a year. How many and what kinds of insurance to be provided will be determined by the directors.

A search is being conducted to find a room in the Campus Center complex for the union to operate out of.

Collegian seeks student donations for overseas starvation fund

Indications are the Collegian's "Help the Hungry" campaign will be a success.

The Collegian is asking every student on campus to donate one dollar to the fund which will be used to buy food for those starving overseas.

Although the campaign is not scheduled to go into full swing until next Monday, campaign organizer Mike Kneeland says about $100 has already been given by students who've stopped by the newspaper's office.

Next Monday and Tuesday a commuters' table will be set up in the Campus Center Concourse to collect money from commuters who wish to "Help the Hungry."

Nearby, Kneeland said, a "dunk-a-thon" will be going on where for 25 cents, students will have the opportunity to pour a bucket of water over the heads of such people as Zamir Nestelbaum, Fred Weiss, Nat Clark, Dean Tucker, Jerry Lazar, Rick Savini, Don McGilvray, Joyce Kosofsky, Mike Kostek, Kris Jackson and two football players yet to be named.

In campus dormitories representatives will be knocking each door asking for the one dollar contribution.

Kneeland said, however, that volunteers to collect money are still needed in the following dorms: Brooks, Chadbourne, Crabtree, Dwight, Field, Hamlin, James, Johnson, Lewis, Mackimmie, Mary Lyon, McNamara, Melville, Moore, Prince, Thatcher, Thoreau, Webster, Wheeler, John Adams, and Washington.

Those interested should call Kneeland between 11 and 1 today at 545-3500 or leave a message with the secretary.

Posters and fliers advertising the campaign will be distributed through Wednesday.

Kneeland said next Monday is the ideal day to begin the campaign. "Coming back from the Thanksgiving holidays," he said, "students will realize how thankful they ought to be and they won't hesitate to part with a dollar."

Kneeland will be a guest on WMUA's "Focus" tonight from 10:20 to 11:20 p.m. Hosted by Ken Mosakowski, the entire program will be devoted to area fund raising campaigns.

Speech, hearing

Clinic handles disorders

By PATTY MORIN
Staff Reporter

Of the several free clinics on campus, one of the least known and appreciated is the Communication Disorders Clinic, located on the first floor of Bartlett Hall.

According to Professor Charlena Seymour, director of the clinic, three purposes for the clinic are:

— to provide free service to the College community as well as outsiders with speech or hearing disorders.

— to provide a training program for some 350 undergraduates and 30 graduate students in speech pathology and audiology.

— to provide a source for research into methods of therapy as well as training for students.

Audiology deals with the deaf and hard of hearing, and the effect of hearing on speech. As many speech problems are the result of hearing problems, all patients are given hearing tests at the clinic, from with specific recommendations are made, e.g. hearing aid or speech therapy. A member of the faculty at UMass, recently saved himself from having an unneeded ear operation, after having been tested at the clinic and given a recommendation.

Speech pathology studies problems such as, articulation, stuttering and vocal disorders. These may be the results of aphasia (brain damage) or larangectimies.

The clinic is a non-profit organization, staffed basically by qualified students. Graduate students are the actual therapists with certified supervisors and consultants available at all times.

Although most clients are children referred to the clinic by schools and hospitals, some adult clients are self-referrals. They are usually hard of hearing or have speech impediments such as, stuttering or lisps. Many Theatre and Communication majors go to the clinic to improve their speech.

When a person goes to the clinic, he will first be evaluated to find the nature of the problem, and recommended an appropriate therapy based on those findings. People requiring individual therapy meet with the therapist for an hour twice a week. People with similar problems can help each other through group therapy which meets for an hour once a week.

Methods of therapy vary with each individual case, considering age and problem, but in groups, patients may practice relaxation exercises to release tension that may cause stuttering, or reproduce sounds for the development of articulation.

Therapists feel there are many students on campus with speech and hearing problems who don't realize help is available to them at no charge in the clinic. Such students should call 545-2565 and make an appointment to be evaluated or to see a therapist right away.

Thomas performance brings low turn-out, big turn-on

By PAUL KONTRIMAS
Below the Salt Reporter

Leon Thomas played to a half-filled Bowker Auditorium Friday night, but neither he nor the audience were concerned about the small turn-out.

Thomas was there to perform, and the audience was there to witness the voice that had won jazz listeners' acclaim for it's incredible strength, range and agility.

Playing with Thomas this evening were Neal Creaque (piano), Mervin Bronson (bass), Black Arthur (saxophone), Sadiq Rahman (drums), and Sonny Morgan and Baba Semi (percussion).

After a warm up improvisation piece, with each member of the band taking the opportunity to solo, Thomas began with Song for my Father, his rich voice acting as a vehicle for the inciteful lyrics as well as an instrument for scat-like improvisational vocal acrobatics.

The high point of the first set was a departure from what one would expect would be in Thomas' repetoire-no one was disappointed. He sang "You Are The Sunshine of My Life" in a very slow, ballad style, putting a new light on Stevie Wonder's popular tune. At times he sang acapella and other times almost spoke the verse as if he imagined himself actually talking to the woman he loved.

The second set began with a tune that pleased many members of the small but happy crowd. Several yipped and yelled upon recognizing their old favorite instrumental, "Straight, No Chaser". Without a doubt, the musicians also were enjoying themselves, and all, particularly saxophonist Black Arthur, were inspired to create fine solo improvisations.

As had happened in the first set, Thomas joined his fellow musicians after they were given time to warm up to their instruments. He began with "one" from his album entitled Spirits Known and Unknown, asking the question why all men cannot live in peace. Then came one of the highlights of the second set, highlighting Thomas' mastery of Chicago Blues style singing on what was obviously a spontaneously created song, entitled afterwards as "Baby, If it's Over, Why Don't You Let Me Go."

It was here that Thomas showed his open, free-wheeling approach to performing by offering the audience dancing and a somewhat tongue-in-cheek, mock phone conversation. It was obvious that Thomas was having as good a time as anybody else.

As happens whenever Thomas does a concert, the audience demanded his song, "The Creator Has A Master Plan". Thomas closed the performance with a succinct, if over-abbreviated version of this tune that had brought him so many new fans. All in all, it is safe to say that Leon Thomas and his group of fine musicians brought to the University a high point in entertainment on a night that offered such diverse entertainment as Commander Cody, Skyland (at the Wall) and Sweet Pie.

Southwest theatre ensemble sponsoring dance workshop

Two professional dancers will appear here this week as guest artists of a dance workshop sponsored by the Southwest Theater Ensemble.

Timothy Ney, artistic director of the ensemble, announced that Christine Juffs and Sara Henning will perform at various locations in the area today, tomorrow and Wednesday.

The schedule of the workshops is as follows:

Today — "Ballet" (beginner's level) 5:30 at Wesley Methodist Church, 365 N. Pleasant St., Amherst.

"Improvisation and Composition" 7:30 at Crew House Smith College.

Tuesday — "Modern Technique" (beginners) 10:30 at Hamden Student Center in Southwest.

"Modern Mixed Bag" 7:30 at Wesley Methodist Church.

Wednesday — "Modern Technique" 10:30 at Hamden

"Children's Dance" 4-5 at Wesley Methodist Church.

Ney urged all interested people to register soon because attendance is limited. Registration is handled through the Southwest Assembly Office (545-1552).

Sophomores concerned

Career counseling need cited

By ROSEMARIE ELLIS
Staff Reporter

Project Pulse reports the majority of sophomores here are very concerned about securing a career after graduation and therefore, need better academic and career counseling.

Project Pulse, sponsored by Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office, (SAREO), is a student opinion survey organization that is run on a Gallup-type telephone survey system. Each week a random sampling of some 200 UMass students are selected to voice their opinions on a variety of issues. The Pulse office, directed by Ann Luciano, employs work-study students.

At the beginning of this semester, a survey was conducted with sophomores about career preparation. Thirty-eight per cent of those who have chosen a major selected that department specifically for its prospective job opportunities. Forty-four per cent chose a major linked to a career primarily for interest.

Very few of the 20 per cent who have not yet chosen a major have looked into the alternatives on campus or talked with faculty about career options.

Forty-one per cent of the entire sampling felt that there is a need for better academic and career counseling, while 30 per cent don't even know the name of their advisor. Fifty-six per cent expressed a need to speak with faculty from other departments about preparation for a career and opportunities available.

An overwhelming 75 per cent have never experienced any type of career counseling, however, 65 per cent don't know of the Career Planning Center, which exists on campus to help students.

In addition to the questions, an idea suggesting a program, in which second semester sophomores could visit classes in departments of their choice, was proposed. Faculty from each department would be selected to discuss the consequences and opportunities of each major.

Eighty-five per cent of the students felt it would be helpful and successful. Of the departments tentatively chosen, Psychology was selected most often. Following in popularity are Political Science, Sociology, Zoology, and Education. Education.

Complete and detailed copies of the results are available at the SAREO office in Whitmore, room 245.

Prof sees no cure for Dutch Elm, lack of resistance in local trees

By ELIZABETH CORELL
Staff Correspondent

While elm trees across America are dying of Dutch Elm Disease, scientists are offering small hope that a resistant gene for cross-breeding can be found.

Dr. Terry A. Tatter, assistant professor of Plant Pathology here, says there is "little hope of curing or stopping the disease, since American Elms have no resistance."

Last year alone, he said, 5,632 elms died in Massachusetts alone, 216 in Amherst.

Tracing the disease to Europe in the early 1900's, it has been found that the disease is caused by a fungus, Ceratocuistis eulmi, came in on logs for war reparations.

Contrary to public impression, it is known as "Dutch" Elm Disease because the Dutch worked aggresively in pathological studies in the 1890's.

The American Elm is geographically isolated from the European Elm and as a result has no natural resistance to the disease.

The elm had been chosen by city planners as a desirable street tree and had been planted heavily. It grows fast and has a strong wood which resists the strain of wind. The elm puts forth a shady canopy atop a tall trunk. Most significant of all, the elm can survive many abuses incurred by man — curbs, short water supply.

Tatter said that the disease is spread by the European Bark Beetle, an insect which was brought into the country. Fungus kills the tree. The beetle is attracted to the weak tree and lays its eggs in the sticky spores of the tree. The adult beetle becomes infested with spores contaminated by pathogens. It leaves to feed on a branch crouch. By eating the bark, the tree becomes inoculated with the disease.

The fungus moves into the vascular system (similar to our circulatory system), giving it the name Vascular Wilt Disease. The function of the system is to move water from the roots to the leaves, and nutrients around the tree. The fungus grows in the vascular tubes, preventing water intake and causing the branches to wilt.

The "flag", a tiny branch at the top of the tree, is the first to die. At this stage, the disease can be most effectively stopped. Otherwise, it continues to spread slowly until it becomes systemic and chokes the entire tree.

An elm can die in the course of the summer depending on the nature of the wood formation. In May and June, the tree is active and putting out leaves. The vessels are large and highly susceptible. By July and August, the vessels become small and the fungus can no longer move. For this reason, the tree will not get the disease if it has not been infected by August 1.

Mass PIRG lobbies against atomic power

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

"The development of atomic power plants must be stopped because of the potential threat which they present to the public," said Charlotte Allen, a coordiantor of a MassPIRG atomic power lobbying group.

The MassPIRG group will be lobbying against atomic power throughout Massachusetts in the near future.

At a meeting of the group last Wednesday evening, a score of UMass students were given a lesson in lobbying by Jonathan Souweine, Staff Attorney for the Amherst MassPIRG group.

Souweine said, "Persuasive speaking is always the same, but we're looking at it in a political spectrum."

Souweine said the important thing is to work together. The group did some lobby role playing, one person playing the part of a lobbyist and another person playing the part of a congressman.

The lobby group will be meeting every Wednesday night at 7:30 p.m. to prepare for upcoming lobby. Those interested are invited to attend. Locations will be announced in the Collegian.

National attention now focused on cancer surgery and research

By BARBARA ESTABROOK
UMass Infirmary

In the past few weeks, national attention has focused on breasts, a result of forces even stronger than the fashion industry or Playboy. Surgery performed for treatment of breast cancer on several well-known women has prompted a tremendous increase in demand for information and medical services related to cancer. This two-part article examines the current state of knowledge about breast cancer, its detection and treatment.

Cancer of the breast is the most common cancer among women, and will strike 1 out of 15 women.

It's usually found in women over 40, occurring rarely in women under 35, the age range in which the majority of women in this campus fall. Less and 2 per cent of breast cancer-caused deaths occur in this age group, and the risk in this group may be decreasing. About 1 per cent of breast cancer cases occur in men. Because of this rarity, symptoms in males are usually undetected or ignored until the cancer is too far advanced for effective treatment.

Possible causes of breast cancer, and the relation of certain conditions to it, are the subject of much investigation. Research has established that a blow to the breast will not cause cancer. Oral contraceptives do not cause cancer. The cancer may be linked to a virus, and seems to have some connection with hormonal functions. There are a number of factors which seem to be connected to higher risk of the disease: single marital status, older age, few pregnancies, first pregnancy over age 30, and family history of breast cancer.

Rates of the cancer very among races and nationalities with highest incidence found in Caucasian Americans. Low rates in Oriental women have been variously attributed to diet lower in animal fats, and more widespread breast feeding. Very low rates have also been measured in Africa, but risk for American Black women is close to that for Caucasians, and seems to reflect racial admixture in various parts of the United States. Higher socio-economic classes show higher incidence of breast cancer. It appears the cultural factors resulting in these reports are unclear.

Certain natural breast structures can feel lumpy, and other lumps in the breast are common, but very few of them are cancerous. In younger women, lumps are likely to be cysts (packets of fluid) or solid lumps called fibroadenoma, both of which are almost always benign. Cysts often disappear on their own, and both conditions can be cured by simple surgical means.

Currently, around 95 per cent of all breast cancer is discovered by patients themselves, but in the majority of cases the discovery or reporting of the condition is too late for adequate control.

Tomorrow, Part II will look at self-examination and other detection methods, and techniques of control cancer.

Breakthrough to be announced

Ford flies home after arms with Brezhnev

Ford left Vladivostok in icy Siberia near the Chinese border shortly after 6 a.m. EST. With only a brief refueling stop in Anchorage, Alaska, about noon, Air Force One was scheduled to arrive in Washington at 7:30 p.m. EST.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, who remained in the Soviet Union for a short time before flying to Tokyo and Peking, told newsmen the agreement "marks the breakthrough in SALT negotiations that we have sought in recent years...We have achieved a cap on the arms race if we can solve the technical problems." He said he believed that "with goodwill that should be possible."

Details of the broad agreement will be given to congressional leaders starting tomorrow. Essentially, it is believed to involve a stabilization based on continued Russian numerical advantage and continued U.S. technological superiority.

On a train ride from Vladivostok, where the agreement was signed in a second-floor solarium of a health spa, Ford told newsmen the 24-hour marathon summit was "just good negotiating – good give and take."

Ford said in a speech just before the agreement was signed that both nations should "get on with the business of controlling arms-the business in which, I think, we have made rather good progress in the last 24 hours."

Soviet Communist Party Leader Leonid I. Brezhnev told Ford that if a final nuclear arms pact is signed "you and I will be thanked by all the peoples of the world. I think we have done a good job in this respect, here in Vladivostok."

After the signing was sealed with champagne toasts, Ford and Brezhnev took a 75-minute tour of the once "forbidden" city close to the Chinese border. The Tass News Agency said thousands of Soviets waved flags and cheered as the limousine passed.

Upon his departure aboard Air Force One, Ford told Brezhnev, "Good-bye and God bless you."

Kissinger told newsmen the formal pact probably will be signed when Brezhnev visits Washington next June if strategic arms limitation negotiators have completed the detail work. They are scheduled to begin in Geneva in January.

Usery, Simon confer with leaders in attempt to end coal strike

WASHINGTON (UPI) – Treasury Secretary William E. Simon met yesterday with seven top coal industry officials in an attempt to help miners and operators end a 13-day nationwide strike that has severely damaged the nation's economy.

The government's top labor troubleshooter, William J. Usery Jr., also summoned representatives of both sides to an urgent afternoon meeting aimed at settling the dispute.

Nicholas T. Camicia, chairman of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, said in a statement handed to reporters at a downtown hotel that Simon requested the meeting with industry spokesmen because of increasing "gravity of the present situation."

"Mr. Simon impressed upon the committee the seriousness with which President Ford and other administration officials view the coal strike," said Camicia's statement. "He urged us to seek an early resolution of the problem."

Usery, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, also attended the meeting in advance of a 3 p.m. EST session with industry and UMW negotiators.

Camicia said, "We told Secretary Simon that representatives of the BCOA would meet with Mr. Arnold Miller and other UMW officers today for further discussions."

The industry advisory committee and union officials got together at noon for an informal closed session, following two such meetings Saturday lasting three hours.

The delays will push the strike into December, since it will take 10 days or more for a ratification vote even after the bargain council demands have be3n satisfied and the contract submitted to members.

Big business finds nation's mood very uncomfortable

NEW YORK (AP) – Except perhaps in terms of profits, these aren't very comfortable days for big business.

The utilities are under attack from customers, ecologists, politicians and others. The automotive companies are criticized for their pricing policies and polluting ways. The biggest railroad, the Penn Central, is being operated in bankruptcy. Some airlines are in a regulatory bind.

Health insurers know all about the troubles that bigness can bring. They are in a fight, as they view it, for their very existence, a fight that if lost might reduce them to mere clerks in a national health insurance program.

Nothing crystalizes the fight that big business is in more than the government's antitrust action against American Telephone & Telegraph, a company that serves 80 per cent of Americans and which is financially more powerful than most nations of the earth.

AT&T is the symbol. It is huge almost beyond comprehension. It employs more than one million workers. Its assets exceed $67 billion. It has raised its net income every year but one since 1947, earning $2.95 billion last year.

Whether the attacks against big business today are based strictly in the legalities-in an effort, that is, to preserve the pre-eminence of law over individuals or corporations-will continue to be argued.

Most of the attacks, from wherever they originate-consumer, ecologist, elected representative-eventually take a legal form. But this doesn't disguise completely the likelihood that political motivation might lay at the base.

To attack big business today seems to be good politics. A good portion of the public feels it hasn't performed as effectively as it should in holding down prices or in serving the public. It is too non-competitive, too burdened with its own bureaucracy, too self-serving, the critics says.

While many companies consider themselves marvels of managerial and technological efficiency, the public often has a different attitude, viewing them as dinosaurs possessed of ravenous, ruinous appetites and selfish disdain.

nation and world

Arabs free hostages

TUNIS [UPI] – Four Arab gunmen in a hijacked British airliner yesterday swapped all but three hostages for seven freed guerrilla prisoners and then threatened to blow up the plane with all persons aboard unless they got guarantees of a safe getaway.

Faced with a refusal by Arab nations to grant them asylum and threatened with reprisals by irate fellow Palestinian organizations, the four gunmen said they will call off their threat to blow up the plane with themselves, their colleagues and three British pilots only if they get firm guarantees of freedom.

Bus strike over

PHOENIX, Ariz. [UPI] – Greyhound buses began rolling around the nation yesterday following tentative settlement of a six-day-old strike, the bus line reported.

James L. Kerrigan, president of Greyhound Lines, said the approximately 16,000 drivers, baggage handlers and terminal employes returned to work pending ratification of a new agreement.

Drivers and other employes walked out Nov. 18 at noon. Buses pulled to the nearest terminals, stranding passengers across the country.

State ranks third

BOSTON [AP] – Massachusetts had the third highest unemployment rate in the nation during October with 7.4 per cent of its potential work force of 2.6 million persons out of work, the Boston Globe reported yesterday.

The rate is the same as that reported by the state for September.

The latest report was based on statistics compiled by the U.S. Department of Labor that have not yet been made public, the newspaper said. Only Hawaii and Alaska had higher unemployment rates.

The statistics showed that Massachusetts led the industrial states in unemployment percentage rates.

A state government sample of 5 per cent of persons collecting unemployment insurance the week of Aug. 18 showed the segment of the population hit hardest by the weak economy are between the ages of 25 and 34.

King dissatisfied

BOSTON [AP] – Edward King, ousted last week as executive director of the Massachusetts Port Authority, says he fears two major projects will go uncompleted if he is not allowed to regain his position.

King, who received $58,500 a year as executive director, was ousted by a 4-2 vote of the Massport board. He has said he would fight the dismissal.

In an interview on WEEI radio broadcast yesterday evening, King said he feared his plans for a new Boston container port facility and for an offshore oil receiving terminal would be left unfinished.

French Corridor: Beaucoup de merde

To the Editor:

We feel that the article in last Monday's Collegian poorly depicts what living in the French Corridor of the basement of Moore House is really like. The article paints a picture of numerous people floating about sprouting forth French and in between running the business of the floor, attending the numerous wine and cheese "soirees" and plays. WELL, LET ME SAY IT AIN'T SO SAM!

First of all, only 12 of the 27 people in the Basement are members of the "French Corridor", rarely do we even hear French spoken here. Seldom is the President of the French Corridor to be seen. Many people on the short side of the basement corridor have never seen or spoken to the French T.A., in English let alone French.

The fact of the matter is that there is little interaction between the members and non-members of the French corridor. Most of the hardcore members of the French corridor stick to their little groups. Few attend floor meetings, which are intended for all, but seem to draw only those interested in the activities of the floor, still even here a small number of representative people from the French corridor appear.

Mainly, this letter is to let it be known that there is another group present in the Basement of Moore House and if the Collegian is going to run an article on what it is like living here, they should interview more than one non-member before it makes any conclusion. WE ARE THE MAJORITY.

Collegian full of Woodwards and Bernsteins

To the Editor:
Re: Leslie Ball's letter 11-20-74
Dear Leslie,

You complain that the Collegiate Flying Club receives no coverage, that your articles do not get published, and that the Collegian uses your services with no acknowledgement. I think you are being too harsh. I feel that you are losing sight of one very important fact that must be considered whenever dealing with the Collegian.

It's a rag.

I agree with you that the CFC is an interesting organization worthy of coverage. I feel that there are many people on this campus who would be more interested in reading about its activities than about Christine Dillard's last bus ride. But how can you expect even one column inch when the Collegian's staff of aspiring Woodwards and hopeful Bernsteins is busy uncovering such earth shaking events as The Great Parking Ticket Scandal and the Mr. Greek Pageant?

The Student Senate Handbook lists 191 campus organizations. But outside of a few well known and-or well funded groups like the VVAW or Index, could you name ten that have been covered in the Collegian this semester? I doubt it.

You fly airplanes. I, and several others on campus, jump out of them, but how many people are aware of the Sport Parachuting Club? Or the Sailing Club? Or any of the other dozens of minority, special interest and religious organizations? Any one of them could probably fill up a page with fairly interesting material, but the Collegian rarely devotes any time or space to them.

This problem of coverage is just one of many things that is wrong with the Collegian. And the poor quality of the Collegian is, in turn, just a symptom of a larger problem on this campus: the lack of a quality Journalism Dept. The Journalistic Studies program at UMass., while an improvement over the past, is still a farce. Therefore, there is a lack of people with real journalistic ability attracted to this campus. And, therefore, the people on the staff of the Collegian all too often have little interest or know-how in producing a quality paper. And to make matters worse, some actually think that they do.

Compared to real life, very few sensational newsworthy events actually happen on a college campus. But a lot of people seem to think that journalism is synonymous with Jack Anderson, and these people are always trying to get the big scoop, to uncover the sensational scandal. The unfortunate result of this kind of thinking is that fairly unimportant issues get a lot of space, while newsworthy but less exciting subjects take a back seat, if, indeed, they get into the car at all.

You want coverage, Leslie? Start a rumor that your planes are smuggling cocaine across the border for Pres. Wood's personal stash. I guarantee you at least five reporters and a photographer.

Happy Anniversary you creeps

To the Editor:

While even the making of the film, Executive Action was in questionable taste, the fact that some campus organization has chosen this particular date, Nov. 22, to show the film sickens me. This is the nadir of an incredibly insensitive and tasteless act.

Naturally the people showing the movie waited until the night of the 21 to publicize it, and whoever conceived the idea of showing the film on this date is sick enough to think it was a good idea. It is one that people the likes of Chuck Colson could appreciate I am sure. Well, enjoy the anniversary you creeps.

$170 tax for all unacceptable

To the Editor:

The Administration HAS to be kidding about a $170 tax for all U.M. students for the upkeep of dorms. Why, in the name of Jesus should anyone pay for something that they in no way use or even want?

I am under 21, and have received an exemption from dorm living regulations because of financial reasons! I can barely scrape up the $300 per semester to pay tuition and other enforced fees. To load another $170 on my shoulders would force me right out of the university or to pay off loans for the next five years, which is just totally unacceptable to me. I just could not swing it! I know there are many others in similar situations. I don't know where the administration gets off even CONSIDERING such a thing! No one has money to pay out for something that they don't even use or give a shit about.

The other enforced fees are different in that students at least have the opportunity to take advantage of campus activities, the Infirmary, etc. They can at least get something from their money payed out. [All fees should be optional anyway.] A BLANKET fee of $170? What the hell can an off-campus person get out of THAT!!!!! The other fees are also a lot less than $170. Where do these high rollin' officials think regular people, already hurting because of lack of good jobs, high food prices, gas prices, book prices, EVERYTHING prices are going to come up with an "extra" $170 to pay for absolutely nothing as far as they are concerned!!!!!!!!!!

Let dorm living be optional and those who choose to live there pay their own damn price!

Sincerely,
Catherine Sherlock

S.P.O.N.G.E. demands MUA time

To the Editor:

After listening to the "Busing Teach-In" on WMUA on November 19th, we "The Concerned Citizens of Dorchester, Massachusetts" were pissed off at the biased presentation of this program. People wonder why there has been such strong resistance to forced busing in Boston. We demand equal time and proper representation of the issue at hand.

U.S. should require self help for food

To the Editor:

It might be better for everyone if the poor nations of the world turned their energies to increasing their food production and controlling their populations rather than castigating the United States for hogging the food and resources of the world. If India has the money to go to war with Pakistan and to build atom bombs, then it should use that money to reform its pathetically inefficient agricultural economy and to promote modern birth control methods rather than beg for American handouts. The People's Republic of China, with a much larger population and less arable land, has done just that. Thus, it can be done.

One questions whether increased American aid will help anyone anyway. Food sent from the United States to Biafra and Bangladesh rotted on the docks or wound up on the black market rather than feeding the starving people of those countries. The same thing happens in other parts of Southeast Asia and Africa. Frequently the people who steal the food are the political and military leaders of the countries who are now agitating for increased American aid. Why should we contribute if our gifts will never reach the hungry?

If the United States continues to give away food without requiring that the recipient nations institute drastic reforms in order to become self-sufficient, we will only compound the problem. The population in the poor nations will continue to grow at an exponential rate. Eventually the demand for food will exceed the capacity even of America to produce it. Then you will see real starvation.

It may be cruel to allow a mother in India, Chad or the Ivory Coast to starve to death. But isn't it even more savage to allow her to go on and have six or eight more children, when there is no food to feed them? I think so.

Until the poor nations of the world show that they are willing to really tackle their problems, or until the United States shows that it intends to demand compliance as a condition for aid, I do not plan to support relief efforts.

See you at dinner.

Rocky: A view from fun city

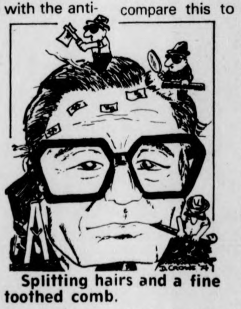
By BENITA PULLARA

When I was growing up in New York, almost everyone believed in Rockefeller. Even staunch Democrats, like my parents, voted for "Rocky" as he was affectionately called. Of course, this was many years ago, before the exposure of damaging material that has thrown a dubious light on "Rocky's character. Even so, I feel I am slightly betraying one of my childhood values since I sympathize with the anti-Rockefelller sentiment.

Although at first Rockefeller seemed like a sufficient choice for vice-president, mounting evidence since the nomination has put a different perspective on the support of his confirmation. All these "gifts" that Rockefeller and his family have generously donated to public officials and politicians are of a highly suspicious nature. This includes the fifty thousand dollars that Rocky gave Henry Kissinger, when Kissinger was experiencing financial difficulties due to a marriage break-up. The fact that two hundred thousand dollars from Rockefeller's family was given to Richard Nixon's campaign fund, has been revealed at a most inopportune time, for these days any gift to Nixon's '72 campaign is viewed skeptically. There are countless other "donations" to officials and politicians that Rocky might have trouble explaining.

Most disturbing is the matter of the nearly one million dollars in back taxes that Rockefeller neglected to pay. Since Rockefeller is certainly wealthy enough to afford the best lawyers and tax auditors, it is difficult to imagine how they could overlook such an extraordinary sum. Indeed, it is difficult to envision anyone making such a mistake, unless, of course, they were looking for every possible borderline case and loophole that would allow them to pay less taxes. Even Rocky's offer to remedy the matter by paying these taxes cannot erase the unethical overtones of this inaccuracy.

There was also the problem of the book that author wrote about Arthur J. Goldberg, who was Rocky's rival in the '72 campaign for governor. The book, which was a degrading biography of Rockefeller's opponent, was supported by sixty-thousand dollars donated by Rockefeller's brother, Laurence. Many compare this to the dirty tricks of the Nixon administration, though the initiator of the book, Jack Wells, denies Nelson Rockefeller had any involvement.



Splitting hairs and a fine toothed comb.

In addition to the evidence that has developed in the past months, there have been several reasons all along as to why Rockefeller should not be vice-president. The most prevalent, of course, deals with power and its' distribution. When we think of Rockefeller, visions of Standard Oil, Eastern Airlines, and all the many Rockefeller owned or partially controlled companies come to mind. We all must consider if it is possible for a man with these many business interests to put them aside and do what is best for the nation. It has been said that the Rockefeller family owns what may be one of the ten companies that control the world. Do we really want to give someone who has this much power any more?

We are trying to recover from the largest scandal in this country's history. It would seem that what we need least right now is a vice-president with any hint of unethical behavior. This just isn't the time to consider someone who may or may not be guilty of criminal charges. If Americans are ever to have faith in their politicians again those who hold high offices must have reputation beyond reproach. Somehow, it would seem that Nelson Rockefeller does not possess this qualification.

Ghetto living at UMass

By RICHARD WRIGHT

A lot of things on campus seem contradictory in and of themselves. Thousands of young people gather together at an institution of learning for the purpose of absorbing the knowledge that has proceeded us in order that we may function effectively within the society that has assimilated this knowledge, and the practices and beliefs this knowledge dictates. The added dimension of a University is a partially sheltered testing ground for new concepts and ideas. A place where scholarly activity is rewarded as an end unto itself. Research for it's own sake so to speak. The University is also a place for group response for or against something that violates the basic concepts that would have us to believe that knowledge is worthy of preservation and development. Having said all that it occurs to me that the undergraduates are not so dissimilar to another institution in our country. They share many of the same distinguishing characteristics. Poor housing. Poor food. Poor health. And a lot of despair at an inability to do anything about it.

Poverty is often treated as something that is over there, on the other side of the tracks on the fringe of our consciousness. In reality it permeates every inch of campus life. High-rise ghettos multiply the suicide rate, rapes and assaults, unhealthy refuse disposal, and general loss of self-esteem and pride. The residents are subjected to the inevitable personal and community horrors that tends to dehumanize everything and everyone who comes in contact with it.

Poverty is the internalizing of those emotions and dreams that distinguish humans from the animals. As your horizons shrink so does the will to see any further than the next closest moment of happiness that one can eke out his existence. Fantasies remain just that, and never mature into aspirations that might drive one on to grasp his share of the blessings that abound for the few at the expense of the many.

There is no worse poverty than that of the student cheerfully marching into his ghetto to suffer the miseries of university anonimity for four lonely years. Before the nations poverty can be chopped away, the student must overcome his own enslavement.

Decent exposure

While re-reading Point of Order, a documentary on the Army-McCarthy Hearings, yesterday I came to the emotional climax that always strikes me. Joseph Welch turns to Joe McCarthy in a fit of frustration saying, "Senator, you have done enough. Have you left no sense of decency?"

The word decency has always meant a great deal in a civilized society, and yet it is a concept often overlooked and not acted upon. In this community we see continual examples of indecency. When we see a male and female out together in public and one is obviously mistreating the other we can see that something is wrong. The concept has come to exist and be revered that it is "cool" to mistreat one who is somewhat dependent on you. It is also of course very respected to see how often one can have sex and with how many different people. What is indecent is that there are expectations that come with something like the sexual act which must be dealt with. Decency become a key issue if a happy resolution is to be reached. Yet people refuse to deal with these expectations.

Perhaps the greatest area for indecency is the dormitory. Every day we see cases of people mistreating people. When people somehow believe that their stereo is their property and that they can play it as loud as possible at will, indecency is present. Students should learn in college that living in a community is a difficult and confining experience. One must accommodate oneself to the needs of others. This is a university and people have a lot of work to do. No one should be put in the position of being forced out of their room regularly due to being unable to concentrate with all the noise. Decency demands that before you turn on or up your stereo that you consider the people around you and their needs.

Years ago dorm heads and the Dean's Office enforced rules which were very confining and strict. It was a time of "enforced" decency. Those times passed and students were put pretty much on their own. Students have done a pretty poor job of it. We must return to a situation where decency in the dorms is re-established.

There are many other cases of indecency that we both see and put up with. When a student is impolite to a dining commons worker, he or she should have their face slapped; when a student steals mugs from the Pub he or she should be punished; when a person is being ugly to another in our presence, we should speak up. It is time that students realized that having the privilege of living and interacting with others deserves and requires decency. Students are not the only people in the world and they should be learning how to live among others in peace.

We as a university must accept that responsibility now. We as educated people should be a model of decency and consideration. Instead we appear like a group of selfish people all rushing for a goal while stepping on people all the way.

Manners and politeness are not "repressive" concepts but vehicles that make life alot more pleasant. When someone is polite to you don't immediately look for an ulterior motive. When someone holds a door, a coat, or lights a cigarette for you, don't kick that person, swear at them, or get mad and insulted but learn to accept and give kindness by habit. Decency is simply the way of life that is the most pleasant for all concerned.

Students: Input or control

Imagine your younger brothers and sisters calling an after-dinner meeting of your parents, at which all family plans are presented by your father, elaborated upon and confirmed by your mother, and then voted upon by the kids. Imagine your little brother, say, delivering a proposal for what he considers the proper upbringing of youth, which receives applause and approval by the rest of your siblings, and is then handed up to mom and dad in the form of an advisory motion, which must be taken into consideration when future family decisions are being discussed and made. Such may be the shape of things to come.

I envision a time in the not-so-far future (before the year 2000 for sure) when such things as "minimum age requirements" will be a laughing stock of the past. 'Ageism' is getting its start on the West Coast, with equal rights for senior citizens as its target, and it won't be long before the under-20 set will be squaloring successfully for their fair share too. The obvious setbacks — political inexperience, economic dependency, and parental dependency — will be outweighed by a growing educational sophistication and awareness which has been seeping from universities to high schools with startling momentum for the past decade. "Ageist" remarks ("What does he know; he's just a kid") will replace or join sexist and racist remarks in a nationally piqued consciousness as downright abhorrent.

The roots for such a movement are here at UMass and on campuses nationwide where students are demanding input into decisions affecting where they sleep and eat and what courses they take and who teaches them and how they are graded and, when it comes right down to it, control over their own lives.

We've been hearing a lot about these sort of things here in Amherst lately, and observers of these movements like myself have been hearing a lot about these sort of thing every year since our high school days in the late sixties. But the main difference this year is that talk is being followed by action. For the first time in my educational career, I witnessed two clashing factions of a department plead their case last week to the students of that department, the ordeal ending in a student "advisory" vote.

I refer to the Journalistic Studies department's current internal dispute and the resulting Academic Affairs Committee — sponsored meeting to solicit student input in determining whether or not Journalism majors should be forced into an English major (as opposed to the previously dubbed "double major"). The particulars of this episode are not important; what is significant is that if five students had voted the other way, the vote would have been reversed and the plans and goals which the head of the department was hired to achieve and had worked towards for two years would, if the students' voice was more than a token, be toppled.

The outcome of that meeting meant a lot to some people and absolutely nothing to others. But the meeting itself set a precedent of sorts and was a small sample of things to come, of a time when more professors will be phoning their spouses in the afternoon: "Go ahead with dinner without me, hon. I've got to play 'firing line' with the students tonight."

That meeting was a germinal example of a time when professors will be evaluated annually by students, and the evaluations will be more than just a chance for pissed-on students to get their kicks in; instead, the evaluations will be statistically compiled and used, if not for firing and-or reprimanding, for forewarning prospective students. In any case, that meeting was a preview of a time when formal student input into all academic decisions is a recognized responsibility of both faculty and students.

The notorious Wellman Document, issued in 1972, guaranteed such student participation in academic decisions on all levels, in all departments, and the Academic Affairs Committee is currently conducting a survey to determine which departments are abiding by the Wellman Document and how they are going about it. The results of the survey are not yet available, but the committee intends to find out just how much say students have in policy-making decisions including curriculum reform, grading systems, and new courses.

"We don't want to be over the faculty," contends Maureen Barry, a member of the Academic Affairs committee. "We just want to be equally respected for our opinions."

How times have changed. Six short years ago, a 40-member student committee was voted into existence by the English Department faculty and granted the authority to investigate departmental affairs as they pertained to students, help shape curriculum, rate teaching effectiveness of professors, and exert influence on course content. A year later, the committee disbanded for lack of student interest. Apparently, some members of that committee — the English Department Undergraduate Council (EDUC) — felt that the power to recommend and not to act wasn't enough, and labeled it "tokenism."

Which is what worries me. I'm all for student input into academic decisions. Maybe we can get rid of some of those self-serving, self-righteous professors whose mile-long book lists, weekly exams, 25-page term papers (all for the sake of books-exams-papers) and mandatory class attendance, were the bane of my UMass existence. I'm not sure, however, I would want my classmates to have total control over how and what I am taught. I have long realized that if there's anyone to whom I am accountable for the quality of my education, it is myself, and therefore I would be hypocritical if I said I didn't want any part in choosing my teachers and their teaching methods.

On the other hand, however, I am willing — perhaps too willing — to adhere to faculty-established curriculum requirements, and I feel safe rationalizing it with, "they've-been-through-it-so-they-know-what-I-need." Perhaps I'm conditioned into acceptance, having come from a small high school where course selection was limited to whether you took Physics before Biology or vice versa. (By comparison, UMass is to my high school what the Miss Florence Diner menu is to McDonalds'.) Perhaps I'm too lazy to figure out how I would change the educational system here and would rather my teachers did it all for me.

In my case, I would hate to think that, as in the case of the Journalism Department, the direction of an entire department can come down to a vote of the students within that department. That, I think, is dangerous. Conceivably, a minority of students can lose out if an unpopular but educationally rewarding program is voted down by their peers.

Student input is one thing; student control is another. Perhaps I'm premature in forewarning the dangers of the latter, but I'd hate to see the day when students are so cocky and self-assured as to think they should have or deserve entire control over their education.

UMass sociology department selected as research center

The UMass sociology department has been chosen to serve as the national training center for a new research specialty which involves the evaluation of public policies in terms of their stated objectives and unintended consequences.

For each of the next four summers, UMass will be the site of an eight-week summer institute designed to train scholars in new research techniques.

Beginning in the summer of 1975, the sociology department will host a group of 25 graduate students, recent doctoral degree recipients, and established scholars who will get together to learn and further develop a variety of skills and methods to assess policies in such varied areas as energy consumption, health care, police and fire protection, and education.

The program will be lead by Peter H. Rossi, UMass sociology professor and director of his department's Social and Demographic Research Institute. Associate program directors include Professors Ronald Ehrenberg of economics and Sonia Wright of sociology.

The National Insitute of Mental Health through its Center on Metropolitan Studies is supporting the four institutes with a $300,000 grant.

According to Professor Rossi, "This is one of several projects which now mark the University of Massachusetts as a major national center of policy research. In responding to policy issues at local, state, regional and federal levels, the department of sociology is developing a unique combination of efforts to serve the objectives of scholarly research and public service simultaneously."

Outing club presents lecture on techniques of survival

Tonight the Outing Club presents Joe Freitus, a special guest lectuer from Groton, Mass. Freitus is the coordinator of the Outdoor Program for the Westfield Academy and it is his position to establish survival living courses at the school.

Through these courses students are introduced to the beauty of the out-of-doors and taught techniques of survival. The presentation will be at 6:30 p.m. in 101 Campus Center.

The student inmate component of the Model Education Program at the Berkshire County House of Correction has openings for students for the Spring semester.

The student intern spends 90 days living as an inmate within the confines of the House of Correction. The practicum offers 15 education credits. Independent study credits may be negotiated in other departments. There will be a program overview Tuesday evening at 7:30 in room 811-815 of the Campus Center. For further information concerning the program contact Bill O'Leary of 364 Hills South at 256-0602 or Larry Dye of 466 Hills South at 545-0636.

Two weeks in El Salvador

Wildlife prof. offers fish biology course

Professor Charles F. Cole of the Department of Forestry and Wildlife Management will be conducting a two week January short-course (Fish Biology 386A-700A) in El Salvador for students interested in potential Peace Corps service in Central America.

This course is designed to introduce potential Peace Corps volunteers to ongoing fisheries research and management programs now being operated cooperatively by Peace Corps volunteers and by the Salvadorean Ministry of Agriculture.

Following an orientation the students will be split into 2 groups, one group of which will work with Dr. Cole as he assists in the Salvadorean mangrove-estuary assessment program while the other group will spend a week working one-to-one with other volunteers in the country as agents at Fish Cooperatives, River Assessment Team members etc. At the end of the first week, these two groups will exchange assignments.

The expected cost will be approximately $250 for group air fare to and from Kennedy and an estimated $50 in-country living expenses. Participants will be accepted, in so far as accommodations will permit, from majors in the biological sciences or in resource areas such as forestry, fisheries and wildlife. Students going should have a genuine interest in seeking Peace Corps Volunteer service following graduation.

Those interested in further details should contact: Dr. Charles F. Cole, 317 Holdsworth Hall (545-2821) or Peter Phillips (same address). There will be a need for considerable preplanning from now through early January. The expected departure is January 18 with a February 1st return.

Corrections internships open

The program will be lead by Peter H. Rossi, UMass sociology professor and director of his department's Social and Demographic Research Institute. Associate program directors include Professors Ronald Ehrenberg of economics and Sonia Wright of sociology.

The National Insitute of Mental Health through its Center on Metropolitan Studies is supporting the four institutes with a $300,000 grant.

Peer sex education program seeks Greek area applicants

The Peer Sex Education Program presently is accepting interested applicants for participation in the PSE Program in the Greek Area.

PSEers provide information, counseling and referral services as well as set up educational programming. Developed and sponsored by the University Health Service, PSE has provided service in the Greek Area since fall, 1973.

Selection of new PSEers will be conducted following personal interviews held the 2 weeks following Thanksgiving. Anyone interested in participating in the 3 credit spring pre-service training program should call the Health Education Office at the Health Services (545-2671) or contact one of the Greek PSE members.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 25 — Born today, you are not one of those for whom domesticity has a great appeal. In fact, your preference is for life outside the home and for people outside the domestic circle. For this reason, it is doubtful if you will wish to marry at any time before middle-age when, if time and fortune act in their customary ways, you will at last mellow enough to be able to be happily involved in the domestic scene.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A stimulating beginning to a new work-week. Don't allow yourself to take sides when it comes to an argument on the employment scene.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The wise Capricorn will express his true feelings on a variety of subjects today. Refuse to bottle up your emotions; only frustration can result.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — If you are tactful enough as you make your request you should be able to see your wish granted by day's end. A day in which diplomacy pays off.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Personal happiness enables you to bring joy to a number of people today, particularly to those who depend upon you for their well-being.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Social contacts made early in the day may prove beneficial to your dealings in business or profession toward day's end. Be diplomatic.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Be sure to schedule periods of rest and relaxation throughout the work day. Otherwise, you may be exhausted by day's end and miss out on evening fun.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Chances for argument with higher-ups are good. To avoid difficulties, keep clear of all who might have opinions different with yours.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Place a guard on both your tongue and your temper. This is no time to allow yourself the luxury of emotional fireworks; keep responses at a minimum.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — If you neglect to thank those who have served you well, you may build up ill will against yourself. Make it a point to be extra courteous.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Complications on the employment scene may cause dissension among co-workers. Do what you can to grease the wheels of progress, especially your own.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — An exceptionally good day for the Libra who accepts the aid offered by friends and relatives. There is no need for you go it alone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) — You may be called upon to explain your own and another's behavior today. Be succinct — but not to the point of muddying understanding with brevity.

Abortion rulings explained

By LISA M. ERDBERG
Staff, Legal Services Office

In 1972 the United States Supreme Court finally agreed to reconsider a challenge to restrictive abortion laws. The decision which it handed down in January, 1973 — Roe v Wade, 410 U.S. 113 — effectively invalidated the restrictive abortion laws existing in almost every state, including Massachusetts.

Prior to this case most states had laws prohibiting abortions unless necessary to preserve the life of the mother, or in cases where the pregnancy was a result of incest or rape. The Massachusetts statute (Ch. 272 S 19) was fairly typical of such laws:

"Whoever with intent to procure the miscarriage of a woman, unlawfully administers to her, or advises or prescribes for her, or causes any poison, drug, medecine or other

WMUA presents 'Breadbasket' documentary

On Tuesday, November 26 at 7:00 p.m., WMUA will present "Breadbasket," a documentary concerning the plight of the Grain Belt farmer in America today.

This special pre-Thanksgiving program, narrated by WMUA newsman Charles Pellett, deals with the story and problems of a small, fertile Kansas farming community and its people.

Please tune into "Breadbasket" Tuesday evening at 7:00 on WMUA, 91.1 FM.

Supreme court rulings had impact on Massachusetts abortion laws

noxious thing to be taken by her or, with the like intent, unlawfully uses any instrument or other means whatever, or, with like intent, aids or assists therein, shall, if she dies in consequence thereof, be punished by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than five nor more than twenty years; and, if she does not die in consequence thereof, by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than seven years and a fine of not more than two thousand dollars."

Hospitals usually had a board to approve requests for so-called therapeutic abortions. If a woman could get three doctors acceptable to the board to certify that the abortion was necessary to preserve her health, she could obtain an abortion. In practical terms, this meant that a more affluent woman was able to obtain an abortion fairly easily, as she could usually find a co-operative psychiatrist and two other doctors who would state that continuation of the prevnancy to term would endanger her health — in this case usually her mental health. This involved a fair amount of hassle and there was always the risk the board wouldn't approve the request, but an affluent woman was certainly in a preferred position.

The Supreme Court's decision in Roe v Wade opened the way for all women to have access to such abortions. The Court established a timetable to govern the extent to which the State legislature can regulate abortions: during the first trimester the State cannot interfere at all — the decision and its implementation are left totally to the woman and her doctor; during the second trimester the State may make reasonable regulations regarding the performing of abortions, provided such regulations are related to the woman's health — e.g. requiring that they be performed in hospitals; in the last trimester the State may impose substantial restrictions on the right to abortion, even to the point of prohibiting abortions altogether unless necessary to preserve the woman's life or health.

The Massachusetts legislature passed a law which was to go into effect on November 1 requiring parental consent for abortions for women under eighteen. A federal district judge enjoined the enforcement of that statute, so that the young women involved were able to obtain abortions in time. There will be a hearing by a three-judge federal panel on the constitutionality of that statute. In at least one other state a similar consent statute was held not to comply with Roe v Wade.

In an extremely controversial case the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled that a husband and potential father had no right to prevent his wife from obtaining an abortion. This issue was explicitly left open by Roe v Wade.

While the Supreme Court's decision made safe abortions far more available, poor women once again are finding themselves in a less favorable position. While Medicaid pays the costs of carrying a pregnancy to term, many states are refusing to make medicaid payments for abortions. Some of these cases are now coming into the federal courts. In addition, currently there is a movement in Congress to include in the Social Security appropriations a provision forbidding the use of those funds for abortions.

Finally the whole notion of a woman's right to abortion is continuously under attack, backed by a powerful lobby, in both state legislatures and the national congress. What many people see as basically amounting to a women's right to make her own difficult decision in a tough situation is seen by many others as a fundamental question of morality, to be legislated and imposed on all.

Leon Thomas - a musical experience

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

Opening the concert Stan Kinard stated, "The New Africa House Steering Committee is proud to present Leon Thomas for the cultural enlightenment and edification of the community". In the course or his performance Brother Leon aptly demonstrated that he had in fact come to enrich our musical experience.

Many folks are unfamiliar with Leon Thomas, because he has consistently refused to commercialize his work hence becoming a cult figure. This limited exposure rebounds to the detriment of folks unaware of Leon Thomas, for he is definitely an exciting artist both live and on recordings.

The performance began with a pair of selections from the rhythm section which if I may say, would have provided a good evenings entertainment themselves. The tunes allowed the group to expose their abilities, the solos were strong and the audience was receptive. The strength of the introduction signalled to me that this was the best acoustics system I had ever heard at Bowker and I prepared for Leon Thomas.

Leon opened the first set with his vocal arrangement of Horace Silver's "Song for My Father" proceeded into "Shape Your Mind to Die", "Love Each Other" and tunes from his previous albums. Leon's style is remarkable, vocally the brother has been described a yodeller, but that is a restrictive definition that could never reflect the complexity of his music. Infact Leon Thomas whistles, moans, yodels, laughs, screeches, cries, raps and just sings his heart out. Leon's rendition of "You are the Sunshine of My Life" had me thinking of my sunshine.

An important facet of Leon's performance is the percussion arrangement. Appearing with Leon were two master percussionist Sonny Murray and Baba Feme. Leon Thomas is one of the bonafide pioneers in the use of the percussion instruments from the cultures of the world. Many artists currently dealing heavily with percussion owe dues to Leon Thomas for creating an atmosphere of acceptance for this idion.

Black Affairs

The second set was for me a journey of recognition into the music of a giant. I thought that many people who missed the concert due to unfamiliarity with brother Leon would be saying "He's the brother who made that tune." Leon performed "China Doll", "Boom Boom Boom", "Pieces" and "Creator Has a Master Plan" to the happiness of me for one and the audience as a whole.

It would be remiss not to list the personnel in Leon's group: Neal Preque, piano; Merwin Brunson, bass; Sadiq Rahman Shabazz, drums; Black Arthur, alto sax.

I enjoyed the show and applaud New Africa House for presenting Leon Thomas who justly deserves the recognition. Using a term that I never really understood, but in my relations with words defines Leon Thomas is purist; mainly because in the context of his music he does purely whatever is his desire to do.

Fast revenue: Where did the money go?

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

commentary

Last Friday the benevolent assistant director of the university food services Arthur Warren agreed to donate .75 cents for every meal ticket stub that was not used, according to Thursdays Collegian.

Now the average cost of a meal in the dining commons is about two dollars and fifty cents. Elementary substraction reveals that there should be one dollar and fifty cents left remaining. The question is posed, where does that $1.50 go?

One would think that folks were generous enough to donate $2.50 to Oxfam-America they would receive change from their money. In which case all those who-NOT FASTED-but did not go to the dining commons yesterday should expect to be reimbursed $1.50 from the UMass food service dept.

Failing that, one would think that it should go to some other form of third world representative project, better yet why not send the whole thing to Oxfam-America. I know that the residents of the Columbia Point project in Boston would sure appreciate such a donation towards operating their alternative school, so that they wouldn't have to get their heads busted bothering them nice white folks in South Boston, and it wouldn't leave you liberal white folks embarrassed about the actions of your brothers.

To those of you who gave up your meal ticket yesterday I have a question, why did you do it? You might all have different answers but none of you, I am sure, would give up your meal ticket to make a $5,000 donation to the universities food service. Maybe I am wrong, it could be a tip for the delicious meals and wonderful services they have performed.

> "Next thing you know you see something on your semester bill summarizing that you have agreed to donate one meal ticket per semester to some third world cause, while they pocket the difference."

Now I am just wondering if this is an oversight on your part, that you really did not realize that they would be profiting once again at the expense of third world people, not to mention at your expense and generosity. If it is an oversight I expect that you will immediately set in motion such actions that will remedy the mistake.

Seems to me that if you let this stand the way it is the university is going to think that they can get away with anything. Next thing you know you see something on your semester bill summarizing that you have agreed to donate one meal ticket per semester to some third world cause; while they pocket the difference. That's not a bad idea, just make sure that what you donate is what is received.

Now I know how you all don't like anyone taking advantage of you, you always say how much that "pisses you off." I guess if you don't do anything about this it means you condone the act cause it doesn't "piss you off."

That's a shame, if thats the case, I kinda thought you were a little more aware.

Playoffs still possible

Pats capitalize, subdue Colts

BALTIMORE [UPI] -- Jim Plunkett passed to a linebacker turned Pass Receiver John Tanner for one touchdown and plunged for a second to lead New England to a 27-17 win over the Baltimore Colts Sunday and keep alive the Patriots' flickering hopes for a playoff berth.

Ending a three game losing streak, the injury-plagued Patriots took advantage of two big breaks after a scoreless first period to saddle Baltimore with its ninth loss against two wins.

After Patriots' linebacker Rodrigo Barnes recovered a fumbled punt by Cotton Speyrer at the Colts' 17, tiny running back Mack Herron slashed three ties to the Baltimore two.

The Pats, who have lost a flock of pass receivers to injuries, then sent in Tanner, who lined up as an eligible receiver and snared a two-yard toss from Plunkett for the first score.

After Toni Linhart kicked a 25-yard filed goal to narrow the Pats' lead to 7-3, New England got a second break when Colt defender Nelson Munsey was called for pass interference at the Baltimore one. Plunkett climbed over a stack of defensive linemen to score on a quarterback keeper.

John Smith added a 34-yard field goal just before the intermission and the Pats led 17-3.

Midway through the third quarter, Colt halfback Lydell Mitchell scampered 31 yard for a score to bring Baltimore to within seven points.

But Herron dived one yard for touchdown in the final period and Jack Mildren intercepted a Marty Domres pass and returned it 41 yards to set up a 28-yard field goal by Smith that iced the game.

Domres engineered the Colts' best sustained march and capped the 76-yard drive by diving the final two yards for the last score of the day.

The Patriots, who got a club record 57th punt return of the year from Herron, upped their record to 7-4. New England trails Miami and Buffalo, co-leaders in the Eastern Division of the American Conference, by one game.

Ohio State voted to bowl

CHICAGO (AP) — The Buckeyes of Ohio State, for an unprecedented third straight year, will carry the Big Ten colors in the Rose Bowl game New Years Day when they play Southern California.

The decision was reached Sunday after a secret ballot of conference athletic directors following Ohio State's 12-10 victory over Michigan Saturday, which left the two teams tied for the conference championship.

Each athletic director was given a ballot with 10 choices. Each made a selection and then turned in the unsigned, but sealed ballot.

Conference Commissioner Wayne Duke and a conference attorney then counted the votes before announcing Ohio State the winner. Duke did not reveal details of the voting.

The only thing anyone can be sure of is the vote had to be an Ohio State majority. If it had been a 5-5 tie, then Michigan would have been selected since Ohio State last represented the Big Ten in the Rose Bowl.

Duke said there was no set criterion for the voting. Each athletic director made his own decision after a discussion and a review of movies of Saturday's game.

Asked if the conference would change its procedures to determine the Rose Bowl team from "most representative" to a hard set of rules, Duke said, "We have a committee which constantly reviews our policy." All 10 teams were on the ballot because each was eligible to be selected.

Duke added that there is some sentiment for allowing Big Ten teams to go to more than one bowl, but there are "many factors involved."

It was the second year of voting heartbreak for the Michigan Wolverines who were shut out of the Rose Bowl last year following a 10-10 tie with Ohio State.

Jets upset Miami

NEW YORK [UPI] — Joe Namath fired a 45-yard touchdown strike to tight end Richard Caster with 5:05 remaining Sunday to lift the New York Jets to a stunning 17-14 upset over the mistake-prone Miami Dolphins.

Namath's touchdown pass came only 1:38 after Bob Griese had put Miami ahead 14-10 with a six-yard swing pass to Jim Kiick.

A pass interference penalty against Miami's Tim Foley gave the Jets possession on the Dolphins' 45 and on the first play Namath fired to a wide-open Caster over the middle and he raced to the end zone untouched for the winning score.

Namath threw three yards to Caster in the second period to give the Jets a 7-0 halftime lead and Griese tied the score with a six yard scramble early in the third period. Rookie Pat Leahy gave New York a 10-7 lead early in the fourth period with a 34-yard field goal before flanker Nat Moore threw 31 yards to Paul Warfield at the Jets' six and Griese put Miami ahead four plays later.

The victory was the Jets' third in a row and fourth against seven losses. The loss dropped Miami to 8-3.

The Jet Defense played its best half of the season in the first two periods, holding Miami to just 60 yards and two blown scoring opportunities prevented New York from breaking the game open.

Harris lifts Rams

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — James Harris found veteran Jack Snow all alone in the end zone with an eight yard pass with 1:14 left Sunday to give the Los Angeles Rams a come-from-behind 20-17 victory over the Minnesota Vikings.

Behind 17-6 after three quarters, the Rams rallied behind the passing of Harris in the last period to pull out their eighth victory in eleven starts. They moved to within a New Orleans loss to Pittsburgh Monday night of clinching their second straight NFC West Championship.

Harris, who suffered an ankle injury when tackled by Alan Page early in the third quarter, hit ten straight passes in the fourth quarter to lead the Rams to two touchdowns to overcome the Vikings' seemingly insurmountable lead.

Ending a five-game losing string to the Vikings before a crowd of 90,266, the Rams bottled up Minnesota quarterback Fran Tarkenton, who completed 16 of 26 passes for 219 yards and one touchdown in the first half.

Los Angeles' winning touchdown drive started with only 3:53 left to play and consumed 69 yards in 7 plays.

The Rams, after a seven-yard punt return by Cullen Bryant, started on their own 31 and went all but six of the 69 yards on Harris passes. Snow's touchdown catch was his seventh reception for 91 yards in the hard-fought game.

B's down Canucks, 7-4

BOSTON [UPI] - Phil Esposito and Don Marcotte scored two goals each Sunday night as the Boston Bruins defeated the Vancouver Canucks 7-4 in a National Hockey League game.

The loss snapped Vancouver's unbeaten string at seven games while the Bruins extended their winning streak to five.

Walt McKechnie put the Bruins ahead 1-0 on an unassisted goal at 4:44 of the first period and Esposito's power play goal at 19:28 gave the Bruins a 2-0 lead.

After a power play goal by AB Demarco, Marcotte got the first of his two when he deflected a shot by Al Sims at 8:43 of the second period.

In the third period, the teams broke loose for seven goals. Esposito and Marcotte each scored once more. Also scoring were Gregg Sheppard and Terry O'Reilly for the Bruins, and Don Lever, Andre Boudrias and Garry Monahan for Vancouver.

BC humiliates UMass, 70-8

By STEVE DECOSTA
Sports Staff

Fred Steinfort approached the football. His left foot sank deep into the pliant pigskin, sending it arching lazily toward Bill Coleman behind the goal line.

Coleman gathered it in two yards deep, started his jets, and began racing straight upfield.

Roger Reddick, steaking up the sideline on the coverage team, saw his opponent break toward the middle, and angled in himself.

Reddick met Coleman at the 18 yard line, blindsided him, and the ball popped loose. Steve Sciaballa, right on top of the play, landed on the fumble. For all intents and purposes, the games ended right there, even though it was only the first play of the contest.

The Boston College Eagles went on to score that time and the next five times they had possession to roll up a 42-0 first half lead and, in the end, hand UMass its worst humiliation since 1956, 70-8.

"The special team and offensive mistakes were the key," said UMass coach Dick MacPherson after the debacle.

The Minutemen fumbled six times, losing five, and threw three interceptions, allowing more than enough leeway for the potent Eagle offensive machine to operate.

But somehow the real key was more intangible than that. BC roamed the gridiron with reckless abandon, looking mechanized in pursuit of points and red shirts carrying the ball.

"They're extremely well-coached," said MacPherson, but somehow, it was even something more than that. They were simply a squad that belonged together, adept at maiming, brutalizing, destroying, carrying the football into the end zone.

Obviously, as the score indicates, the game was absurdly one-sided.

The Eagles picked up 477 yards in total offense while holding UMass to just 162. The vaunted Minuteman running attack was held to 30 yards in 36 attempts, not exactly a respectable average.

Overall, the Eagles only punted three times during the afternoon (all in the second half) and made only one mistake, a fumbled punt, that led to the sole UMass score.

John Romboli got off a very short fourth quarter punt and short man Reddick attempted to field the ball on the run, but it skittered off his fingertips and was fallen on by Don Sokolnicki.

Pete Colton, the third in a string of UMass musical quarterbacks, wanted to go on top right away, but his bomb to Ron Williams was short and the freshman had to come back and catch the ball while on his knees at the BC 13.

After being sacked for a loss of eight, Colton was again under pressure but eluded the blitz long enough to find Lee Harriman open in the corner of the endzone.

But it was only a drop in the bucket compared to what the Eagles were up to.

Keith Barnette kept up his phenomenal scoring pace with three touchdowns. The markers gave him 122 points for the year and kept him well in the running for the national collegiate scoring championship.

Minuteman running back John Romboli (36) falls victim to a sure B.C. tackle made by Alex MacLellan (37) as UMass ground game managed by 30 yards in 36 attempts.

Barnette's running mate, Earl Strong, was the game's leading rusher with 83 yards in 12 attempts, along with two six-pointers. The other BC scores were spread out among five players.

There was little in the form of excitement for UMass, but even when there was, it didn't count.

Rich Jessamy pulled hamstring and all, carried a BC kickoff for 56 yards in the third quarter in a play which would have given the Minutemen by far their best field position of the day. But appropriately enough, a penalty flag back at the 32 yard line signalled a clipping call, putting UMass right back where it spent most of the dismal afternoon, in a deep hole.

Despite a 42-0 halftime lead, BC opened the third quarter with its regulars. On top of that, Yukica had his quarterback, Mike Kruczek, who had hit six of seven first half tosses, run ten straight pass plays.

Running up the score, you might say. Not so said Yukica. "The field was wet and we had planned to pass before the game started," rationalized the coach. "The footing wasn't good enough for a sound running game."

The defeat dropped the UMass record to 5-6 and marked the first time the Minutemen have suffered a losing season since 1970.

Harriers enter Nationals with high hopes for many

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

The collegiate cross country careers of Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and Tom Wilson will come to a close today in Bloomington, Indiana, where an expected 300 of the nation's top runners will be competing in the National Collegiate Athletic Association Championships.

The harriers are entering the biggest cross country meet in the Untied States with optimism. "Last weeks performance at the IC4A's was a great confidence booster," commented the squad's premier runner, Randy Thomas.

Thomas added that his last cross country meet will mean much more if he runs well. "I won't be thinking about it being my last meet when I'm putting on the uniform, but when I sit down to take it off after the race, it means looking back on the past four years."

The race will take place at the Indiana University Golf Course, where 30-35 teams will be battling for national supremacy. Western Kentucky, Oregon, Washington State and the University of Texas at El Paso (UTEP) appear to be the strongest teams, with Eastern New Mexico, UMass, Providence and Eastern Michigan expected to among the top team finishers.

Individually, Western Kentucky's Nick Rose, who placed second a year ago behind Steve Prefontaine, may be considered the pre-meet favorite. Challenging Rose for NCAA honors will be John Ngeno of Washington State and Oregon's Paul Geis. Geis beat Ngeno by thirteen seconds in the Pacific-8 North meet, but past statistics probably will mean little, because big meets such as the Nationals usually result in some surprising performances.

The course will be six miles long, a mile longer than the harriers have been running all season. The UMass team consists of solid "hill runners", and since the meet will be held on a hilly course, the distancemen are looking forward to a good race.

Thomas and Bill Gillin, the number one and two runners for UMass will be competing with All-America honors as their goal. The top twenty-five runners earn the title of All-American.

A year ago, some unusual circumstances prevented Thomas and company from running as well as expected. Thomas lost his shoe at the start of the race, but braved the chilly wind and 30-degree temperatures of Spokane, Washington to finish 78th. John McGrail, competing as a freshman in 1973, fell with one and a half miles to go, only to recover and come within four seconds of Tom Maguire, the number two UMass runner in the NCAA's last season.

Bill Gillin finished a disappointing 127 after running impressively for the first mile of the race. Gillin, who was fighting sickness at the Hangman Valley Golf Club in Spokane, can be expected to run with the same competitiveness that has marked his performances and those of teammate John McGrail throughout the season.

Tom Wilson, Tom Maguire, and freshman standout Cliff Staples will be the other three Minutemen runners in the race that highlights the college cross country schedule. Wilson has been improving with every meet, but Magurie has been trying to attain his running form of 1973, when he was the third runner for coach Ken O'Brien.

Certainly, previous results can be forgotten and national rankings disregarded as the finest distancemen gather, some for the last race of their college careers, with hopes of earning national recognition.

Skaters succumb, 5-1 in Lowell Tech upset

RICH SEVIERI
Sports Staff

On a Saturday the UMass sports fan would rather forget, Lowell Tech hockey fans were talking about, "the best game that Tech has ever played."

The underdog Terriers parlayed four power play goals, a stellar goaltending performance by Mike Gerogosian and tenacious forechecking, to upset UMass, 5-1, before 1000 ecstatic fans at Tyngsboro's Skatethree Arena.

The Minutemen were doing a good job of killing off Tim Howe's tripping penalty that carried over from the first period, when Bruce Hutchinson cruised inside the blueline on the leftwing and rattled a slapshot off the farside post, inches below the crossbar at 1:24.

Twenty two seconds after Kevin Conners went off for tripping at 8:59, the Terriers had their second power play goal of the period. Bruce Hutchinson took the puck away from the UMass defense in the corner. Hutchinson centered the puck to linemate John Nagle cutting through the slot. Nagle beat Redmond with a hard backhander to the stick side.

Mike Ellis went to the box for charging at 13:41. Twenty five seconds later the Terriers had their third power play goal of the period, and a 3-0 lead. Lowell Tech defenseman Scott McKay caught Redmond moving the wrong way on a skimmer along the ice from the left point.

Gerogosian, who was an all-scholastic at Stoneham, had 29 saves, many of those bordering on larceny.

The Minutemen finally managed to beat Gerogosian when Mike Ellis scored on a power play at 9:11 of the third period. Ellis stuffed home an uncovered rebound in the crease, after consecutive save by Gerogosian off of Harris, Stuart, and Lyons.

Ellis's goal cut the Tech lead to, 4-1. Hutchinson's second goal of the night at 4:52 of the third period had given Tech a four goal lead. Hutchinson and both of his linemates were left uncovered in front of Redmond.

Lowell Tech's fourth power play goal of the night at 14:52 of the third period came on a great individual effort by Dave Desmond.

Tenant assoc. requests more info on finances

Rosemary Whittaker, Pat Walker, and Roger Cruff discussing the Married Student Housing budget at yesterday's meeting.

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

Representatives of the UMass Tenant Association met with Residential Life officials yesterday for further discussion of the married student housing financial structure.

Among those present at the meeting were four tenant association members, Residential Life directors Ken Dean, Roger Cruff, and Director of Married Student Housing Donald Pelkey.

The meeting was held in response to the tenants' request that they be given more specific information regarding the finances of Lincoln, University, and North Village Apartments. At a meeting held on November 15, Residential Life administrators were unable to answer many of the tenants' questions.

At that time, Ken Dean blamed the lack of data on a new accounting system, and the transfer of Charles Hampton to another department. According to Dean, Hampton "prepared all of our financial data for a number of years," and his transfer "has caused some problems."

"I would tone that down a little bit for The Collegian, and I wouldn't even want that personnel transfer in the paper because it's unfair to that individual. We, as administrators work with these things every day."

Hampton was present at yesterday's meeting to answer questions. Previous to the meeting, tenants were given copies of documents which supposedly provided a greater breakdown of the housing budget. Tenant Association lawyer, David Sheehan, called the information "just generalities."

"Only about three out of eight questions we asked have been answered by this documentation," said tenant organizer Patrick Walker at the start of Monday's meeting.

But some questions were answered at the meeting, which lasted nearly two hours. "We're trying to get a clear idea of expenses and operations," said Tenant Association chairperson Rosemary Whittaker.

Selectmen appoint town-Univ. liaison

By JUDY BOUCHER

Amherst Board of Selectmen last night followed a move the University made last September by appointing a liaison person to improve town-gown relationships.

Selectmen voted unanimously to appoint Town Manager Allen Torrey as the liaison person for communications from UMass, Amherst College and Hampshire College.

As official liaison person Torrey will be making a record of all calls the University makes to his office, logging subject matter, name of caller, the time and the date. Selectmen told Torrey that "this would not require fancy, lengthy reports."

In addition, Torrey will be responsible for channeling all pertinent information to the Board as well as other appropriate town committees.

The University's liaison person from Whitmore is Gerald Grady. Grady was appointed community coordinator last September and has appeared before the Board stating University's position on sharing fiscal responsibilities for fire services.

Selectmen also made a request via Grady's office for providing professional assistance in the study of a report presently before the Board on solid waste management.

Professors in the civil and environmental engineering, landscape and public health departments will be asked to comment and make recommendations on the choice of the landfill site, criteria for a landfill site and the best method for solid waste disposal for Amherst.

Those members of the UMass community who wish to help the town decide what is the best way and the best place to get rid of waste materials will form an ad hoc committee. This committee will not exist for more than 90 days.

The recommendations from local experts will probably be presented to the Board sometime in February.

Grad Senate discusses housing, campus bank

By E. B. Brody
Staff Reporter

Vice Chancellor Robert Gage spoke at the Graduate Student Senate meeting last night. One issue raised was the dropping of dormitory living requirement for undergrads. "It would be irresponsible to make living on campus optional until it is made more desirable; this would keep rent down for married students who must live off campus," Gage said.

The Senate also discussed a proposed bank in the Campus Center, financial aid for grad students, and a new system of approving theses.

Gage said UMass must meet the debt payment of 6-6¼ million dollars a year with a ten percent increase for this year's budget. He said this will pay off the loans taken out to fund the construction of the residence halls, dining commons, and the Campus Center.

One Senator asked Gage if good students were being ignored by financial aid. He agreed that they were, but added most grad students hold either teaching assistantships or associateships, both salaried positions.

The majority of the senators present indicated that financial aid should give preference to Undergraduates.

Members of the Board of Governors of the Campus Center, Mike Curran, Arthur Strohl, and John Clausson said the space for the proposed bank in the Colonial Lounge would be both rented to and developed by an independent bank. They said the proposal would involve at least 40 thousand dollars annually.

"For the banks, this is a political issue — for us, this is a financial one," said Curran.

An announcement was made that the Dean of a given department now has an arbitrary power of approval of theses, assisted by an anonymous committee in the appraisal of said theses.

Sirica acquits Mitchell of minor charges

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Judge John J. Sirica directed acquittal of John N. Mitchell and John D. Ehrlichman on lesser charges in the Watergate cover-up trial yesterday but left standing other major charges against them.

As the government rested its case after eight weeks, Sirica denied motions by Mitchell, Ehrlichman and two other cover-up defendants that all charges against them be dismissed.

With the jury out of the courtroom, Sirica directed the acquittal of Mitchell and Ehrlichman of charges they lied to the FBI in unsworn interviews during its Watergate investigation, saying, "I'm not satisfied with the evidence." He said he was making the acquittals as "a matter of law."

The ruling came after the government rested its case as the ninth week of the trial began and defense attorneys made their verdicts of acquittal. Only defendant H. R. Haldeman did not ask to be acquitted at this time.

Lawyers for the four other defendants — Mitchell, Ehrlichman, Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson — all argued unsuccessfully that the government had not presented sufficient evidence for the case to go any further.

Left standing against Mitchell and Ehrlichman were charges of conspiracy, obstruction of justice, and perjury in the cover-up of the break-in and bugging of Democratic National headquarters June 17, 1972.

UMass Harriers 8th in nation

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

BLOOMINGTON, Indiana — Twenty-eight teams battled on the Indiana U. par-three golf course yesterday, hoping to capture the coveted number one spot among the nation's top cross country teams.

Oregon successtully defended its NCAA cross-country championship on the punishing six mile IU course, placing three runners in the top six for a winning score of 77.

The UMass harriers, ranked no better than thirteenth throughout the season ran a fine race, finishing eighth. The thirty-sixth running of the NCAA meet did result in some disappointments for the members of the team, who felt they could have done better. Placing eighth in the country, however, is an indication of success that reflects the relentless work of Coach Ken O'Brien and his dedicated runners.

Randy Thomas, in his final collegiate race, earned All-American honors placing twenty-seventh overall. Bill Gillin finished one spot behind Thomas, as both runners achieved a goal of All-American set before the trip to Bloomington. "I should've been sixteenth or seventeenth," stated Thomas, who was in fifteenth place at the three-mile mark. "The team could've done better, but we can't be disappointed. You have to expect losing by a narrow margin against the best in the country."

Thomas was timed in 30:37.7, while teammate Gillin followed closely at 30:39.4. John McGrail was sixty-third with a time of 31:11.9., as teammates Tom Wilson and Tom Maguire placed 100th and 137th, respectively, rounding out the top five UMass finishers. Wilson was clocked in 31:38 while Maguire completed the demanding layout in 31:56.7. Cliff Staples, the only other Minuteman harrier, was the 227th runner to finish the race.

Drive for extended rent control underway

By JOE COTTER
Progressive News Service

An initiative petition and voter registration drive will begin this week to bring rent control into towns surrounding the university.

The drive is in conjunction with a state wide effort initiated by the Rent Control Task Force of Mass.

John O'Keefe, a member of the Commuter Assembly and tenant's rights activist, explained that the local work will be coordinated through the Commuter Assembly and the VCCA.

O'Keefe said "The Mass rent control law is due to expire next April. We have to contact individual legislators in an attempt to get the law extended at least through the next state wide election day so the rent control already in existence will not be abolished.

At that time, a referendum will hopefully appear on the ballot requesting that chapter 842 of the Acts of 1970 Mass. General Laws, Sec. 1, be amended to include both cities and towns regardless of population, and that Sec. 2 be abolished as a qualification for rent control. Eight per cent of the registered voters are needed to sign the petition to get the referendum on the ballot."

According to Section 1 Ch. 842 a serious public emergency exists with respect to the housing of a substantial number of citizens in certain areas of the Commonwealth but especially in the cities regardless of population and towns with a population of fifty thousand or over. The situation has been created by housing demolition, deterioration of a substantial portion of the existing housing stock, insufficient new housing construction, increased costs of construction and finance, inflation and the effects of the Vietnam War, and has resulted in a substantial and increasing shortage of rental housing accommodations for families of low and moderate income and abnormally high rents.

The section also states that unless residential rents and eviction of tenants are regulated and controlled, such emergency and further inflationary pressures resulting therefrom will produce serious threats to the public health, safety, and general welfare of the citizens of the aforementioned communities and in other communities adjacent to them; that such an emergency should be met by the Commonwealth immediately and with due regard or the results and responsibilities of its local communities."

Sec. 2 of Ch. 842 states "This act shall take effect in any city and any town with a population of fifty thousand or over on the thirtieth day following the acceptance of its provisions."

O'Keefe told why rent control legislation is needed in the very near future. "We have to get rent control to deal with the end of mandatory dorm requirements," he said.

Tenants continue rent hike appeal

However, Roger Cruff felt the solution to the tenants problems was not to be found in any detailed exploration of the budget. "The quickest and most highly profitable course of action for relief of the problems caused to individuals is through a financial aid analysis," Cruff said. Tenants should work out their money problems "as a group, with the financial aid office," instead of concerning themselves with the rent increase, he added.

Also discussed at the meeting were notices of administrative withdrawal which many tenants received this week. According to University policy, students may be administratively withdrawn (student status terminated) by the Registrar, only after two attempts have been made by the Married Student Housing Office to collect rent. Pat Walker claimed the letter he received from the housing office was misleading and intimidating.

"If I just read that letter and didn't know about the proper procedure, I'd think my student status was taken away today," said Walker. He added that many students are unaware that a certified letter from the Registrar is the only legal notice of withdrawal. He asked that housing director Pelkey's form letter be re-worded in a less intimidating manner. "The way it is now, it's pretty underhanded," he said.

Since the rent strikers are paying their rent into a special escrow account, they are already at one level of appealing their administrative withdrawal. "You should not allow yourselves to be intimidated either by the University or the system established," according to lawyer David Sheehan.

The Tenant Association will meet today with a liason committee who will determine if the strikers' case should be brought before the University Board of Trustees. The liason committee is made up of Chancellor Bromery, Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage, representatives from the Graduate and Undergraduate Student Senates, and a faculty member.

"They can decide if we go on to the Board of Trustees, or if we settle this thing right here," according to Rosemary Whittaker. The group will meet in Chancellor Bromery's offices at 4:30 this afternoon.

The Tenant Association hopes to obtain a rent rollback to the six per cent cost of living increase, whereas present increases are from 15 to 39 per cent.

Police Report

Weekend crime high

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Football weekends usually have a high rate of crime, and this one was no different, according to Saul Chafin, assistant director of the UMass Department of Public Safety.

The Southwest tunnel was the scene of an armed robbery, Saturday at 12:35 a.m., according to Police reports.

An unidentified male threatened a girl with a pocketknife, while demanding her to turn over her money. When the assailant discovered she had no money on her person, he forced her to turn over two rings, said UMass Police.

The identity of the assailant is unknown. The case is currently under investigation by the UMass Police.

Other security problems included operating under the influence of alcohol, theft from motor vehicles, and theft from unlocked dorm rooms.

Four students were arrested for operating under the influence this weekend, UMass Police report.

"I would like to advise, especially the students, that this violation is stringently enforced. We are thinking of forwarding these violations to the dean of students, in the hopes that something positive can be accomplished, besides the usual court action," said Chafin.

There were seven thefts from motor vehicles, and several dorm thefts also this weekend, according to reports.

Chafin commented on the problem: "We want to emphasize that car owners shouldn't leave their tape decks, and cameras in their cars. These are the items being stolen. We also want to stress the idea that the students lock their dorm rooms whenever they leave."

Larry Holmes, technical assistant in the department added: "What else can we do to get through to the students the importance of locking their doors? We've posted signs, given dorm demonstrations, but nothing seems to help."

Cody concert: Unoriginal, mediocre

By CRAIG ROCHE
Below the Salt Reporter

Friday night an audience of about 700 people got together in the Student Union Ballroom to dance to the music of the Outer Space Band and Commander Cody and His Lost Planet Airmen. It is becoming too typical for concerts on the campus to attain a measure of mediocrity and this one proved to be no exception.

Both the bands have roots in similar music. Outer Space played a short and tuneful opening set that was somewhat hindered by poor sound reproduction. And while Commander Cody and his band were probably making 10 times what Outer Space made, in no way did their performance merit it. People shouldn't have to pay $4.00 to sit on the cold and dirty SUB floor.

The Lost Planet Airmen, particularly Billy C. Farlow, carried the first half of their show as the Commander remained behind the piano, his back to the audience. Two truck driving tunes including a forced version of Little Feat's "Willin". I think the band, particularly the Commander, could have cared less where they were (as revealed in one member's question to the same effect). Both Merle Haggard and the Dead do better versions than these boys did on "Mama Tried". They followed that by doing rough versions of "Blue Christmas" and "Daddy's Drinking Up Our Christmas."

It was a few tunes later that the band began to warm up, when three members picked up a trombone, sax, and trumpet to do a stomping "Milk Cow Blues." After a Bob Wills song it was time for the Commander to take the stage.

Finally, at least half way through their time on stage, the Lost Planet Airmen got off the ground. Starting with Cody's rendition of "House of Blue Lights" the band got most of the crowd dancing. Well, shuffling. Very little material is written by anyone in the band, and the songs they chose were unoriginal choices, such as "Cryin Time AGain", "I saw the Light", and 2 of their hits, "Hot Rod Lincoln" and "Riot in Cellblock."

Andy Stein on fiddle and sax, and Ernie Hager on pedal steel carried the band instrumentally most of the night. Hager's consistent level of taste made up for other member's lapses during the night. Billy C. Farlow, the front man of the band, seemed to have a good time as an imitation Elvis, complete with an acoustic guitar prop during the closing songs, "Too Much Fun", "Don't Let Go", and "Jailhouse Rock."

Called back for the obligatory encore, the band did average versions of "I Gotta Woman and Lost in the Ozone." This band would have been a lot of fun in, say the Hatch Celebrity Series, but they really are no concert band. This reporter's final impression was a reflection of the state of 'rock biz'...that such bands can command outrageous fees and not give an audience anymore than what we can see on a good night at the Wall. I hope all who went got their money's worth.

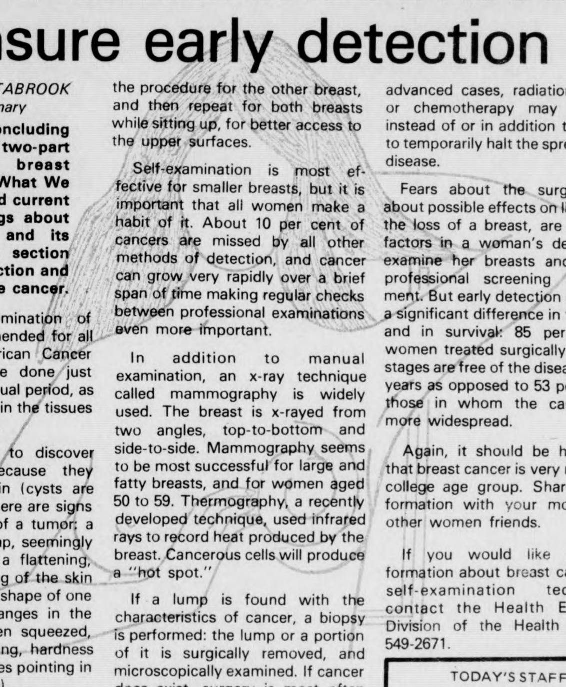
Breast cancer

Self-examination advised to insure early detection



By BARBARA ESTABROOK
UMass Infirmary

This is the concluding section of a two-part article about breast cancer. Part I, What We Know, examined current research findings about breast cancer and its incidence. This section deals with detection and treatment of the cancer.

Monthly self-examination of the breasts is recommended for all women by the American Cancer Society. It should be done just following each menstrual period, as normal changes occur in the tissues prior to menstruation.

It can be difficult to discover cancerous lumps because they usually cause no pain (cysts are frequently painful). There are signs which are indicative of a tumor: a hard and irregular lump, seemingly near to the surface; a flattening, retraction, or puckering of the skin or nipple; difference in shape of one breast, and other changes in the nipple (discharge when squeezed, scaly crust or reddening, hardness or inelasticity, or nipples pointing in asymmetric directions).

Changes such as these should be checked for in front of a mirror, with arms at sides, again with arms raised, and a third time with palms of the hands pressed together. Then, you should lie down with a towel under the shoulder. Put that arm under your head, and examine the breast on that side, using the flat of the fingers of your opposite hand in small circular motions. Follow a spiral pattern moving from the armpit in to the nipple. Repeat the procedure for the other breast, and then repeat for both breasts while sitting up, for better access to the upper surfaces.

Self-examination is most effective for smaller breasts, but it is important that all women make a habit of it. About 10 per cent of cancers are missed by all other methods of detection, and cancer can grow very rapidly over a brief span of time making regular checks between professional examinations even more important.

In addition to manual examination, an x-ray technique called mammography is widely used. The breast is x-rayed from two angles, top-to-bottom and side-to-side. Mammography seems to be most successful for large and fatty breasts, and for women aged 50 to 59. Thermography, a recently developed technique, used infrared rays to record heat produced by the breast. Cancerous cells will produce a "hot spot."

If a lump is found with the characteristics of cancer, a biopsy is performed: the lump or a portion of it is surgically removed, and microscopically examined. If cancer does exist, surgery is most often the course of action taken.

Usually a radical mastectomy is performed, involving removal of the entire breast, supporting muscles and the lymph nodes in the armpit. In a few cases less extensive surgery is performed. The choice of method is dependent upon the extent of the cancer. Women should be aware that there is debate within the medical profession concerning optimal surgical procedures. For very advanced cases, radiation therapy or chemotherapy may be used instead of or in addition to surgery to temporarily halt the spread of the disease.

Fears about the surgery, and about possible effects on lifestyle of the loss of a breast, are very real factors in a woman's decision to examine her breasts and-or seek professional screening or treatment. But early detection can make a significant difference in treatment and in survival: 85 per cent of women treated surgically in earlier stages are free of the disease after 5 years as opposed to 53 per cent of those in whom the cancer was more widespread.

Again, it should be highlighted that breast cancer is very rare in the college age group. Share this information with your mother and other women friends.

Brett thefts article termed misleading

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

Ralph Hawkins, Head of Residence of Brett Dorm in the Central Residential Area, told the Collegian an article it printed last week concerning thefts in his dorm incorrectly implied that a master key was used to get into the student rooms.

Hawkins said early Saturday morning, November 16, between midnight and 5:30 a.m. an unidentified thief robbed over ten students in Brett of a total of about $200.

"Students who were ripped off, in every case, admitted to the investigating officer that they had slept with their doors unlocked," Hawkins said. "To my knowledge there is only one master key for the dorm, and I have that," he said.

"It's unfortunate that the wording in the article relating to the thefts leaves people to believe that a master key was used. With everything that I know up to now, this is untrue," Hawkins said.

He said, "I don't leave out the possibility it could be someone living in the dorm." Hawkins said he and the counsellors have tried to tell everyone not to sleep with their doors unlocked but "some habits are hard to break."

Hawkins said in one instance the thief stepped over three students who were visiting friends and sleeping on the floor, committed the act, and left. He said the thief went through stacks of clothes in another case and in a third took a guitar into the hallway to check it.

Bearing on Watergate trial

Court-appointed doctors examine Nixon

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. [UPI] - Former President Richard Nixon was examined by court-appointed doctors in his walled seafront estate yesterday to get an opinion on whether his health would be endangered by testifying for the Watergate coverup trial.

Three doctors named by U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica drove here from Long Beach, Calif., in a U.S. marshal's car after spending the morning going over Nixon's written records at Long Beach Memorial Hospital.

The head of the "outside" panel, Dr. Charles Hufnagel, refused to answer any questions from newsmen about their preliminary findings. They are under orders to report back to Sirica by Friday.

Sirica had indicated that depending upon their findings he might transfer the entire case of the Watergate trial to San Clemente temporarily to hear Nixon's testimony.

The visiting doctors were accompanied to San Clemente by Dr. Eldon B. Hickman, the surgeon who performed the operation on Nixon Oct. 29 to prevent the movement of blood clots from his left leg to his heart and lungs.

Hickman and Dr. John Lungren, Nixon's personal physician, both have reported previously that Nixon came close to death in a relapse following the surgery and should not be submitted to stress for up to three months.

Hufnagel spent more than three hours going over Nixon's records at the hospital.

Hufnagel refused to give any indication of the type of examination they gave Nixon at his home-whether they simply talked with him, or conducted medical tests on him.

When Nixon was released from the hospital earlier this month after a 23-day stay, Lungren said the 61-year-old former president was endangered by even small amounts of stress and that a medical examination in itself might be stressful.

The head of the court-appointed medical team, Dr. Charles A. Hufnagel, said after arrival here Sunday that the doctors would not call on Nixon if his medical records showed the stress of an examination would endanger him.

Hufnagel and the other two doctors, John A. Spittell Jr. and Richard Starr Ross, have until Friday to report back to Sirica whether Nixon really is too sick, as Lungren has said, to give testimony in the Watergate cover-up trial.

If the doctors report that Nixon is unable to travel to Washington, D.C., to testify, Sirica could proceed with several options if he felt that the former president's testimony was vital in the trial, as the defense attorneys have contended.

Norway and the Soviet Union began talks yesterday on disputed frontiers across the Barents Sea. The region is particularly sensitive because of the presence of oil in the region and because the Soviet navy's northern fleet, which includes atomic submarines, is based in the Murmansk Inlet.

Summit agreement to limit MIRV warheads seen as important step

WASHINGTON [UPI] - President Ford and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev appear to have taken an important step towards bolstering Soviet-American arms control negotiations, but many problems still beset detente.

Probably the most significant development to emerge from the weekend Vladivostok meeting was the determination of both sides to limit the number of multiple nuclear warheads (MIRVs) which the United States and Soviet Union may deploy on their missiles.

The development and deployment of MIRV warheads has been a central element in the continuing arms race, with both sides rushing to perfect them.

The MIRV warhead, whose individual parts may be directed against as many as 16 individual targets, has long been held as a special U.S. advantage.

The United States perfected the MIRVs before the Soviets, and has deployed them on landbased and submarine-based missiles.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has said that U.S. superiority in MIRVs makes up for the numerical advantage in overall missile force which the Russians maintained under the 1972 U.S.-Soviet strategic arms agreement.

The Soviet-American statement, issued at the conclusion of the Vladivostok meeting, indicated both sides also want to agree on total numbers of delivery vehicles for both the United States and Soviet Union.

A major question on the minds of such critics as Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., will be whether the Soviet Union will retain superiority in overall numbers of missiles as it did in 1972.

Under the 1972 agreement, the United States was allowed 1,054 land-based missiles and 656 submarine-based missiles. Russia got 1,410 land-based missiles and 950 submarine-launched missiles.

U.S.-Soviet arms control is a key element of detente between Washington and Moscow, but another part which remains troublesome is the fact that the administration has not been able to make good on the 1972 promise to give Russia non-discriminatory trade treatment.

Rockefeller's wife has cancer surgery again

NEW YORK [UPI] — Margaretta "Happy" Rockefeller underwent her second breast removal operation for cancer yesterday and her doctor said she has a 90 per cent chance of full recovery over 10 years.

Dr. Jerome A. Urban, head of a four surgeon team which removed Mrs. Rockefeller's right breast less than six weeks after her left breast was similarly removed, said "It's out and that's the end of it."

Urban, acting chief of breast services at Sloan-Kettering Memorial Hospital where the surgery was performed, said the second operation for the wife of the Vice-President-designate Nelson Rockefeller was simpler than the first and preliminary lab reports were that the cancer had not spread to lymph glands under her arm.

"She's O.K. It's all over," Rockefeller said minutes after visiting his wife in her room. "I'm so relieved. I'm so grateful. I'm thanking God and especially the doctors and the nurses."

Rockefeller said his wife regained consciousness in the operating room, looked up at him and said, "Thank God."

Former UN secretary general U Thant dies

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — U Thant, the self-effacing Burmese schoolmaster who became the third secretary general of the United Nations, died yesterday in New York. He was 65.

Thant died at 1:30 p.m. EST at Columbia Presbyterian Hospital, a U.N. spokesman said.

The former secretary general had been suffering from cancer of the cheek and was in and out of the hospital a number of times since his illness was first known about three years ago.

He entered the hospital the last time on Nov. 22, the spokesman said, and contracted pneumonia during the past three days.

Since his retirement as secretary general on Dec. 31, 1971, Thant lived in suburban Harrison, N.Y. He is survived by his widow, a daughter and son-in-law and four grandchildren.

Quiet, contemplative and physically small, Thant assumed the top U.N. post as acting secretary general after Dag Hammarskjold's death in 1961. A year later, he was unanimously named secretary general in his own right and he insisted that his five-year term be dated back to the time he first went into the office.

Re-elected to a second term, he retired from his "lonely frustrating job" at its conclusion on Dec. 31, 1971, having served longer than anyone as U.N. chief executive.

Thant was born on Pantanaw, Burma, on Jan. 22, 1909, the son of a Burmese landowner. He was educated at University College, Rangoon, and became headmaster of the national high school at Pantanaw in 1931 after a brief schoolteaching career there.

Sales lag behind inventories

Government reports more layoffs, higher prices

By United Press International

Government reports signaled more layoffs and even higher food prices, and the chairman of Ford Motor Co. charged Washington with sitting idly by in the middle of a recession.

"We're in the middle of a recession and we just can't sit there," said Henry Ford II. "I don't see anything specific being done in Washington."

Ford spoke out in the wake of a mid-November sales period that showed auto sales drop 35 per cent from the depressed levels of a year ago. It was the worst mid-November sales period since 1970.

The Agriculture Department said the cost of feeding a theoretical family of 3.2 persons rose $4 to a record $1,779 in October, 9.8 per cent higher than a year ago. And economists estimated food costs at the end of the year will average 20 per cent above 1973, the biggest one-year increase on record.

President Ford's Council on Wage and Price Stability, opening a two-day hearing on the 400 per cent rise in sugar prices, said sugar prices would rise even more.

The Associated Retail Bakers of America said as many as 15,000 neighborhood bakeries may be forced out of business if sugar prices keep going up. Five to 10 per cent of the nation's 20,000 bake shops already have closed their doors, a spokesman told the council.

The Consumer Federation of America, which claims to represent 30 million consumers, called for a nationwide boycott of sugar Dec. 1 to 10, blaming high sugar prices on "bungling" by the government, "windfall" sugar company profits and poor worldwide production.

In an indication that more heavy layoffs in the months ahead, the Commerce Department reported that sales are running far behind accumulation of inventories.

The department said manufacturers hold an average $1.77 in inventory for every $1 in sales.

Huge stockpiles of inventories is a major factor leading businesses to layoff thousands of workers to slow or stop production until sales can catch up.

Companies with a vast accumulation of unsold products, especially in the auto, appliance and electronic industries, have idled hundreds of thousands of workers in pre-Christmas layoffs and more production cutbacks were expected.

The lingering strike of 120,000 coal miners also has resulted in thousands of layoffs in the railroad and steel industries. The steel industry alone has idled 21,000 workers because of short coal supplies.

And government officials said 400,00 workers would be idled in various industries if the strike continues for another two weeks.

Automakers report 35 p.c. drop from last year in overall sales

DETROIT [UPI] - The four U.S. automakers reported yesterday mid-November sales were down almost 35 per cent from last year's already depressed levels.

Ford Motor Co. Chairman Henry Ford II said the bottom of the auto slump has not yet been reached.

General Motors, Ford, Chrysler and American motors said domestic sales in the Nov. 11-20 period totaled 190,093 cars, off 34.7 per cent from 258,818 in mid-November last year. There were nine sales days this year and eight last year.

While not as sharp a drop as industry executives had predicted, the mid-November sales were the lowest for the industry since 1970, when a strike hampered deliveries.

Chrysler Corp., which will close five of its six U.S. assembly plants from Thanksgiving to Jan. 6, reported a 41.7 per cent drop in Nov. 11-20 sales. American Motors' sales were down 38 per cent, General Motors reported a 34.3 per cent decline and Ford Motor Co. said its sales dropped 31.3 per cent.

Up to 200,000 U.S. and Canadian auto workers will be off for parts or all of December as automakers try to bring their huge inventory of unsold cars into line with slumping sales.

While small car sales continue to slide, luxury models were selling at a near-record pace.

Cadillac sold 9,731 cars in mid-November, just 2.3 per cent off the record for the period set last year, and Imperial sales so far in the 1975-model year are within 19 units of matching the year-ago pace.

The Ford chairman said he feared it would be mid-February before Congress took some action on the economy that could improve consumer confidence.

"I'm not convinced it's bottomed out yet," he said. "We're in the middle of a recession and we just can't sit there. I don't see anything specific being done in Washington."

Miller asks council to reconsider pact

WASHINGTON [UPI] — United Mine Workers President Arnold Miller summoned his rebellious bargaining council back to Washington yesterday to rule on a revised coal contract worked out under the gaze of Treasury Secretary William E. Simon.

Council members, who refused last Friday to approve an initial contract worked out Nov. 13 between Miller and the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, were expected to begin studying the rewritten pact today.

Approval by the 39-member council is the first step required to ratify the contract and end the nation-wide strike that has kept 120,000 miners off the job since Nov. 12.

Simon, whose participation in the renewed negotiations forced him to drop plans to join other Cabinet members in welcoming President Ford back from the Far East, described the revised contract reached Sunday night as "an improved package."

Neither he nor any of the other participants in the negotiations, however, would comment on the new terms.

Miller had called his initial contract "probably the best agreement in any industry that has been made in modern times." But he said in a terse statement Sunday night the second round of negotiations had been "time well spent."

Union sources said bargaining council members were summoned to Washington by telephone and probably would meet Tuesday afternoon. The council includes the three top executives in the union, the 18 members of the union's executive board and the 18 presidents of union districts where there are bituminous coal contracts.

Republicans accuse Democrats of delay

WASHINGTON [UPI] - Senate Republican leaders accused Democrats yesterday of delaying President Ford's economic program, but 12 Democrats announced they would seek swift approval of a tax overhaul going beyond Ford's program.

Sen. Hugh Scott, the Senate GOP leader, charged the Democrats with stalling action on Ford's proposals while taking the "coward's way out" by calling for standby wage-price controls.

"We can't just stand around issuing manifestos," Scott said. "There is no bread in rhetoric."

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., said the Democrats must seize the initiative and establish the government's economic policies because of Ford's conservatism.

"I am not so naive as to expect the President, a lifelong economic conservative, to reverse his philosophy, despite the evidence of the failure of the current policies," Humphrey said in a speech prepared for the National Council for Urban Economic Development.

Drilling delayed

BOSTON [AP] — Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton has delayed the start of environmental hearings on offshore oil drilling for at least 60 days, the Massachusetts attorney general's office said yesterday. Morton acted after meeting with representatives of Oregon, Washington state, Massachusetts and the city of Los Angeles, who threatened to seek an injunction to delay the hearings.

Henry assures China

PEKING [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger assured Chinese leaders yesterday the three-year-old diplomatic thaw between the United States and China is firmly part of President Ford's foreign policy and will continue.

In a state banquet toast at the huge Peking Peoples Palace, the secretary said the improvement in relations was "one of the most significant initiatives in American foreign policy."

He said it "has not been a matter of expediency, but of fixed principle of American foreign policy."

Hijacking ends

TUNIS, Tunisia [AP] - Denied asylum by the Arab world, four Palestinians ended their three-day siege of a British jetliner yesterday and surrendered to Tunisian authorities. West Germany said it may ask extradition of the hijackers for the murder of a German hostage.

The four gunmen walked out with three crewmen, the last of 48 hostages, and seven ransomed Arab guerrillas after the Tunisian government announced it would grant them asylum.

Connally trial set

WASHINGTON [[UPI] - A federal judge yesterday granted separate trials for former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally on charges of bribery and perjury in the milk fund case and scheduled the first of them to begin in Washington next March 19.

Connally, who was indicted last July on five counts in the biggest remaining Watergate-related case, had asked for separate trials to be held outside the District of Columbia.

Boycott started

BOSTON [AP] - Opponents of busing for school desegregation began a week-long school boycott in South Boston on yesterday as 200 white students walked out of classes at South Boston High.

About 230 of the 400 whites who normally attend classes at the high school's main building came to class, a school department spokesman said. Approximately 25 whites and 150 blacks remained in class after the peaceful walkout.

Immediate need for unity, organization

By Black New Service

Middle class white America has begun to feel the pressure of inflation. Their reaction can be seen in their increased hostility to aid being given to minority student groups. It boils down to the needs of minority students, and unless minority students make an immediate move to organize and unify themselves middle class white America will delete their presence.

Here at the University the lack of unity and organization is very apparent. Black students organizations continue to have internal conflicts. With the echo that they are representative black student organizations they refuse to recruit new members, control and leadership of these groups being dictated by a few.

None of these organizations has a membership capacity greater than thirty. Elections of officers for positions representing an entire community is done at times with six or seven people present at the meeting.

Just recently the leaders of these organizations came to the conclusion that the struggle in Boston was over so they refused to give any aid. When will they realize that the struggle is not over in Boston, just as it is not over in Charlotte, nor in Louisiana, nor all over the world.

An organization is as strong as it's members. Where membership is lacking there can be no effective organization, and that has been the septic of these organizations the leadership must wake up!! There can be no progress without struggle and no struggle without unity.

The legacies of the sixties have expired. The power structure will relinquish nothing if they aren't forced to. Our leaders don't seem to understand this, and that is why minority students are in such a sad situation in the 70's.

George Phillips

There has been a marked decline in minority student admission into college campuses, because of financial aid cutbacks minority students have to once again set their goals away from the expense of college. The number of minority freshmen dropped from 14.8 percent last year to 13 percent in September.

Third World students, the Chinese could never have defeated the Japanese if they weren't organized; the Vietnamese could never have defeated France, the United States and it's allies if they weren't organized.

In Guinea-Bissau and Mozambique they couldn't have defeated, I mean defeated the Portuguese and it's allies if they weren't organized. A good solid organization which includes maximum membership is one of the keys to waging a successful struggle against the oppressive.

Third world students, WAKE UP!!! Get involved, get organized if the leaders of the various organizations refuse to come to you, it is your duty to go to them. They represent you, their letters to the oppressor are backed by your voice, you should get up and hear if what you are saying is representative of you.

One cannot favor freedom and yet deprecate agitation. The struggle may be a moral one; or it may be a physical one; or it may be both moral and physical, but it must be a struggle.

Power concedes nothing without a demand, it never did and never will. No ruling class in history has ever relinquished it's rule without putting up a fight.

In light of the lessons of history, to continue in the way we are, advocating struggle without organization is the same as not advocating struggle.

Ismael Rivera and his band came to UMass Sunday night, and brought "the Latin that won't let you sit down."

Philosophy and opinions

The following are excerpts from the teachings and thoughts of Marcus Garvey.

"There can be no peace among men and nations, so long as the strong continues to oppress the weak, so long as injustice is done to other peoples, just so long will we have cause for war, and make a lasting peace an impossibility."

"Education is the medium by which a people are prepared for the creation of their own particular civilization, and the advancement and glory of their own race."

"Let Africa be our guiding STAR--OUR STAR OF DESTINY."

"So many of us find excuses to get out of the Black Race, because we are led to believe that the race is unworthy - that it has not accomplished anything. Cowards that we are! It is we who are unworthy because we are not contributing to the uplift and upbuilding of this noble race."

"How dare anyone tell us that Africa cannot be redeemed, when we have 400,000,000 men and women with warm blood coursing through their veins?"

"Wake up Ethiopia! Wake up Africa! Let us work towards the one glorious end of a free redeemed and mighty nation. Let Africa be a bright star among the constellation of nations."

Service to the letter

By JUDITH WOLINSKYSOLOWAY
Below the Salt Staff

A visit to the UMass Mail Room to learn how it operates is like falling down the rabbit hole in Alice's Wonderland. The visit results in unexpected and pleasant surprises.

Hidden in the bowels of Whitmore, Central Mail is a busy place with 11 friendly employees, a strange assortment of machines, and an unusual decor. On a busy day, 19,000 letters, cards, and packages coming from and going to places all over the world pass through this windowless world.

The clatter and rattle of the metering and mailing machines compete with the workers' voices while the mail is being processed. Between mail deliveries, the pace slows down, the machines are silent and the noisy office roar becomes a quiet hum.

According to Gene "Buddy" St. Germain, Central Mail Supervisor, there are 11 full-time employees and 30 work-study students to service 24,000 students and 6,100 faculty and staff. When mail comes in to be sorted, everyone pitches in to help, resulting in a hectic but efficient operation.

Richard Chiriboga, a work-study student, was helpful in explaining how mail is processed. He said that three kinds of mail are processed in Central Mail: incoming, outgoing, and campus.

Incoming mail is delivered to the Mail Room by the Amherst Post Office three times daily, at 11:45 a.m., 2:00 p.m., and 4:00 p.m. The mail bags, which have already been separated into Whitmore mail, dorm mail, office mail, and "mixies" by the Post Office, are taken to the appropriate section of mailboxes and sorted for delivery by one of three campus mail trucks.

There are two types of outgoing mail picked up by the campus mail truck drivers on their runs, those already with stamps and departmental mail which is unstamped. Unstamped first class letters are put by the handful into an automatic "postage meter machine" which not only can stamp envelopes but also seal them. Special types of letters and all packages are weighed and stamped by hand.

The third type of mail, campus mail, is brought to Central Mail by the campus mail trucks, sorted and sent out again on the trucks.

A huge "mail inserting machine" that runs the length of two walls handles outgoing bulk mail. The machine can fold, address, seal and stamp large numbers of bulk mail, such as flyers and pamphlets, at a high rate of speed. The "mail inserting machine" is also responsible for stuffing and sealing the blue pay envelopes that many persons get each Friday.

"Mixies," mentioned earlier, Chiriboga said, "are letters with an incomplete address." Addressers try to locate a correct address from campus directories and housing lists. Dorothy Brown, an addresser who was diligently poring through four books trying to locate a particular name and address, said that if she cannot find a name, the letter is stamped "return to sender" and sent back to the Post Office. She advises that a full name and address be included on all incoming and campus mail.

Chiriboga followed this up by suggesting that students notify the Housing Office of any change in their local address. Also, he said that departmental offices and faculty should notify Central Mail of any address changes or additions.

After spending an hour during a busy morning watching the Mail Room employees and the machines at work, the halls and offices of Whitmore seem to be in a different world.

So it was discovered that a letter dropped down the mail slot in Whitmore, which connects to the Mail Room, won't be disappearing into thin air. It could be on its way down to the Mad Hatter's tea party.

Dear Theo,
Just bought a swell new pen.

Positive message draws results

By LILA DENHAN
Staff Correspondent

With bread going for half a buck, the economy faltering, and the world is a food crisis, who wants religion?

"No one," answers Reverend Paul MacVittie, pastor of College Church in Northampton.

Then is it personal charisma that each Sunday draws 600 persons to hear him give a sermon (when most of the student population is barely awake)?

In a telephone interview, the pastor attributed the "Success" of College Church to the positive message it proclaims.

"We deal in the realities of life," Mac Vittie said emphatically. While people are bombarded with bad news, we talk about the gospel of Jesus Christ, and that is always good news."

With a large and enthusiastic congregation, College Church sounds like a clergyman's dream. Pastor MacVittie said it hasn't always been that way.

At its birth in April 1972, the Church could claim only four members and $10. Within a year, between 400 and 500 people came regularly each Sunday.

"And they keep coming back because they are challenged. Being a Christian isn't easy, but it is fulfilling. Students wouldn't return if God was not real to them. In a college community, going to Church is not a habitual Sunday morning thing."

MacVittie continued energetically, "I spend hours a day studying. The Bible is the most important resource, but I have to read other things too, like Time magazine. I can't sound like an achin' idiot, you know," he gave a short laugh and went on.

MacVittie is looking forward to this Sunday's "One on One" program, when each person who usually goes to College Church will bring a friend with them.

"The term 'One on One' comes from basketball, he explained. "Although the congregation is large, we don't want the newcomers to feel like just one out in the crowd."

RECIPE EXCHANGE

By SUE KIERAS and SUE DUCHIN
Staff Writer

For those of you who want to bring home a nice surprise for Mom, what could be nicer than using some rosy, plush cranberries to brighten up the Thanksgiving dinner?This cranberry treat is simply a matter of mixing and pouring. The result is a chewy, luscious dessert.

ROSE'S CRANBERRY CHEW

Equipment: 7" by 9" shallow baking dish & small mixing bowl
Ingredients: 2 c. Ocean Spray fresh cranberries
3-4 c. sugar or 5-8 c. honey
1 c. flour
1 egg (beaten)
1-2 c. margarine
Optional: 1-2 c. chopped walnuts

Grease the pan well. Spread cranberries over the bottom. Sprinkle with 1-4 cup of sugar OR a little less than 1-4 a cup of honey. In a bowl add the rest of sugar OR honey to the egg. Blend in the flour and shortening. Pour the batter over the cranberries. (Sprinkle walnuts on top.) Bake at 325 degrees for 45 minutes.

To save money, use canned cranberries. The sugar is already included and you don't have use as much of the expensive $3.39-5 lb. sugar.

Now if you don't have the time to bake, you might consider bringing home a bottle of "Cranberry Cordial" or some vodka and cranberry juice to celebrate the festive occasion. Cranberry Coodial can be served on the rocks.

CAPE CODDER

1 1-2 oz. vodka
2 oz. cranberry juice ice
Mix all ingredients together in a tall glass and garnish with a lime.

GOOD GRADES COME EASY TO FAST READERS
THE LAZY WAY TO SPEED READING
let's you read 1000 words in 30 days

You and I, like everyone else, were taught HOW to read. Then our teachers quit but they gave us more and more to read, bogged us down with all that reading material and "I" have done something about it.

I will tell you, show you and you will do it too. Just 15 minutes a day for 30 days — that's all you need.

Revolutionary NEW speed reading course — NOW in kit form — Complete with electronic device — ready to GO!

Reread your text material twice - HOURS before your exam
Reread your notes 15 times - MINUTES before your exam

The equipment I guarantee. You will have to guarantee to yourself that you will follow and stay with my instructions, and they are SIMPLE, and in doing so you CAN NOT FAIL to substantially increase your reading rate.

The money you pay for this KIT will be a drop in the bucket compared to the rewards you'll reap — just ask someone who reads 1000 words per minute or better. But they did not do it in 30 days the way you will.

Letters to the editor

Taking up where Cohen left off

To the Editor:

I would like to add a few comments of my own to Ed Cohen's editorial of Thursday, Nov. 21. I believe that Mr. Cohen has neglected the initial reason for the founding of the state of Israel. I am speaking, of course of the Nazi genocide of European Jewry during World War II. Perhaps the world has forgotten that between six and ten million Jews were starved, gassed and burnt to death for the crime of being Jewish.

They were murdered before the eyes of the world. Hitler made his intentions known in his book, Mein Kamf. In later years he requested any nation who would do so, to please let the Jews emmigrate. No one took him up on it.

America was no exception. Boatloads of Jews, upon arrival in New York were shipped back to Europe to be humiliated and eventually killed. And the Germans were not the only ones to participate in this spectacle of horror. The Checks, Poles, Hungarians, French, Rumanians, Russians, etc., all joined in with relish. People who did not actually slaughter merely kept silent.

So, after World War II it was decided that Jews should have a homeland and Palestine was chosen. However, the British and the Arabs did not want a Jewish State and did everything possible to prevent it. Terrorist groups, such as the Stern gang, sprung up. Eventually there was a full scale war, and Israel became an official country. Since then there has been repeated warfare.

Why? Well one reason is the Palestinian refugees. Why are they refugees? Because they fled from their homes. And why did they run? Because the Arab governments told them that the Jews would kill them if they did not. And they also promised that another war would be waged in which all the Jews would be sent away from the Middle East. Nassar promised them, "We will drive Israel into the Red Sea."

But when they fled, they ended up on the borders in refugee camps because the Arab countries refused to let them enter. For the past 25 years, Palestinians have lived in squalid refugee camps, fed on hatred for Jews and the Jewish State.

Now I believe that sooner or later a Palestinian state should be founded, probably on some portion of the occupied territories. But it cannot be the state of Israel. And it cannot be established until the Arabs are willing to recognize Israel and agree that it belongs in the Middle East permanently. And that is a concession that Yasser Arafat has not been willing to make.

I would also like to comment on the charges that Arabs and black Jews are 2nd class citizens in Israel. It is true. And it is as ugly as the racism anywhere else. But this has no bearing on the status of Israel as a nation. Because Arabs and black Jews are discriminated against, should Israel cease to exist? Should Syria cease to exist? I ask because the Jewish population of Syria is severely oppressed. Should the USSR cease to exist? Three million Russian Jews are continually oppressed and harassed by the government's anti-Jewish policy.

Yes, the internal politics in Israel need revision. But that is for young Israelis, who are extremely aware of this problem, to solve. In the meantime, the Jewish state is in existence because history has time and again proven the necessity for such a state.

Zapping Ziff

To the Editor:

I must answer Ziff's token-dangling letter of November 18 with some questions.

In the realm of sensitivity, [which is often considered irrelevant to academe, but which is particularly relevant to a discipline like journalism] how does Howard Ziff normally introduce members of the journalism department? Does he normally say "...and here are our special consciousness people, a Pulitzer Prize-winning Black and a P.P.-winning Woman?" Do the signs on these professors' doors or desks read "Black Pulitzer Prize Winner" and "Woman Pulitzer Prize Winner"?! Or do they have names, are they individuals worth being introduced as such?

I've heard Prof. Ziff's opinions at meetings. I'm familiar with his belief, as stated at a meeting preparing the Collegian's Black Affairs position, that a journalist is a "Man of Letters." Well, I'll never be a "Man of Letters". I've had the unpleasant experience of a personal encounter with Prof. Ziff in which he asked me if I was trying to pass as male, since I often use the nickname "Denny". Well, he might just as well ask my mother that one. I mention this incident to point out that Prof. Ziff has no respect for people, individuals, or human values, whatever his "professional" credentials might be. He does not even have the sophistication to show common courtesy to other people. Furthermore, how can Prof. Ziff defend himself on the question of student input by stating that the decision was made at a department meeting in the ENGLISH department? English majors are not the ones being drastically affected by Ziff's inexcusable maneuverings.

I suggest that, in view of the farcical goings-on in the Journalism department, a student would be better off taking a completely separate major with a few electives in JS and participation in campus media.

CC workers get what they asked for

To the Editor:

Recently, letters have appeared in the Collegian condemning the policy of not paying overtime to students, especially in terms of the Campus Center and its accommodations manager, Don Witkoski. I would like to remind people, especially Ms. Wisebacker, that students working in the dorms were told, when hired, that work time over 40 hours would be carried. At that time no one quit or complained about the policy. It actually proved beneficial to many workers who counted on the carried hours to cover during slow weeks. It wasn't time and a half, but we all knew that. As for Mr. Witkoski. I found him to be an easy person to work with, and if problems arose he could be counted on to help out, even if that meant changing linen or answering the phone. The reference by Ms. Wisebacker to switchboard operator pay vs. desk clerk pay was also very misleading. Any switchboard person male OR female receives the same pay. At busy times an operator may perform duties usually handled by the desk clerk, but never does the ultimate responsibility lie with that person. Some people are not capable of handling those responsibilities, and that is why they do not receive the pay, or the position.

French corridor, Chacun à son goût

To the Editor:

John Burke's letter against the article depicting the French Corridor [11-25] surprised us, to say the least. Yes, it is true that only 12 out of 27 people in the basement of Moore belong to the organization, [although others who don't speak French join in our activities] but that was the purpose intended in publishing the article, i.e. publicity. Our membership is reduced to 12 due to graduations and the computer-run system used in assigning students to the rooms. At the end of last year, we were promised all the rooms in the basement for our purposes. Due to the computer, people were assigned to other places, and of course, once settled, did not want to move again.

At a floor meeting earlier this year [where many non-French Corridor people were absent], we explained that the French Corridor was simply a club [for it is an RSO organization], and that we are all residents of the same corridor, and did not intend to become a faction aimed at separatism.

In conclusion, the purpose of the article was to obtain some publicity for the French Corridor, so that others might know we exist. It was not an article depicting life in the basement of Moore House. We are not "numerous people spouting French", just a group of students, like you, who are trying to personalize our education in this impersonal environment. It is unfortunate that Mr. Burke et. al. feels that other individuals [minority or not] do not have the right to pursue a common interest.

Tell Ford to forward the food

To the Editor:

This week the World Food Council meeting in Rome is waiting to hear whether President Ford accepts the request of the U.S. Delegation to the Council. The Delegation has asked Mr. Ford to announce now that the U.S. will double its contribution to the starving countries of the world. Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz feels that our aid cannot be doubled. The President so far agrees with him. According the The New York Times (November 12), without this aid from us and other food producing countries, one half billion people, or, one eighth of the world's population, may well die of starvation within the next eight months! We urge everyone to make known his-her concern. If the U.S. doubles its aid, other food producing nations will follow suit. A letter or telegram counts as a representation of a certain amount of people. A telegram or mailagram sent to President Ford in Washington, D.C. would be very effective. Do people in the University really care? Then they should call Western Union and send a message. Tell the President to save millions from starvation.

Sensitivity of UMass men

By MARY DRISCOLL and MEREDITH MANNING

PNS is a collective interest in social change. It is a channel for community groups to feed information from a non-traditional perspective into campus media. It is located at the UMass Veteran's Coalition, 2nd floor Student Union.

The women's liberation movement. Do the words turn you off? Does the image of an amazon who eats college men for breakfast come to mind? Or are you bored already?

The current women's movement has been with us for over a decade and it is still surrounded by confusion, mixed emotions and a large scale refusal - on the part of many men - to listen to its central arguments. Complaints about women's liberation, from men on this campus, are usually the mocking verbal thrusts of those characters for whom raised consciousnesses are liabilities and ignorance is bliss. Yet, it seems to us there exists a miniscule but resounding caucus of UMass men for whom the myths of awareness have developed into conscious recognitions that the movement is a profound response to our history of oppression. It is becoming easier to detect a growing male sensibility to the causes and significances of the woman's movement.

Previously, male attitudes towards feminism have been appraised in two extreme positions: either total chauvinism or banal indifference. It is interesting that certain groups of males seem to be seeking a reliable approach to the issue of women's liberation. Often, one finds, in discussions with some male friends, attempts to redefine their once silent voices in the struggle against sexism.

One could almost generalize that Americans are taught to hate and fear the opposite sex. This is because traditional success in the realm of sexual-romantic interaction found its sole measure of worth in self-centered pursuits; the ego-mania of having someone's crotch under lock and key. This is a human model some men are trying to unlearn in their personal relationships. For these people, as for contemporary feminists, it is a painful identity crisis. As a woman, I now find it important to reevaluate what I expect from certain male attitudes. Men are expanding the limits of male-female communication in search of a direction for genuine institutional rebellion. One becomes concerned about women's rights only when one perceives that few personal advantages are to be gained from accepting traditional female roles. It is time for women to reconsider the assumption that all men are oblivious to their sexism. There is nothing achieved from a failure to understand the overlooked beginnings of male awareness. This onset of men's responses may ultimately add valuable dimension to the women's struggle.

At 7 o'clock p.m. it's a stream flowing into the library.

During the warm season, it's a cacaphony of packaged music and preconceived hoots tightly packing the outside air, encircling the towers with spirals and engulfing the lowrises with the fat of the body bellow.

It's crucified bulletin boards.

It's broken fluorescent tubes beneath JFK alongside fragments of spent molotov cocktails and outstretched pumpkins.

It's the tranquility of the eight o'clock class at breakfast.

It's a mocking tunnel which shouts back at you.

Blinking crimson beacons beating away propellers.

Teams of champs from high schools with sewed-on years, numbers, letters, balls, signatures, towns, from the gyms and fields of applauding families, neighbors and sallow sports pages.

Quickly KO-d newspapers next to the salt shakers absorbing milk and ketchup from the formica tables of the Dining Commons.

Wives from Northampton with ladles and plates wearing white clean suits servicing Bellys.

Big tall holes in the sky flailing shadows.

Walls of bricks, tightly organized bricks kept in line with concrete chains. Rained on bricks, bricks throwing shadows, shadows sleeping on bricks. Walls of bricks reaching out of the valley, rivaling the Holyoke Range.

Piles of little boxes containing desks, chairs, beds and a unique smell and arrangement.

Smells-Hot plates heating up non meal ticket meals, Incense woven into rugs, clothes and curtains, often intermingled with past and present smell of hand rolleds.

Hundreds of shoe feet behind a checkpoint waiting to get through, lines of shoefeet shifting, bobbing up, dropping down waiting for processing at the checkpoint.

Water dropping beneath the towers creating as many ponds as islands, creating a Southwest archipelagos which don't treat the students like the Red Sea treated Moses. Treats them like the Pharoah's troops.

Hundreds of janitors rearranging dirt.

Exalted stereos with turntables in perpetual motion except during power failures.

Life for the living

There has been somewhat of a controversy in the pages of the Collegian these past few weeks, over the issue of abortion. Is abortion "murder"? Or is it the prerogative of an individual to terminate an unwanted condition brought on by accident?

Richard Berman, a dear friend and fine gentleman stated last week in these pages that just because a fetus is not yet born, it doesn't mean that it is inferior life. Richard then went on to oppose abortion on moral grounds. Richard's opposition surprised me, because up to that time the only people who I knew to be against abortion were militant hypocrites, caring more about the unborn than those already living and starving on the earth today. Many a time a car would go speeding by me on the highway with two signs back to back on the fender: "Win in Vietnam" and "Abortion is Murder". Because of this simplistic hypocrisy, I tended to dismiss anti-abortion critics as "dupes" of a backward church, never having to develop any substantial argument to back my pro-abortionist view.

Now Richard calls my bluff, and I must come through. The reason why I am for legalized abortion is twofold. The first is a moral question: People should not have to have unwanted children. It isn't good for the child. It is a terrible burden for the parents. A woman who is brutally raped, should not be forced to bear a child whose very conception is due to an act of violence. To those who would call my arguement a rationalization, I respond that almost any contact involving an individual's sexuality has the potential to create life. Is the man who uses a prophylactic to prevent a pregnancy with a partner, stopping the process that has the potential to create life? How about the woman who decides that she wants "the pill"; is she involving herself in a process that stops "life"? If you take the anti-abortion stand to its most logical extreme you have an absurd "Yes". Almost everything that you do, from the first day that you reach sexual maturity denies life in some way, simply because you have the potential to create life?

There are more important things to spend our energies on. There are people alive on this earth without food, love or hope. These are people who are alive but dying. They're not all in India, some are as close as Appalachia, even Springfield. Use your energies to help the living.

Life is a precious thing. To be brought into this world, when there is someone there to love it. Someone there to help it grow. Agreed, abortion is a terrible thing. It is bad for the individual involved, and in all cases people should use birth control to prevent such a traumatic experience. Still, morally there is no way that abortion is any more immoral than birth control, is it just one step further along the trail.

For Richard Berman to compare abortions to the racial and anti-semitic tirades against the Blacks and Jews in the world argues on the absurd. We aren't talking about races, or any other classification of "living" individuals. I'm talking about the unborn fetus, which the individuals involved do not wish to bring into the world.

If a baby is a mongoloid, or has no chance to live any productive life due to physical defects, it will become a drain on its parents, without having any chance of having any emotional happiness, should it be brought into the world?

If a woman is raped, and impregnated; should she have to bear a "child" that she does not wish to bear? Even if such a process would cause her a great amount of mental agony?

There are many more questions that could be asked, but my wish is not to make this into a verbal sparring match. Even if you are against abortion morally, realistically you cannot be against legal abortion. Everyone has the right to decide what is best for them in the case of abortion.

Whether abortions are legal or illegal they will not stop. They will only become more expensive for the rich and more dangerous for the poor. Hacks will once again drive sports cars to dark alleys where scared women will wait and hope. The legality of abortion should be without question, just as the legality to avoid "forced" abortions should be.

It gets me angry to see people ram down their morality down other's lives. Too often a small active minority has done this. First to limit access of birth control (not realizing that stopping birth control dosen't necessarily stop sexual acts), and then tried to stop abortions when their attempts to limit birth control succeeded.

In all fairness to Richard Berman, he is not that type of person. A vegetarian on moral grounds, Rich doesn't eat meat because animals are sacred life as well. Yes Richard, life is precious, let us put all of our energy into the living. Make sure they have enough to eat. Enough love to survive. Clean air to breath. And a smile on their face. The issue is the quality of life, and not the technicality of "when life begins", for as mentioned earlier that question goes back to the beginning of one's sexuality.

Please don't consider it simplistic to settle on considering something alive when it has the potential to live a normal life in the final stages of pregnancy or upon birth, and not get caught up on the argument of "potential" for life.

It is the only reasonable solution to a painful dilemma.

Hard times America

Fred Astaire twirls again as Bobby Orr scores and Lawrence Spivak asks unanswered news about what's really been bothering everybody anyhow. A lawnmower can be heard through Jim McKay, who stands on a Swiss mountain and describes "the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat" in smiling monotone. Staring to the lone fixture in a strategic living room corner, Henry Andrews watches the lives and deaths of pressed people and thinks about money and things. "What the hell does he know about defeat?" mutters Henry.

Cables pull Frisco cars through the evening fog, and Betsy Franklin returns to her Berkeley apartment after another searching day. She's been out of school for two years and was laid off by Burger King last week, and any paycheck would be reasonable at this point. Her mother thinks she should get married and let a husband support her.

Kansas cattle move slowly through the fields, preparing themselves for slaughter to feed the fed. Tom Grandsler bounces down the path on his trotting Roy Rogers palomino. Like Alan Ladd in his powder white shirt and brown overalls, he surveys the motion of his faltering livelihood.

And in a midnight corridor of Chicago, Bobby Whitlock slithers quietly towards his victim. At fourteen, Bobby was pressed into the service of a street gang, and he's become a master of ghetto trades in the years since. He's learned how to control his hard times.

Chosen preverts preach to a hollow hall on the need for truth and the responsibilities of a super nation. Gerry Ford practices his golf swing and scrambles eggs in golden cookware. And Nelson Rockefeller mourns his losses and gives Christmas presents to the military.

As Santa Claus parades up and down the street asking for donations, the world finds itself slightly less convenient in its fear. There's nothing new about hard times and there's little doubt that American affluence is still a worldwide controlling factor. We're just not used to going down so hard, so fast, so foreign, so familiar, so foreign, so hard.

Paul Warfield catches his Sunday passes, and reruns of Dragnet still find forgotten children drowning in the bathtub. Henry Andrews turns the knob on the set, in search of other days and stops to look and listen as a beautiful woman turns to board a waiting plane and a familiar, immortal face stares sadly and repeats, "Here's looking at you, kid."

Off campus students unrepresented?

To the Editor:

This letter is an appeal to the SGA, SOP, Collegian and all the other so called student organizations to begin and represent the entire student body.

My mistaken belief was that these organizations were supposed to represent all students, not just those residing in dormitories. There are approximately 23,000 students at U.Mass. and only 11,000 of them live in dorms. This leaves over half the student body that have nothing to do with dorms or the dorm way of life. Yet to read the Collegian or listen to these so called student organizations' demands, one would be inclined to think everyone attending U.Mass lived in a dorm.

The present issue of forced dormitory living is an excellent example of biased representation by these student organizations. The administration has been forced to give up this policy at least partly because of pressure exerted by the SGA, SOP and SRB. Unfortunately the ending of this dormitory requirement will undoubtedly raise rents in the area. So far, though, these organizations have paid only lip service to the question of rent control, thereby neglecting over half the student body. The SRB is a case in point. Their views as stated in the Collegian included the issue of rent control, but none of the posters plastered about campus even mentioned this issue when appealing for a large crowd to march on Whitmore. A group can say anything but the proof of its commitment is in its actions.

This whole issue is being further distorted by the one sided reporting of the Collegian. There have been numerous articles and opinions expressed in favor of the abolition of the dormitory requirement. The subject of rent control is barely mentioned if at all in any of these articles and opinions.

The news analysis that appeared on November 21 of the blanket dorm fee proposed by Whitmore is a typical example of the dorm mentality of the Collegian.

In short the article states that adding $340 a year to off-campus students' fees to subsidize the dorms is all-right. Of course the off-campus students will object, but you can't have everything. This is incredible, nowhere was there a mention of the impact this would have on off-campus students, and equating a $340 dorm fee to the athletic fee is absurd. Does this mean that dorm students will have to subsidize North Village, since it is going broke? Your reporter's ready acceptance of this innane and unjust plan shows the Collegian only considers issues from a dormitory point of view.

In conclusion, I am not advocating that these organizations recommend that students be forced to live in dorms or abandon the dorm students with their many just complaints. I am only saying that these organizations stress the dorm students way of life and point of view to the exclusion of over half the student body. It is time these organizations realized this fact and began speaking for all students, dorm and off-campus.

Food Services speaks

T~~o the Editor~~:

Any food service establishment, whether a snack bar, supermarket, restaurant, or dining commons, has many costs besides food. Buildings must be paid for and maintained. Employees must be paid. Accounting, printing, administration - all generate costs which are paid by the customer. At University Food Services, all the expenses of operating the dining commons are paid by the fees paid by meal ticket holders.

One guideline for efficiency of a food serving establishment is that its food cost is approximately 38 per cent of all expenses.

The amount of money contributed for each meal a student fasted was $0.75. This is our average food cost per meal served. It is derived by taking the total food expense for a period and dividing by the total number of meals served. It is only an average and does not recognize the different costs attributable to a breakfast, a lunch, and a dinner. Cash prices do recognize this difference, hence the different rates for each meal. Using the cash prices and the 38 per cent food cost, the 3 meal contribution to OXFAM would be about $2.19. Three stubs represented a contribution of $2.25. When students took part in the fast, a full and fair value for their stubs was given to aid the starving people of the world.

Some seven thousand students did not take part in the fast. They, too, fund the boarding halls, and their money cannot be reallocated because others want to contribute to a cause. Everyone on board plan pays for all the expenses of the department. The fast reduced only one category of expense for a relatively small group of students. For those who took part, full value of their reduction in food expense was contributed to OXFAM.

Sincerely yours,
Arthur H. Warren
Acting Director of Food Services

S.P.O.N.G.E. all wet

To the Editor:

After reading the letter from SPONGE in Monday's Collegian, I had to sit down and think of what could possibly be done with people suffering from such a total lack of awareness... and I came up with nothing save writing this letter.

The blatant absurdity of their contention that blacks are getting everything staggers the imagination. A mere review of basic statistics revealing the increasing discrepancy between black and white median income and the disproportionate ratio of black to white unemployment is testimony that whites are continuing, if not strengthening their superior economic position.

If the authors of the letter believe that busing is somehow "giving" the blacks something, perhaps they should remember that equality of opportunity is a right not a privilege, and that a correction of injustice is not a concession to be granted but a responsibility to be accepted. SPONGE, why won't you open your eyes to the very real oppressive force of institutional and personal racism that is, and has been operating against the black people for hundreds of years in this country? And while you're at it, why don't you open your hearts to some human understanding, the best cure for paranoia and bigotry that I know.

Sincerely,
Betty Londergan

Dorm tax unfair to all

To the Editor:

In the Daily Collegian of 11-25-74 Catherine Sherlock wrote that those who live off campus should not have to pay the extra $170 fee for the upkeep of dorms. As far as this goes, it is true.

But to this I would like to add that I see no reason that those who wish to live on campus should be penalized for doing so. Just as those who fought to receive their right to live where they choose regardless of age had a good reason for doing so, so too do those who desire to live on campus. Those who live off campus should not have to pay for the upkeep of something they do not utilize. Nor should those living on campus be penalized because those under 21 chose to fight for a right that should have been theirs long ago.

There must be a more fair way of collecting the money they need to keep the dorms. Perhaps some of the money collected under other worthless fees — such as the Athletic Fee [which only a limited number of students utilize] could be channeled into this.

"Let dorm living be optional" but collect the money for the upkeep of dorms in a fair way, rather than shafting a section of the student body. We must unite and fight this rather than divide and let them conquer a small faction of the student body.

Telephone Company promises to make cheating difficult

"SHOPLIFTERS WILL BE PROSECUTED" is a familiar warning posted in clothing, department and grocery stores in an effort to curb thefts.

New England Telephone wants to curb toll call fraud — another kind of stealing.

The company will seek prosecution of anyone caught billing calls to an unknowing third party or using an unauthorized credit card.

In Massachusetts, a convicted toll cheater can be imprisoned for up to 30 days or fined up to $100 — or both.

It is also illegal to publish the number or code of an existing, cancelled, revoked, expired or non-existent credit card or coding system which is employed in the issuance of such credit cards.

If convicted of publishing such credit card information, a person could face a $2,000 fine, imprisonment up to 12 months, or both.

"We don't want to have anyone prosecuted," local telephone manager Lorraine Maynard said, "but fradulent billing is stealing. People should understand that when they make fraudulent calls that they could be jeopardizing their career or their future. If we closed our eyes and did nothing, all telephone users would have to shoulder the added cost caused by these abusers.

"Most of these calls are made from coin telephones. In some locations we have been forced to remove all coin telephones because of high revenue losses. This is not only an inconvenience for many people, but our other customers have to absorb the losses."

This summer the telephone company introduced a new method of detecting fraudulent use of credit cards. The operator has immediate access to computerized information to check credit card numbers.

This new method -- along with the electronic detecting equipment already in use -- promises to make toll cheating difficult.

"We have a unified program of security and centralized ticket investigation of toll fraud and we will prosecute offenders, "Miss Maynard said

Nicola Geiger seeks support for So. Korean resistance movement

By MARY DRISCOLL
Progressive News Service

Nicola Geiger is a Buddist, a Quaker, a former actress, a world traveler, a philosopher. Nicola Geiger, on a two month speaking tour across the U.S., works full time for the American Friends Service Committee seeking support for the South Korean resistance movement - a faction of students, clergy, workers, and people of South Korea silenced in their opposition to the repressive rule of U.S. supported President Park Chung Hee.

She says her mission as an attempt to awaken American consciousness to the plight of numerous religious and intellectual South Korean leaders, incarcerated and tortured for opinion and dissidence counter to the skillfully manipulative Park dictatorship.

She has been living in Japan for seven years: one year at the Friendship Center in Hiroshima and five as director of the East Asia Center of Friends World college there. Her deep involvement with Korea stems from friendships with many members of the South Korean resistance movement.

From her time spent in South Korea comes her experience to express the history of the freedom-loving passion of Korean people and culture. In her documented talk, Ms. Geiger outlined the sequences of Japanese and American colonialization of Korea. She explained how Korea was ruled by tyrannical dynasties before the Japanese occupation which lasted from the end of the Russian-Japanese war in 1905, until the United States and the Soviet Union divided Korea at the end of World War II.

Ms. Geiger pointed out how the

NICOLA GEIGER

United States established a so-called democracy controlled by Syngman Rhee as the first elected president of South Korea - fashioning a constitution much like America's own. Yet, the beginnings of political corruption came with Rhee and the fabrication of "communist agression" from the North. This ploy was used by Rhee, his successors Yun Po Sun, and Park as excuses to affect military rule and purge their political opponents.

In 1960, Park, then a Major General, staged a coup d'etat bringing the country under his rule. Deceitfull to the hopes of the people that a democracy could prevail in South Korea, Park has shown himself to be a ruthless despot, gradually inflicting his power to declare "states of emergency". Park has amended the constitution abolishing the limits on his presidential stay in office. He has made it illegal for workers to go on strike, for students to gather in public or miss classes at the Universities, or for any citizen to speak against the constitution. He has mobilized the Korean CIA as his tactical police force to round up dissidents and has used it to kidnap a political contender, Kim Dae Jun. Ms. Geiger, in an interview, discussed speculations about the role of the South Korean CIA in the assassination of Park's wife, several months ago.

Ms. Geiger showed slides of the Korean country side, cities, industrial areas, and poor and starving Koreans forced to work in the foreign owned factories of Seoul. It is important, she said, to understand the economics of the country. Because South Korea provides a tremendous resource of cheap labor, — the agarian oriented Korean people, dislocated by war and Japanese and American industrialization, - the country is infested and controlled financially by opportunistic businesses, the allies of President Park. Ms. Geiger showed pictures of Korean cities, known to be the worst polluted in the world.

Ms. Geiger urged the need for American support of the political prisoners held in Park's jails and recognition of the deplorable state of government and living conditions in South Korea. She is working especially to help free a national poet, Kim Chi Ha, arrested and sentenced to fifteen years for criticizing Park's method of democracy.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 26 — Born today, you are a demanding person whose attitude is such that those who don't know you well are inclined to think you extremely difficult to work for or with. Somewhat prone to asking of others the same approaches and beliefs as your own — that is, if they expect to work by your side or with your approval — you may at times run into great opposition.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec. 21) — Make no effort to hide your feelings from members of your own family today. Now is an excellent time to let others know your objections.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Friend and foe alike must be made to understand that under no circumstances can you act against the principles of a lifetime.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The best course of action when in doubt as to what to do is no course at all. In other words, make no move until you are sure of your direction.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Allow time to solve your present problem, but you can get where you're going faster if you give time a hand.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — There is much about a new situation which may make you feel uneasy. Such feelings are only temporary, however; don't let them get you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — There are rewards in store for the Taurus who can play a new part as if he were experienced in the role. Attend to details.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A day when you may find your memory playing tricks on you. Be sure you know what you are actually seeing before you comment upon it.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A new friend may not have as much of a sentimental nature to offer as an old one — but there is much to be gained in his or her company at this time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — So long as you and your associates are happy with the present circumstances surrounding a new project, all should go well. Don't rock the boat.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Be sure to consult with all concerned when it comes to making decisions regarding a new endeavor. Otherwise you may make false promises in another's name.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Instinct is as valuable as knowledge gained from books and experience as you go about the business of deciding a basic issue today.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — It is the Scorpio with high standards of behavior and the courage of his own convictions that stands the best chance of gain by evening. Refuse to falter.

Women's conference planned for January

The UMass Women's Conference is being planned for Tuesday January 21-Saturday, January 26 at the Campus Center. The conference is for staff, faculty, students, and wives to examine issues that affect women in this University.

The conference will meet from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily. A detailed schedule of workshops will be published later. As well as workshops there will be coffeehouses, poetry readings, films, and art exhibits.

The first four days of the conference will be a sharing of knowledge and discussion of ideas. Saturday will be focused on plaaning for action on these issues.

The conference hopes to bring together older women coming back to work or school, unorganized clerical and university staff, undergraduates, faculty women and faculty wives, as well as present women's groups.

Housing can be arranged for the length of the conference. Women who know they will be needing housing should contact Margie Posner at 546-4554. Day care will be available. It is possible that credit will be awarded for a certain number of workshop hours.

Proposals for 1, 2 or 3 hour presentations are not being solicited. If anyone is interested in presenting a workshop contact the following people for each of these conference issues: Health Issues-Althea Smith 5-0883, Employment Issues-Sally Freeman 5-0333, Education Issues-Jean Leppaluoto 5-2554, Suuvival Issues-Jo-Leslie Hirsch 549-0912, Communication Issues-Barbara Melrose 5-2403, Creativity Issues-Merrill Pellows 5-0883, Alternatives and...-Joan Sweeney 5-0883.

Ranger reigning rook

NEW YORK [UPI] — First baseman Mike Hargrove, an oil driller a year ago and not even on the Texas Rangers' Spring training roster last April, was named the American League's Rookie of the Year for 1974 Monday in a runaway vote by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

The honor gave Texas two of the three main BBWA Awards for the season. Last week, Outfielder Jeff Burroughs was selected as the AL's Most Valuable Player.

The 23-year-old Hargrove of Perrytown, the Rangers' first native Texan on the roster, received 16½ first place ballots from the 24-man voting committee. Shortsop Bucky Dent of the Chicago White Sox was a distant second with three votes. George Brett, a Kansas City Royals third baseman, drew two votes for third place, shortstop Rick Burleson of the Boston Red Sox finished fourth with 1½ and Hargrove's teammate, catcher Jim Sundberg collected the other first place vote.

Hargrove drove in 66 runs and led Texas with a .323 batting average after hitting .351 with Gastonia of the Western Carolina League in 1973, his second season of pro ball.

"I was really excited when I learned of the award this morning," Hargrove said. "At first it was a little hard to believe...you never think it's going to happen to you. Gee whiz, last year I was working in the oil fields in the Texas panhandle, freezing to death and now here I am in Dallas playing professional baseball and really enjoying life."

Hargrove said he had no specific goals in 1974, "Except to hit about .300 and play well defensively."

Hargrove's .323 was second in the A.L. to the .364 league leading average of Minnesota's Rod Carew. Burroughs batted .301 as Texas finished runnerup to the World Champion Oakland A's in the American League West.

"I think the award tells you that we have a pretty good ball club," beamed Hargrove. "Whenever you get an award like this, it's more of a team award. With Jeff hitting in front of me and getting all those RBI's, it made my job a whole lot easier."

"You've got to be thankful you played for a good team because that's what made it possible."

The honor was actually the fourth for the Rangers this season. Ferguson Jenkins earned UPI's major league comeback of the year award and skipper Billy Martin was the UPI manager of the year in the American League.

Dent was closely scrutinized by the BBWA after he batted .270 for the White Sox. Brett hit .282 for the Royals, Burleson .284 with the Red Sox and Sundberg .247 at Texas.

Hargrove's major league debut was an instant success. He batted .371 through his first 59 games.

'Catfish' in court

NEW YORK [UPI] — Can a Major League baseball contract be declared in default?

Jim "Catfish" Hunter and Oakland A's owner Charles O. Finley will argue that question Tuesday before the American Arbitration Association, with the Cy Young award winner claiming Finley failed to fulfill his $100,000 contract for the 1974 season, and Finley arguing that the contract is not in default.

Both Hunter and Finley were to be present at the hearing, but their arguments would be made by Marvin Miller, Executive Director of the Major League Players' Association for Hunter, and by John Gaherin, representing the 24 major league club owners.

Hunter claims Finley's default in effect makes Hunter a free agent, and if Peter Seitz, chairman of the arbitration panel, finds for Hunter, an entire new era would be at hand for organized baseball.

"This is the first time," Gaherin said Monday, "That there is an allegation of contract default. It is the most important hearing on contracts that baseball has had to face."

There have been many challenges to the basic major league contract, notably the Curt Flood case of several years ago, but Gaherin feels that this charge of Hunter's is unique, dealing as it does with the contract payment structure.

GARY MIKA tries to grab a pass over BC's captain Ken Ladd in last Saturday's farce at Alumni stadium.

Merwomen down U.Neb.

The UMass Women's Swim Team downed the University of Nebraska Women's Swim Team on Friday afternoon by a score of 64-49 in a telephone meet.

In a telephone meet, both teams swim in previously arranged events in their own pools. So, while UMass swam here in Amherst, Nebraska was swimming in Lincoln. After the meet, coach Pat Griffin of UMass called coach Pat Sullivan of Nebraska to exchange results and to see who won.

If that doesn't sound strange enough, Mary Ellen Dash, UMass standout on exchange this semester at the University of Alabama, also swam in Alabama and phoned in her times to coach Pat Griffin.

Individual standouts for UMass were Penny Noyes with first place swims in the 50 free and backstroke, 100 free, and 400 free relay, Cindy Whiting with firsts in the 200 freestyle and 400 free relay, Mary Ellen Dash with firsts in the 100 butterfly and 200 individual medley, and Carol Griffiths with a first in the 400 freestyle.

Second place winners for UMass included Diane Perryin the 50 breaststroke, Roxanne Balducci in the 100 Backstroke, Reenie Groden in the 50 freestyle, and Roxanne Lacoste in the 400 freestyle.

The women's team will host University of New Hampshire, live and in the flesh on December 4 at 5:30 p.m. in the North Pool.

Bowlers roll along

The UMass Intercollegiate Bowling Team competed in the eleventh annual Pioneer Valley tournament this past Saturday. In the team event the women's team led by Karen James (518) and Nancy Heglin (507) captured first place. The men's team led by Dave Dimmick (632) and Barry Witt (584) finished in a tie for second place behind a very strong performance by Cornell.

In the league competition the women's team easily outdistanced Central Conn. State by a 20 to 4 margin. The men's team put on its finest performance in many a year by never giving up and defeating a strong Lowell Tech. team by a 17 to 7 margin. Going into this tournament the men's team was in first place in the league.

Members of the women's team were: Nancy Heglin, Sue Lindstrom, Barb Holt, Cyndy Adams, Karen James and Ilene Dishler. Members of the men's team were: Paul Doherty, Barry Witt, Bill Fisher, Brian Elsden, Steve Mann and Dave Dimmick.

Ready or not: League V-ball

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Is the public ready for a volleyball league?

Ready or not, one has been formed — the five-team Winston Volleyball League — and it's scheduled to open Jan. 17.

Ducan McFarland, the MVP in last year's NCAA Volleyball Championships, will play for the San. Diego team against Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, Anaheim and Santa Monica-Long Beach.

"I don't know if the public will accept us," said McFarland, 24, "But if they give us a chance I know they'll really like the sport."

Perhaps. But whatever happens, the former San Diego State athlete noted, the league will be a shot in the arm to volleyball in the United States. A badly needed shot in the arm, he said pointedly.

The players in the Winston League will maintain their amateur status and thus the new venture has the blessing of the U.S. Volleyball Association. America's athletes still can compete in the Olympics.

"Most of the guys will get about $200 a month," McFarland said. "It's not a lot of money but, considering what we've got in the past, it's a pretty big step forward.

"I think the prevailing feeling is one of disillusionment with the USVBA. We don't feel it's done much for the athletes. We think it should go out and try harder to raise money for our volleyball program.

"Our players have to have time to practice if we're going to compete at the same level with some of the other countries."

McFarland, who grew up in Manhattan Beach, Calif., was a member of the 1972 U. S. Olympic Volleyball Team which failed to qualify for Munich.

How about America's volleyball chances of qualifying for the '76 games at Montreal?

"If we can be subsidized enough," McFarland replied, "I think we have a good chance. It's a simple matter of getting our athletes together long enough."

The 6-1, 180-pounder helped San Diego State beat Long Beach State in the NCAA finals last year.

Look on the bright side

All right. So B.C. beat up the UMies 70-8 last Saturday. Sure, the Minutemen looked disorganized. O.K., the team was outclassed. But there are two sides to every story (or debacle, as the case may be) and the one just stated is the pessimistic side. The season, however, has been rough this year for the Minutemen and too much pessimism has already been expounded, so let's look at a few points of the B.C. game with optimism:

—The B.C. offense might have worn out their cleats in gaining a game total of 477 yards and hence, will have to play Holy Cross in their stocking feet this week.

—UMass scored more two point conversions than B.C.

—No Minuteman will lose sleep over any particular play, since no particular play would have changed the outcome of the game.

—B.C. couldn't have won without UMie help (Massachusetts lost five fumbles and was intercepted three times for a total of eight giveaways).

—UMass held B.C. to only two thirds of their first half scoring output in the second half (only 28 points as opposed to 42 points), while themselves scoring infinitely more points in the second half (8) than they did in the first (0).

The UMass defense was consistent; the first six times B.C. had the ball, they scored.

Since half the fans were blitzed after B.C.'s third TD, the game will be difficult to remember (if there's anyone that wants to).

—Since there are no classes the day after the game, the fan can sleep off his stupor.

—The basketball season starts this weekend.

—The game was at Alumni Stadium, so the Minutemen didn't have to suffer through a long bus ride home.

—The UMass band was excellent.

—Half the spectators were still in the stadium after the start of the fourth quarter (the drunk half).

—As far as the final outcome of the game was concerned, UMass finished second and B.C. finished second to last.

—The hot dogs weren't bad, either.

—B.C.'s opening game next year is against Notre Dame and the Eagles still won't have extricated their butts from the turf by the time they face the Minutemen.

—UMass played so poorly that there's nowhere to go but up.

—The season is over and no one can bring it back.

—Thanksgiving is coming soon; maybe your favorite high school team will be on the right side of a massacre.

—All films of the game will self-destruct in four quarters.

—It gives meathead reporters something to write about.

UMass soccer: Credit is due

By BILL DOYLE
Sports Staff

Forward Tom Coburn, halfback Jim Vollinger, and fullback Dean Lungu of the UMass soccer team were named to the All Yankee Conference Soccer Team, coach Al Rufe announced.

This is the second straight year that Coburn has been selected for the all star team.

Also, Rufe announced that Coburn and Vollinger were elected team most valuable players by the squad. Coburn, a senior from Chicopee, led the team in scoring for the third straight year with 9 goals and 7 assists. He set new school records for goals scored in a career (37) as well as points tallied in a career (50).

Vollinger, a senior from Northampton, was co-captain of the team along with Carl Vercollone.

Bill Belcher, a junior from Lexington, was elected as the most improved player.

The team elected Dan Ouellette, a junior from Ludlow, and Gary McKenna, a junior from Northampton, as team co-captains for the 1975 season.

Rufe expressed pleasure with all the selections.

The booters, who finished this season with a record of 8-3-1 for the most successful season in the 44-year history of the sport at UMass, will lose 11 seniors and possibly their coach.

Coburn, Vollinger, Lungu, Vercollone, Kenny Banda, Tony King, Steve Sormanti, Alan Long, Bill MacDonald, Mohammad Othman, and Paul Peloquin are the graduating seniors.

Coach Rufe, who doubles as soccer coach along with his position as financial manager, may not be back next season as soccer coach.

Someone that can devote his full time to the coaching position may be sought after.

Vercollone, who missed the first six games of the season due to a shoulder separation, established a career record for most saves by a goalie (258).

Bob McChesney was second to Coburn in scoring with 3 goals and 5 assists. Mohammed Othman had 3 goals and 4 assists, Tony King had 5 goals and Bill Belcher had 4 goals.

It was a season of many memories: The debacle against Keene State, the whipping of WPI, BU, and UNH, the goals scored by Lungu and Parsons into their own net, the fine but vain performance against UConn, the slip in Vermont, and the snub by the tournament selection committee. Now the season is over and with 11 seniors graduating and the possible loss of the coach, next year's team appears that it will have very different memories.

C's try to mend wounds

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Celtics will be coping and recovering when they take the home court Wednesday night against the Seattle Supersonics.

Chief Coper will be captain John Havlicek who will adjust his shot and his body positioning to overcome a painful right knee.

Havlicek, who fell on the knee last Friday night against the Phoenix Suns' had x-rays taken Monday. The results were inconclusive, showing the 13-year veteran most likely has calcium deposits and spurs on and around the knee.

"There's a very remote possibility of torn cartilege but it is a possibility," said Team Trainer Frank Challent after conferring with club physician, Dr. Robert Leach. "John says he has no trouble running on the knee but the injury does affect his shooting."

Havlicek, who practiced Monday, was told not to work out prior to the Sonics game.

Improved shooting will be center Dave Cowens' goal in Wednesday's game. Cowens will be playing in his third game since coming off a broken right foot. Cowens has made six of 14 field goal attempts since rejoining the team.

Forward Don Nelson, nursing a muscle spasm under his left shoulder blade, also is expected to play as is flu-bugged Paul Silas.

Coach Tom Heinsohn, who stayed away from practice Monday to keep from spreading germs to his players, is expected to fend off his month-long bout with the flu to direct from the bench.

Wrestlers open season

BU flexes muscles

It won't be the same thing that the Minutemen wrestlers are used to. It won't be easy and it won't be short. It will, however, be competitive. VERY competitive.

"IT" is the first wrestling match of the season and "it" takes place tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The UMass wrestling team opens defense of its New England Championship by hosting last year's second place team — Boston University.

The Terriers come to Amherst highlighting one of the most talented and experienced group of lightweights in New England collegiate wrestling. In the first five weights they have two New England Champs (back to back at 142 and 150, no less), two runners-up at 126 and 134, and the third placer at 118.

In the same classes UMass can only come up with one champ. Thank Dan Gable, though, that the champ in question is team captain Russell Chateauneuf. Chateauneuf is twice New England Champ at 134 pounds and a top fifteen finisher in the 1974 NCAA's. He steps out on the mat tonight against the man he bested in an overtime referee's decision to win last year's title. Sev Popolizio is a quick and smooth sophomore that wrestled the New England's with a hernia. Some people claim that Chateauneuf's victory was somewhat tainted by that hernia. Chateauneuf is at a weight that he seldom sees before the New Englands in order to prove that he deserves the title.

At 118 BU's Jeff Lambert will wrestle UMass' Peter Sachon in a battle that will have to be no mistakes for both grapplers. Greg Tallon. sophomore from Glens Falls, New York, will wrestle Mat Thomas of Boston U. The 142 pound bout features BU's Guy Bercier against Minuteman frosh Tim Fallon. Another freshman for UMass will be Kevin Griffin at 150 who drew the Terrier's best in two time Champ Tom Kryzak.

Steve Jabaut has moved up to 158 to fill in for ailing Cliff Blom and might meet Gil Hoy or Cliff Whelan from BU. Talented Tom Smith of UMass might draw one of BU's few freshmen at 167 and this bout could prove to be Waterloo for both teams. Another NEUWA Champ for BU is at 177 and this same Mark Jones will wrestle UMass' Bob Spaulding. The 190 pound bout sees Tom O'Connell for the Minutemen against Mark Lindstrom for the Terriers.

And at Heavyweight the Minutemen will send Steve Swartz against George Casagne. New England Champ Dennis Fenton is nursing football injuries received courtesy of BC's Al Krevis.

Harriers go out in style

Wilson, the fourth UMass finisher, noted that the results were a little frustrating because only thirty-two points separated Providence College, the fifth-place team, and UMass. "It was so close that two or three of us could have made the difference," commented Wilson, also in his last race wearing the maroon UMass uniform.

Nick Rose, an Englishman who placed second behind Steve Prefontaine in 1973, lowered the course record to 29:22. The long-haired Rose opened an early lead on Washington State's John Ngeno and widened the margin to 100 yards at the four-mile mark.

Cold and windy weather prevailed until thirty minutes before racetime, when the sun broke through the clouds and warmed the multitude of excited fans.

The layout enabled several thousand fans to witness most of the contest, in which more than 250 harriers competed. Eighty colleges were represented at the meet, which had been threatened by two previous days of rain. The rain did cause some muddiness on the course, and the relatively slower times were due to the slippery footing.

Providence was the top eastern team to finish, totalling 225 points, while the Minutemen runners compiled 257 points. Although the Friars had some fifth man trouble, Mike O'Shea led the way by capturing seventh place. O'Shea commented, "I was just happy to be in the top ten." The New England champion said that the dipping hills reminded him of Ireland, his birthplace, and obviously it was just like home for the PC sophomore.

Stetson Arnold, the third Friar runner across the finish line, referred to the huge crowd saying, "It was a great spectator race." "The crowd was everywhere," continued Arnold, who placed fifty-sixth.

The Friars had a good day, much better than last Monday, when they placed second in the IC4A's to UMass.

Coaches and runners agreed that the top four teams were untouchable. After Oregon, Western Kentucky, aided by a large cheering section, finished second. Texas - El Paso was third, and Washington State captured fourth, 81 points ahead of Providence.

Rounding out the top ten were Eastern Michigan (229), Georgetown (243), UMass, Wisconsin (258), Penn State (279), finishing tenth for the second consecutive year.

Skaters duel Hawks

By GLENN POSTER
Sports Staff

Looking to rebound from a tough defeat at the hands of Lowell Tech last Saturday night, the UMass hockey team travels to Manchester, New Hampshire tonight to take on the Hawks of St. Anselm's.

The ranks of the Minutemen are still depleted with the absence of the White brothers because of a death in the family. Coach Jack Canniff will have two players from the JV's dressing to take the places of Billy and Bob. Bill Flynn, a winger from South Boston and Steve Sikalis, a center from Framingham both saw spot duty Saturday and will be ready if needed.

This will be the first regular season game for St. Anselm's. The Hawks scrimmaged four teams and didn't win any encounter. They managed to tie Salem St. 5-5, but fell at the hands of New Hampshire, Providence, and BU.

St. A's strength is in goal with senior co-captain Tom Gavin. This is one area where the Hawks will have an advantage over the Minutemen as far as experience is concerned. Coach Caniff hasn't named his goalie yet. Dana Redmond went the distance against Lowell Tech, so the only netminder who hasn't had any ice time thus far is John Riley. Riley, a sophmore from Lexington who teamed with Redmond on the JV's last year, dressed as the back-up goalie on Saturday.

The Hawks have two excellent goal scorers up front. Mike Gavin, a senior, made the Boston Globe All-America team last season. (Gavin is a brother of the goalie and though they are both seniors, they're not twins.) Their other big forward is Natick's Jim Morris. Also a senior, Morris is a good skater with excellent speed. Both Gavin and Morris have been the two leading scorers on the team for the past three years.

Steve Daigle is the number one defenseman for the Hawks. He is an offensive defenseman who likes to carry the puck. Daigle will be paired with St. Anselm's top recruit for this year, Steve Tryder a freshman from Charlestown.

ICE CHIPS — The last time the two teams met, UMass won 7-2 in the opening round of the Merrimack Tournament a year ago with all the Minutemen goals coming in the second period...UMass holds a 4-1 edge in the all-time series between the two schools...St. Anselm's was hoping to have its new rink ready for the game, but opening has been delayed until January, so the battle will take place at the ancient JFK Colisseum. The last time a UMass squad played there was three years ago when the players had to change in the men's room.

BC vs. UMass: Some gloomy facts to increase the pain

By STEVE SARACENO
Sports Staff

Fullback Keith Barnette of Boston College entered Saturday's game as the nation's leading scorer. He didn't hurt his cause any against UMass, scoring three touchdowns on runs of one, four, and three yards.

Considering the final total of 70 points for BC, one would think he might have scored more. However, Barnette didn't carry at all in the second half and ended up with only 57 yards.

Barnette held the scoring lead for awhile early this year, then fell behind, but a few weeks ago emerged back on top. And he wants to stay there.

"Oh, I want that badly", says the articulate line-buster of the scoring title, "but, it's got to come natural. What I mean is, it has to benefit both myself and the team. If I get a chance in near the goal and score, that's great, but if somebody else scores instead, that's O.K. too."

Barnette's accomplishments went largely unnoticed until Mike Esposito was injured. He's not as much a ground-munching back as Espo, but as his 122 seasonal points will attest, he's unrivaled at bringing the ball to pay-dirt.

Earl Strong, his backfield cohort, stole some of the limelight away from him Saturday with 83 yards and a pair of TD's on only 12 carries. "Earl and I flip-flop", "Earl blocks for me and I block for him. He's been a great help."

There was some talk that B.C. coach Joe Yukica had his men run up the score, but there really was no motive for it. The bowls passed BC by, so Yukica couldn't have been trying to impress anyone.

"You can't prepare for a game one way and then change halfway through," said Yukica of his second half policy of playing his starters for half the third quarter--and passing often even with a 42 point lead.

"We were going to play the first string for the opening seven minutes of third quarter regardless of the score. As for the passes--we were completing them! If we hadn't, it might have been a different story. But, if they give us the pass, we have to take it--even if it looks bad."

The way the team is playing now, would the coach like that Texas game back? "Texas...and a few of those other teams we lost to earlier in the season."

Though BC has scored 115 points in the past two weeks, Yukica singled out his defense as the ones responsible for their recent success.

"Those are the guys who've been doing the big job. That's the difference from the start of this year".

UMass coach Dick MacPherson didn't really think the Eagles were trying to put it to his team, but he did say with a wink, "I kinda wished they'd worked on their punting a little more in those fourth down situations."

As for the debilitated status of the Minutemen (which must have accounted for some of that huge deficit) the coach sighed, "The high number of injuries is nothing new. Just the same as what we've been going through all year.

"The defense never had a chance," he said, alluding to the fumble of the opening kickoff and subsequent errors that repeatedly gave BC the ball in UMass territory.

And whenever a BC crunching such as Saturday's occurs there's the query: "Should BC put New England teams on an otherwise national schedule?"

"Yes, I think so," reasons the coach. "UMass and Holy Cross (the Eagles' lunch next Saturday) are natural rivals for BC. They (BC) should be our last game, just as they should be Holy Cross' last game".

Finally, he commented on a less-than-fulfilling season: "It's been a pleasure, anyways. The kids have done what I've asked them to do, and I only wished they could have had more success. They deserved it."

- - - - - - - - - -

LATE HITS -- Several writers and fans called BC the hardest hitting team they had ever seen. The belting of Bill Coleman by Roger Reddick on the opening kick and the upending of Bob Zawada on UMass' next kick return (following the touchdown resulting from Coleman's fumble) served to bolster their belief....

The halftime skit involving a villian tying a damsel to train tracks ranked second in wierdness only to the final score...BC's next opponent after Holy Cross is Notre Dame--no, not a bowl game, but as next year's opener...

Senior QB Fred Kelliher, lost for the year via a shoulder separation way back in Game 1, has been redshirted and thus will be back in '75...

That little crowd pleaser by the cheerleaders wherin they take turns somersaulting over an ever-growing line of hunched-up bodies finally ended up with someone not making it and (much to this writer's content) getting nailed...Heh, heh...

Full program review possible

School of Ed funds probed

By DONNA FUSCO
AND BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporters

The University Administration yesterday announced a full scale investigation of allegations of possible misuse of funds at the UMass School of Education.

In addition, the fund dispute is understood to have resulted in a complete review of School of Education programs by top administrators in the school.

The announcement came in the wake of newspaper disclosures that Robert Suzuki, School of Ed associate dean in charge of administration, has retained counsel in the funding dispute and that his home has been vandalized.

Announcement of the investigation came from Associate Provost David C. Bischoff in Whitmore Hall, and School of Education Acting Dean Earl Seidman. Neither gave any indication of the amount or kind of funds involved, except to say they were probably not state funds.

Seidman said some information gathered in the probe will be made public "within a few days."

We're going to call in outside people if we need them," Bischoff said, adding, "The University is concerned about the allegations and so is the School of Education...but we shouldn't overreact."

Seidman said a review of the situation is underway with the cooperation of Whitmore. Seidman works for Bischoff.

"A review is underway," Seidman said in a tersely written statement delivered to a Collegian reporter. "There have been questions of irregularities in the management of external funds. I'm conducting a review of the situation in full cooperation with the Provost's office."

The funding dispute has apparently been boiling under the surface at the School of Ed for several weeks, according to sources consulted there yesterday. But it did not become public until a story was published in yesterday's Daily Hampshire Gazette, a Northampton afternoon daily.

The Gazette reported School of Education Associate Dean, Robert Suzuki, had made allegations charging misuse of School of Ed funds.

Peter Gluckler, University News Bureau spokesman, outlined the events leading up to the investigation:

Two weeks ago, Dean Seidman acting director of the School of Ed reported to Dave Bischoff that Robert Suzuki had raised questions about the possible misuse of funds. Suzuki coordinates the administration of funds in the School.

The material was then submitted through campus administration attorney Sidney B. Meyers to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. Bromery sent it down to Vice-Chancellor Robert Gluckstern Friday, Gluckler said.

At Bischoff's request, Seidman compiled the information. Yesterday, Bromery appointed Seidman to continue the investigation, Gluckler added.

Suzuki's information was in the form of a series of questions about funding policy, making specific reference to individuals he alleged had misused School of Ed grant money, according to sources at the School.

It is understood that five questions were submitted by Suzuki to Seidman, the sources said. One source who may be personally involved, said the allegations were in the form of questions so as to make legal action against Suzuki by those named difficult.

Suzuki has planned a suit against the University because of salary inequities in the School, according to another source. But his lawyer, Attorney David Burres of Amherst refused to comment on any aspect of the case yesterday.

The Gazette also reported that "vandalism" had occurred at the home of Suzuki last Tuesday afternoon. Police Chief Donald N. Maia refused to comment on the vandalism. Although Allen H. Torrey, Town Manager, confirmed

Physical Plant prepares itself for first snowfall of winter

By BOB PAQUETTE
Staff Reporter

The UMass campus got its first look at snow for this winter Monday night. And soon, the white stuff will be falling a lot more regularly and the problem of clearing it away will start all over again.

Kenton H. Billings, Head of Grounds and Services at the Physical Plant Dept., is one of the first to receive warning that a storm is on the way. The warning could be placed on his desk at work, or he could get a phone call during the night. When that happens, he and other members of the department, and the plowers must get down to the campus to begin the process of clearing the snow away.

Monday night, for example, Billings received a phone call at his home, despite the fact that all the area received was a light dusting. However, since there was some rain mixed in with the snow, Billings ordered the roads around the campus sanded; and the trucks were out that night at 12 o'clock.

UMass has twelve pieces of equipment, consisting of ten trucks and 2 front-end loaders. There is a driver and an alternate driver for each unit so that no one will have to work more than an eight-hour shift, if possible.

In addition, UMass hires a contractor to do some of the periphery lots around campus. Student parking fees pay for the contractor, who provides plowing by 2 trucks and one front-end loader.

The University is a subscriber to the Northeast Weather Service, which provides a bulletin in the form of a phone call before any major storm, or before weekends. This is the service which notified Billings of the storm Monday night. The University can also call the service at any time to get an accurate forecast.

The moment roads get slippery, sanders are sent out. When snow accumulation reaches about 2 inches, plowing begins.

The campus is divided into four areas, in terms of priority for plowing. The first priority areas are the essential roads — those roads

Study reaffirms smoking hazards

By MARK CITRON
Staff Reporter

California medical researchers have announced results of research which shows cigarette smoking more hazardous than has previously been shown — even non-smokers.

The three University of California-Berkeley researchers made the findings in research based on a single inhalation of cigarette smoke. Their findings were printed in a recent National Academy of Sciences publication.

The researchers showed that small amounts of cigarette smoke cause mutations in genetic material. This genetic material is the building block of life in all organisms; and mutations in human genetic material have been linked to both cancer and birth defects.

Albey M. Reiner, noted UMass geneticist, said "The significance of this research is that there is new evidence that the greater danger of cigarette smoking might be for future generations."

"It also raises the question of government regulation," Reiner said, "because it's one thing to do harm to yourself by smoking cigarettes, but a mutagenic effect has implications to others in society".

Reiner went on to explain that there is often no obvious short-term effect of a genetic mutation, but genetic mutations tend to add up in human populations and there might be "grim implications" to our descendents for many generations in the future.

The announcement by the California group comes on the heels of growing evidence that individuals merely in the presence of someone smoking a cigarette, such as the children of heavy smokers, can suffer the same harmful effects as the one inhaling the cigarette.

Amherst officials eye housing issue

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

The University is reviewing its mandatory dormitory residence policy and town officials are in the process of taking a position in case a change occurs.

The town is concerned that if the mandatory policy is rescinded, a sudden influx of students moving off-campus would upset the housing market, driving up rents and adversely affecting persons on fixed incomes and low income families.

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy said the town's concern is not an unwelcoming gesture to students who want to live off-campus but the possible repercussions on rents and Amherst's open space.

Vice Chancellor Robert Gage and Gerald Grady, community coordinator, met yesterday with Eddy and a member of the Planning Board, Amherst Housing Authority and the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee to inform the town on the movement toward abolishing the dorm requirement.

Grady said "Amherst will be facing an increasing demand on local housing even if we do not change the dorm policy."

Grady reminded the town officials that the current leveling of enrollment at 23,000 students is only for fiscal year 1976. In the future the town can expect an additional 2,000 when the University moves to a 25,000 enrollment ceiling.

University to probe School of Ed funds

the "vandalism" had occurred he referred all questions of detail to Maia.

A reliable source told the Collegian last night that a note was left during the "vandalism" saying if he didn't "let off he was next." A UMass administration source would only say that a window was broken but he had no knowledge of any threatening note. The Amherst Police, in charge of the investigation, did not confirm there was any correlation between Suzuki's charges and the incident at his home.

At a regular meeting of the School of Ed faculty, Earnest Washington expressed concern for Suzuki's welfare. After Gluckstern and Bromery left the meeting he made a statement asking Seidman to do something to protect Suzuki.

Suzuki has been instructed by his lawyer not to comment on the situation.

Administrators at all levels were completely closed-mouthed about the funds in question. Any suggestions by reporters that the fund dispute may be an indication of deeper felt philosophical differences among faculty was cast aside in a series of interviews with administrators.

However, rumors have circulated through the School that at least some of the funds involved are federal "AID" an acronym for "agency for international development."

The agency is a part of the U.S. Foreign Service. Created during the Kennedy years, it spends Congressionally allocated money to assist educationally-deprived developing countries. It may be used on projects overseas or in the U.S.

The School of Ed is the recipient of "AID" funds, along with other programs on campus, although it could not be determined last night how much.

The School of Education has been controversial and progressive in educational concepts since Dean Dwight Allen assumed leadership in 1970, and disputes over educational purpose have been frequent among its faculty. Allen is on a sabbatical year off in Africa and the School has been headed by Seidman in his absence.

Study claims smoking hazardous to many

The three California researchers, Larry Kier, Edith Yamasaki, and Bruce Ames, noted that there were over 1,200 different chemicals isolated from cigarette smoke and that many of these chemicals, individually and in combination with one another, could cause these dangerous effects.

Reiner said he was not surprised by the results, especially since cigarettes had already been shown to cause cancer, but the fact that the researchers were able to show a mere 1-100 of a cigarette puff sufficient to cause serious effects is "incredible research."

An important aspect of this research is that it avoids the controversy over "tumor causing" effects of cigarette smoke. Past evidence of smoking hazards have come under fire by the tobacco industry because laboratory animals were used to show cigarette smoke causes tumors. Industry spokesmen claimed such evidence to have "no relevance" to humans, and that tumor causing activity in animals was not sufficient to show any danger to humans.

Scientists agree the results of these tests are "pretty straightforward." The technique used, developed in the last two years by Berkeley scientist Bruce Ames, are currently being used nationally at facilities such as the Oak Ridge National Laboratories.

ISMAEL RIVERA

Ismael Rivera plays Latin music for crowd

By Black News Service

y mientras el "nazareno" llevaba su melodia los cuerpos se movian en un son, ritmo de pueblo que a tiempo cadancioso, son de quinto y clave se unen unos con otros en el difrute de los sentidos, del ritmo, de la melodia, el "nazareno" estaba con nosotros.........

Sunday night, Latin music lovers enjoyed the performance of no. 1 "guaguanco" (Afro-Cuban rhythm) singer Ismael Rivera with "Los Cachimbos".......''Yo estaba en un vacilon........" on top of heavy latin beat.

Ismael moved his voice with Latin grace, assuring his tempo with his body, as he himself travelled into the sounds of the quinto and the tumbador. Being on the top for his time requires more than common knowledge. It requires what we latins call "mana".....is the way to it...is the way this man knows.....he's been in and out of the music scene, and in it again, every time for better. By Sunday we were all enjoying and feeling his experience and his knowing of the Latin way, as he signaled the brass section for a backup melody, as the drum beat took you higher and higher......

Ismael Rivera has been around for some time now. Since his old days with Mr. Rafael Cortijo, he's been the beloved of the Latin people, whom he treats in such a humble manner. He's been all places where Latin music is played and his talent recognized everywhere.

Now Ismael is working together with "Los Cachimbos", a new promising band, combining experience with talent. Led by Jose Madrid, pianist and arranger, "Los Cachimbos" features Sammy Ayala on vocals, an experienced man, Johnny Rivera on bass, Johnny Ross on congas, Vitin Gonzalez on bongos and CArlos Malcom on timbales. On the brass section Hector Veneros on sax, Antonio Montagna on trumpet and Harry Aguilar on trombone. This combination has come for good.

And so the band played on, his voice moved and the bodies moved together until the last beat of joy, of union with each other, the performer, the public, all in one divine beat......

Sunday night was a heavy happening for Latin-music lovers, the man and his friends were with us and we all enjoyed each other.

Ismael Rivera can be heard on his latest release "Traigo do Todo".

Tenants', Trustees' groups cooperate during meeting

By PETER MUELLO and DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporters

A spirit of cooperation characterized last night's meeting between UMass Tenant Association (UMTA) representatives and the Board of Trustees' liaison committee.

According to Chancellor Randolph Bromery, the liaison committee is "a conduit of sorts" set up to screen proposals for consideration by the Board of Trustees. The committee will determine if the UMTA has exploited all available means towards the solution of the current rent dispute. It can also recommend whether or not the UMTA demands merit Board action.

UMTA lawyer David Sheehan presented the tenants' case to the committee. "The tenants feel the 18-39 per cent rent increase is completely uncalled for and completely unjust," he said. UMTA members contend that the rent increase was voted in without student representation.

"We see the vote as being railroaded through with no consideration for the tenants," said Rosemary Whittaker of the UMTA.

Sheehan also questioned the legality of grouping rents from Lincoln, University, and North Village Apartments together into a single trust fund. The Lincoln and University complexes together have generated between 15,000 and 35,000 dollars annually in surplus funds, while North Village has been losing money. Last year, 17,000 dollars of Lincoln and University's net gain went towards paying off North Village debts.

"It's not clear if the University has a legal right to regroup the trust funds in this manner," Sheehan said.

The UMTA presented the following proposals for "a just and equitable settlement of the controversy for all parties concerned:"

1) A rent rollback to pre-1974 rates, allowing for a 6 per cent annual cost of living increase for Lincoln and University;

2) A freeze on rents at North Village for the academic year 1974-75; and

3) Recognition of the UMTA as "the exclusive representative of the tenants at University, Lincoln and North Village," and required approval of the Association for any disbursement of funds from the Married Students Trust Account.

"The question is what the duty of the University is as trustee of this account," Sheehan said. "whether it is to provide good low-income housing for students, or to juggle funds at student expense to cover losses due to shoddy construction and mismanagement."

The liaison committee will now decide whether or not to recommend review of the UMTA petition by the Board of Trustees. UMTA organizer Patrick Walker said that, at this time, the UMTA is prepared to present their case to the Board of Trustees.

David Sheehan summed up the tenants' feelings by saying, "The real consideration has to be for the students themselves. Students just cannot afford to pay those sort of rents."

Student Senate allows study of campus bank

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
Staff Reporter

The Student Organizing Committee (S.O.C.) has been authorized by the Student Senate to investigate a proposed bank for the Campus Center.

"We're considering the financial and social impact of locating a commercial bank in the Campus Center complex," explained John Pepi a member of the S.O.C.

"We're especially concerned with the loan policies of such a bank," he added.

"The student body has the right to put policy specifications on any bank that is applying for a license to operate within this complex," said Don Wilhelm another S.O.C. member.

Pepi outlined the major questions the S.O.C. will consider:

a.) What will be the loan policies of such a bank?

b.) Will the bank award loans to students proportional to the amount that students deposit in the bank, or will the bank invest the deposits all over the country?

c.) How much rent can we get out of these banks to contribute to the debt service payments?

d.) Will the bank be hiring students?

e.) Will the bank have service hours beyond the traditional 9 to 3 banking day?

f.) Weighing all the above, will the bank be a general benefit or a general sore spot to students?

The committee will be seeking advice from professionals in economics and business in order to make their recommendations to the Student Senate according to Pepi.

"The Campus Center Board of Governors cannot go ahead with the procedure until it gets the approval of the Student Senate. Once that approval is given or withheld, Chancellor Bromery promised that he wouldn't superceed the Board of Governors decision," Pepi said.

Campus Travel Center creates on-campus car rental service

By JIM KASSNER
Staff Reporter

Last Tuesday, the Campus Travel Center, located in the third level of the Campus Center complex, became a car rental agent for Thrifty Rent-a-car.

Steve Lepow, Director of the Campus Travel Center, said initial response to the action has been "enthusiastic".

"There is no other car rental agency in Amherst, so if you wanted to rent a car you would have to go to Northampton, or someplace like that. This (car rental) could be a good service to the University — I think it's a real need," he said.

Lepow also stated that he thought there was an advantage to using Thrifty Rent-a-car as opposed to other companies.

"Their (Thrifty's) rates are lower than places like Hertz or Avis. They also provide automatic insurance for $100.00 deductible. For an additional $2.00 you can get full coverage, so you wouldn't have to pay anything in the case of an accident," he said.

Lepow said initially, only "a couple" of cars are being garaged in the Campus Center Garage on a permanent basis, but added that additional cars could be obtained for meetings, or conventions within a day's notice.

"Because you have to be 21 to rent a car," Lepow said, "we expect that mostly faculty members and seniors will use the service, although it is open to the entire Amherst community." Lepow also noted that under 21 drivers can sometimes get authorization to rent cars, but these are "special circumstances" requiring individual attention.

Rates for the car rental service range from $12.00 a day for a subcompact car (Vega, Pinto) to $18.00 a day for a station wagon. Hourly rates begin at $2.40 for subcompacts and increase to $3.60 for station wagons. There are also two and three day plans available as well as special vacation packages.

In addition to car rentals, The Campus Travel Center also acts as a travel agent for the University, and the Amherst area.

"We book air reservations anywhere in the world, cruises, and hotel reservations, as well as rent cars," said Lepow. "We're also a ticketron outlet for concerts, and things like that."

During intercession and summer vacations, special trips are often put together for students. This intercession, for example, a trip to Luxembourg is being offered Dec. 26 - Jan. 24, for $258.00. There will also be charter flights to London and Amsterdam for $276.00 during the same period.

Pre-Christmas travel programs include trips to such places as Honolulu, Jamaica, Miami Beach, Puerto Rico, Venezuela, Paris, and Freeport. Information on these and other trips is available at the Campus Travel Center, in the Campus Center, or call 545-0500.

Correction

In yesterday's Collegian article on the Graduate Senate meeting, it was reported the majority of senators present indicated financial aid should be given preference to undergraduates. Graduate Senator Howard Levine, who was present at that meeting, says there was no such indication given and that most of the senators, in fact, felt no such preference should be given undergraduates.

that circle around the campus, such as North Pleasant Street and Massachusetts Avenue. The second area covers all remaining roads, the third area includes the essential parking lots — those used by the physical plant crew and the food service workers; the fourth priority areas are all the ramaining parking lots.

Billings estimates that, on the average, these areas can all be cleared in about four hours. "But it's nothing you could put a definite time limit on."

Billings agrees it is difficult to plow the parking lots because of all the ~~cars~~ left in them overnight. Yet, he feels the students do their best in assisting the plowers. "In areas like Brown, Baker, and dorms with small parking lots in front of them, the students will be notified that someone is going up to plow, and they'll move their cars, let us plow, and then move them back," Billings said. "They give us great cooperation. You can't beat it."

In areas such as the larger lots around Southwest, it is impossible to have all the students move their cars. "We'll just have to wait until intercession to clear those completely," he said. But he said, in the meantime, those lots will have paths cleared.

Students wondering whether school is going to be cancelled anytime due to inclement weather, should listen to one of the radio stations in the area, he said, and not call the university.

Financial aid

If you are still in need of money for the second semester it is not too late to apply. If you have not already applied for this year you have until Wednesday, December 4 to file an application in order to be considered for scholarships, work and loans. Funding of eligible applicants cannot be guaranteed for those applying after December 4.

Information about the aid available and all the necessary forms are available in the Financial Aid Office, Room 243, Whitmore.

CC bookstore has strict security

Students warned not to shoplift on campus

By JIM STARR
Student Legal Services Staff

During these times of high prices and questionable profits, those latent urges to get something for nothing which exist in most of us begin to surface.

For some, that urge manifests itself in an attempt to shoplift something from the local food, book, or department store. Without getting into the pros or cons of, or the rationales for shoplifting, it would seem useful to advise folks as to what they can expect if caught shoplifting in the Campus Center bookstore or other stores in the Amherst area.

If your target is the Campus Center bookstore, you're likely to get caught. The store has from three to five security people on duty during all open hours. These guards will usually wait until you get outside the exit (turnstile) or cash register area before apprehending you, and may do so within the store if you attempt to conceal any article(s) in a pocket, or otherwise. You will then be taken to the proverbial "back room" where you will be asked for your identification and requested to turn over the suspected stolen article(s).

If you're an undergraduate, you are charged with violating the "Unauthorized Removal" section of the Student Code of Conduct and the guard will refer your case to the student attorney general. The attorney general gives you the option of pleading not guilty and appearing for trial before the student court, or pleading guilty (or nolo contendere) and paying a five dollar fine. If you choose to ignore this procedure, you can be "separated" from the university.

If it is your second offense you are summoned to appear in the district court at Northampton to face criminal prosecution for larceny under chapter 266, section 30 of the laws of the Commonwealth. You have a right to a show cause hearing if requested by you within 24 hours of the alleged offense, but you will almost certainly be bound over for arraignment.

The typical disposition of a first offense for shoplifting in that court is a continuance without a finding for a period of time usually exceeding three months, and assessed "court costs" of from $5.00 to $100.00. This is ordered after you plead not guilty. The effect of this is that you keep your nose clean for the duration of the continuance; the charge is dropped and you have no conviction record. On the other hand, if you are caught again within the continuance time period, you will probably get the shaft.

If you're a graduate student, your fate lies in the hands of the management of the bookstore. That discretionary decision always leads to a summons to appear in the district court of Northampton and you will be treated similarly to your unlucky undergraduate brothers and sisters in that court. As a graduate student, you have no student disciplinary proceeding in this situation because the graduate student senate decided in 1973 not to provide one.

If you ever find yourself sitting in the "back room", keep quiet! Cooperate in giving your identification and handing over the article(s) requested. Any attempt to exonerate yourself will probably only aggravate the guard and subsequently your sentence. If the item(s) seized are lawfully yours, wait to explain the situation to the student attorney general, or the court clerk if you have a show cause hearing.

For your information, if you become a punished undergraduate shoplifter, you will be among the 250 or so that were caught last year. You are as likely to be a man as a woman, and you will probably have taken something for less than five dollars.

Beware the eyes of the guard!

Spectrum magazine continues here with student aid and without ads

By DIANE M. BELLAVANCE
Staff Correspondent

One of the few magazines ever to survive without income from advertisers is making it into its seventh year.

Spectrum, UMass' creative literary magazine, has a circulation of some 10,000 copies. Supported by the Student Activities tax, Spectrum is distributed free to undergraduates of the university and to persons whose material is published in the magazine. It has also been distributed to a number of colleges, as well as underground and "straight" presses around the nation.

Judged alongside many professional publications from across the country, in May of 1971 Spectrum won the Printing Industry of America award.

Editor Bill Whitman says, "You don't have to be a university student to submit your creative works. Past issues have provided people from the academic community and around the nation with an outlet for many modes of thought and expression."

Pointing out that Spectrum last year experimented with a portfolio format that contained a poster and single sheet inserts, Whitman says, "The staff has also experimented with four-color four page fold-outs. This year, Spectrum plans a center cartoon-art section."

Besides art and photography, Spectrum is also winning notice for its fine fiction and poetry. Article topics have ranged from "Waiting List," about an aged man; to "Entrechats and Tansy Tea," a fantasy. Poetry topics have been just as varied with such titles as "Portrait of a Fat Lady" to "Seduction: My Daemon Done Come and Gone."

To encourage writers to donate their works for publication in Spectrum, the editors reassign copyright so that their article may also be published elsewhere. Some of the previous years' material has been printed in other publications, such as a Harper and Row anthology, National Lampoon, Chelsea, and The Transatlantic Review.

"Spectrum is always looking for new materials," adds Whitman. The article deadline for the next issue is December 31. Photography, art and cartoons will be accepted as late as the third week of January. Manuscripts should be typed, double-spaced, and include a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Send them to: Spectrum, Room 207, Student Union Building.

Music Dept. offers Afro-Am. church music

New Course

The Music Department is offering a new course next semester called "Afro-Am Church Music, Music 290D. Inadvertently left out of the Course Description guide, it will be taught by Horace Clarence Boyer, Assistant Professor of Music.

The course which qualifies as a "Core C" requirement, will focus on the history, analysis and sociological aspects of Afro-American Church Music and its influence.

It will begin with a short review of religion and music in West Africa in the 17th and 18th centuries and proceed through the music of the major religious denominations in the black community.

Special attention will be given to the music of the several Methodist, Baptist and Holiness congregations, with some emphasis on such groups as Spiritualist congregations, Black Muslims and Black Jews.

The course will meet on Mon-Wed-Fri at 1:25, schedule number 499887. Course requirements include reading, listening and two short examinations.

For further information, contact Professor Boyer at Hilton House, Room No. 4, 5-2227 or 5-2279.

why does a man join Maryknoll?

There are probably as many answers as there are individual Maryknoll priests and Brothers. Some men are deeply moved when they hear of babies dying in their mother's arms because of hunger or disease. Others are distressed by the growing antagonism and separation between the rich and the poor nations. More are concerned about the great injustices that have been inflicted upon the poor by those who possess wealth and power to an excessive degree. Others look to learn from peoples who have grown up with a different mentality than that which is theirs. All feel that the only solution to the crises that threaten to split men asunder is the love of God as shown in the life of His Son, Jesus Christ. This love of God urges men to go forward and be missioners so men can love one another. What could be your reason for joining Maryknoll?

If you keep saying you want to do something with your life – here's your chance to prove it

Most cuts in social programs

Ford advances $4.6 billion budget cuts

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford proposed a $4.6 billion cut in federal spending yesterday to slow inflation, but his budget director said the reductions would boost unemployment and have little immediate impact on rising prices.

About 75 percent of the cuts Ford proposed in a special message to Congress would come in socially-oriented programs, although direct aid such as social security and welfare still would receive about 20 per cent more funds than last year.

The President asked for a $1.7 billion reduction in the health, education and welfare budget; a $1.1 billion cut in spending for veterans; and a hike in the price of food stamps to make them cost 30 percent of a recipient's income — the maximum allowed by law — next March 1.

The defense budget would be reduced almost $400 million beyond what Congress has already cut, but still would be about 6 percent above last year's level.

In all, Ford asked Congress to take 135 separate "difficult" actions. One was the enactment of the 5 percent income tax surcharge, which has been in trouble on Capitol Hill ever since Ford proposed it Oct. 8.

If Congress went along in every case, which appeared unlikely, it would reduce the federal budget for the current fiscal year to $302.2 billion — $4.6 billion less than former President Richard M. Nixon proposed last winter, but still above the $300 billion ceiling Ford has advocated since taking office.

Budget Director Roy M. Ash told reporters the new spending levels would cause 40,000 to 50,000 workers to lose their jobs. Almost all would be non-government employes.

Ash said the job loss figures were based on the assumption that unemployment would continue climbing, going as high as 6.7 percent by the end of the fiscal year next June.

The spending cutbacks, Ash said, would have "only a fractional effect" on the rate of inflation in the immediate future. But he said there would be an important long-term trend toward "holding down inflation in future years."

In defending his proposals, Ford told Congress: "I have tried to eliminate the less essential and to overcome inequities.

Mitchell testifies he vetoed burglary plans

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, testifying on his own behalf in the Watergate cover-up case, said yesterday he rejected on three occasions the plan that culminated in burglary of Democratic national headquarters.

Mitchell, first of the five defendants to take the stand following opening defense arguments to the jury, said the idea for a $1 million program of kidnapping and surveillance was first broached to him by Watergate mastermind G. Gordon Liddy.

He said he told Liddy at the meeting on Jan. 27, 1972, "to take that stuff out and burn it."

A second meeting with Liddy came about a week later, Mitchell said, and was terminated by him and White House counsel John W. Dean III "who said this was something not to be discussed in the office of the attorney general."

Finally, Mitchell testified, deputy re-election campaign director Jeb Stuart Magruder presented him with a modification of the Liddy plan in Key Biscayne, Fla., on March 30, 1972. "As I recall," he said, "I threw the paper back at Magruder and said, 'Not again!' Magruder took his papers and left.

Ford vetoes vets

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford reluctantly vetoed yesterday a bill providing 23 per cent increases in veterans benefits. He said it would have added another "half-billion-dollar load to the already overburdened taxpayer."

In his veto message, Ford said he considered the increase in benefits excessive and said his decision not to sign the bill "has not been an easy one."

Ford said that veterans benefits "should - and can-be improved" and that he would support a GI bill providing for an 18.2 per cent benefit increase rather than the 23 per cent in the bill.

"Such action would be in keeping with the need for fiscal responsibility while recognizing the nation's special debt to our veterans."

Coal pact rejected

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The United Mine Workers Bargaining Council opened the way to ending the 15-day-old coal strike yesterday by voting to send the new three-year contract to the membership for a ratification vote.

UMW President Arnold Miller announced in late afternoon that the council had approved the contract language after voting earlier in the day to reject it for the second time.

Miller said the union will speed up the ratification process, which earlier had been expected to take up to 10 days, and he hoped the contract could be submitted to the 120,000 members by Monday.

William J. Usery, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, stood by in Miller's office while the council acted favorably on the contract in late afternoon. Later he told reporters he had just talked with President Ford and "he is delighted."

PLO hits hijackers

BEIRUT [UPI] — The Palestine Liberation Organization will execute the four Arab hijackers of a British jetliner if they are turned over by Tunisia, PLO sources said yesterday.

The sources said the hijacking of a British Airways VC10, in which a West German passenger was shot to death and his body dumped on an airport runway, was in effect a challenge to the authority of the PLO.

Nixon health secret

LOS ANGELES [AP] — Three cardiovascular specialists said yesterday they had reached a unanimous decision on whether former President Richard M. Nixon is fit to testify at the Watergate cover-up trial, but they declined to announce it.

The doctors said their report was confidential for the trial. Dr. Charles A. Hufnagel of Georgetown University, head of the court-appointed team, said their examination of Nixon on Monday took about an hour. "We met with and examined Mr. Nixon with his consent and cooperation."

Pay phone hike asked

BOSTON [AP] — New England Telephone Co. asked yesterday for permission to double the charge for pay phone calls in Massachusetts to 20 cents as part of a $210 million rate increase package.

The rate increase, filed with the state Department of Public Utilities, would raise the cost of phone service for most residential customers from $1 to $2.40 a month, the company said.

Arms limit set

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Gerald Ford agreed with Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev to restrict the United States and Russia to "a rigid ceiling" of less than 2,500 strategic missiles and bombers under a 10-year strategic arms accord.

The true meaning of Thanksgiving: Thanking God

To the Editor:

What is the meaning of Thanksgiving? For most Americans all it means is that the family will be together and everyone will stuff themselves with turkey and all that goes with it. I think that there should be more to Thanksgiving than that. When the pilgrims celebrated their first Thanksgiving they were thanking God for what they had for that year. This is the way I feel that Thanksgiving should be. Too often we as Americans take for granted the things that we have, and we have who is the supplier of all our needs, God. Thanksgiving should be a time for us to stop the hustle and bustle of everyday life and thank God for the things we have. There are people that don't have it as good as we. For the most part we Americans have enough food to eat, we have clothes, we have a roof over our heads, and we have our health, and for these things we should be extremely thankful.

As I said in a previous letter, I don't think that is the political scandals we have had that have brought this country to the state it is in today, it is the fact that this country has for the most part forsaken God. Whenever a nation does this it will always be in the soup. In Jeremiah 2:13 it says "My people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns that can hold no water." This is what this country has done and that is why it is in the shape it is in today. It has forsaken the principles that it was founded on and started to hew out its own broken cisterns. The only hope this country has is to get back to trusting God, and it will once more be a blessed land.

SOP represents all students

To the Editor:

In response to the letter from Michael Carroll in today's Collegian [November 26], I would like to clarify a few points. What I am saying I know to be true as far as the Student Organizing Project is concerned, and I believe that it also applies to the other groups concerned.

The SOP does indeed represent all students. At no time did it ever "think everyone attending UMass lived in a dorm." I am aware that there has been a recent move on the part of those who fear students getting together to try to divide the student body on the lines of whether they live on or off campus. Mr. Carroll may have heard those who would divide the student body say that the SOP and other groups are not interested in commuters.

However, if he would check the records of every statement we have ever made on housing — and listen to the transcripts of the housing hearings — he would note that we have repeatedly stressed the absolute necessity of protections against windfall profits on the part of local landlords. Furthermore, it is clear that it would be as completely unfair to penalize students living off campus for the mistakes of the administration during the 1960's as it presently is to arbitrarily and illegally force a group of students to live on campus to cover those mistakes. It is not a case of people on campus trying to get those off campus to pay for their needs. It is a question all students banding together to obtain fair treatment from all landlords, whether the landlord is the University or some private group.

Students have two choices. They can either stand together and become a force to be reckoned with or they can fight among each other and remain weak. On-campus students need the support of off-campus students, and off-campus students need the support of on-campus students. Neither group should accept any sort of general fee without the full participation of both groups in the decision making. Students must support each other. It's as simple as that.

Rotating tri-semesters: A solution?

To the Editor:

I've got a few things to say. First--most students deserve to live on campus. If you really couldn't take the dormitory environment, you'd find a way off by one of various legitimate means, or leave school. You'd find that dealing with all types of landlords and keeping yourself alive might be a real challenge, something incapable of sheep and bovine creatures. Especially when this new barrage of demanding individuals set loose in this area would raise rent prices. Remember supply and demand, kids? Better to stay with the cows and plants in Southwest than hamburger in the competitive world.

The solution is not off-campus housing but re-planned housing. The human density particular to Southwest is a mental drain and is unhealthy. It breeds mediocrity. Who would be crazy enough to actually live there? As a former resident of Southwest, I know. The planners made a mistake and the students shouldn't have to pay. I would recommend lowering enrollment to ease the population strain in Southwest. Or even better--have three rotating semesters. In this way, the empty campus of the summer months could be put to use economically. This would reduce tensions and allow for more creative special use of University facilities and rooms all year round. Teachers could also rotate. Classes could be smaller and off-campus programs for credit could be initiated by students. A source book of available educational work or study could be compiled or sought out by the student. Or the usual vacation work time could still ensue. As the students would be distributed as suggested, empty rooms could be used as studios for artists, photographers, dancers, musicians, study halls and so forth. UMass could use some culture, something that is not encouraged due to the lack of studio space. Too much emphasis is placed upon the business of running UMass and not upon the actual education, by the officials here. Students are not here to be financially exploited for the benefit of the corporations that built UMass.

A reversal would be welcome. A realistic approach to the problems here is needed to satisfy both sides. A rotating trimester system [3-four month semesters] could achieve this and is a real possibility that ought to be studied and refined. Business in the UMass area would appreciate this change as summer is very slow and virtually profitless. The change of program will be difficult to initiate and poses new problems, yet it would be a worthwhile effort. All students should consider this plan and construct a committee to explore the possibilities rather than complain and expect preferential treatment that is unfair to those already off-campus. You have a chance to change things here, but you must organize and act. Let us resurrect student activism for a cause to improve our community.

The Stone(wall)ing of Nixon

Croo-Croo

To the Editor:

After finishing a sumptuous meal of greasy chicken at Worcester Dining Commons, I began wondering about a subject that comes to my mind each time chicken is served at the D.C.

Where are all the pigeons on campus???

Every time I go home [Boston] for a weekend, I am completely freaked out by the billions of pigeons everywhere. Yet, when I return to UMass, I would believe that pigeons were extinct. Except...

Except that 2 or 3 times a week, Food Services seems to be well supplied with baked chicken, fried chicken, chicken cutlets, chicken soup, chicken-a-la-king, etc.

Where are all the pigeons on campus, Arthur Warren???

SOMETHING TELLS ME THAT THESE AREN'T THE SAME INDIANS THAT WE MET WHEN WE ARRIVED HERE!

Prisoner in the dorms

By BOB FOSTER

So, you want to move "off-campus"; that infamous heaven where peace and tranquility transcend the pressures of classroom madness. And yet, you're only 19 years old, or you are not eligible for any type of waiver, and you are not married, and you are not a senior. Further, you can't seem to find any of those loopholes that your former next door neighbor found last semester--the "never-to-be-consecretated" marriage or the series of nervous breakdowns (documented by a physician's letter, of course)! Thus, you find yourself in one of those double binds that Psychology 101 prepared you for. You desire to honestly expand within the framework entitled "education" and yet, the requirements of a plastic, compartmentalized life-style suffocate you.

So, what do you do? Naturally, you admit defeat and live in a concrete box for a semester or two or three or four. But, the Whitmore curse is not through yet. No, they must add insult to injury. Not only is the "box" the required mode of living, but five days a week, you are fed food that becomes addictively nauseating. Your stomach cries for tasteful, appetizing nutrition. On occasion, they fulfill some sort of random reinforcement schedule and create meals that taste good. Yet, it is all part of a devious plot. The next day, you feel the nausea strike again. The previous night's meal loses its effect and you again face pallid potatoes and paltry meatloaf.

So what do you do about it? Naturally, you continue to admit defeat. But, it bothers you just a bit more now. You are no longer the meek and timid recipient of fate's decree. Instead, you question the need for such a system. You wonder why it "must" be as it is. And so, another year ends. Summer, with all its fantasies, allows you to forget the fall and spring. Yet lurking deep within, you know something is unfair, indeed unjust. You haven't quite understood what it is, but you know it's there. It gnaws at your conscience and tears at your stomach lining like a crazed squirrel. Soon, it may reach for other, more vulnerable extremities--like your mind!

You return for another year. The life-style is the same, perhaps the tortures are even more expensive. But nothing has really changed. You wonder about the laws of supply and demand that Economics 103 taught you about. If it's all so very bad, then why doesn't the system just collapse? But further contemplation reminds you that you are a member of an oppressed minority, a second-class citizen. There is a fixed supply. Demand is artificially created by restrictions and regulations. You are a member of a captive audience of sorts--a guest at your own funeral. So what do you do? Nothing of course. There's always the Bluewall, the Hatch, and the TOC! You avoid your sorrows by drowning them in kegs full of fantasy and false consciousness. And, inevitably, another year passes.

By now, you have reached the ultimate privilege. You are no longer 20; you are 21! Better still, you're a senior and you're even married and you belatedly discover that you lived within the 40 miles radius all this time anyway. So you move to that heavenly abode and sip nectar with the gods. And finally, you forget. Yes, you lose all recollection of your former life. You laugh at the poor slobs who must live "on-campus". And you forget that you were once one of them. And so, life with the gods continues. You drown yourself in kegs of happiness and apathy. All is good that can be forgotten.

But alas, this very year, you are no longer allowed to forget. A union is forming, a union that expresses those very inexpressible feelings that gnawed at your soul as a sophomore. And so, no longer allowed to forget, you walk blindly among the tortured slobs. You can no longer see yourself in the faces of others who must live as you once did. You force yourself to be blind to those around you.

Don't slip into the blindness of apathy. Support those who wish to gain control over their lives. Give a damn!

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Why do Polish farmers wonder?

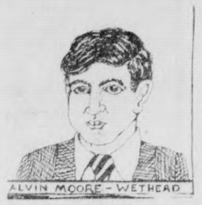
Amherst is like anyplace. No better, no worse. Any place like Bedlam, Belfast or Cuyhoga County West Virginia. Much of the populace is teeming with such an intransient madness that is such a contradiction in terms with these sleeping Berkshire hills peopled with Polish farmers who vainly wonder what those crazy hippies are up to these days. Members of the State Legislature traipse about filling these "halls of knowledge" with words of patronizing intonations, while members of Academia laugh at them with scorn and cry out in anguish about politics and hypocrisy. Meanwhile some are denied tenure and others are told they are not up to caliber. Enough of them.

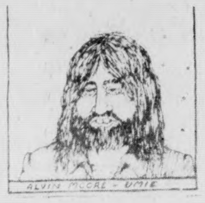
It seems that though an element of sanity exists somewhere (perhaps the Pope knows). Those that inhabit these wastelands are in various stages of insanity leading up to an inconsequential end (No, not all of the truly insane end up committing suicide. Most remain to screw up another day.) The following is a compilation of those degrees, but rest assured that the author is beyond all of them, so the reader need not take anything seriously outside of his-her own personal instability.

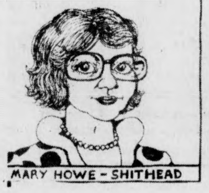
Stage One — The acceptance from the University has arrived and the victim sends in the deposit. Sheer lunacy. Victim suffers from the "high schools", a dreaded disease that includes cheerleaders, national honor societies and math meets. Victim often mumbles senseless things like "Oh Well, UMass is almost as good as Princeton" and is filled with a desire to come to college for the total experience, ie, to get drunk, get high and get laid.

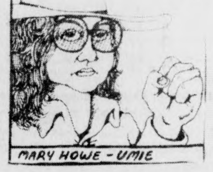
Stage Two — Choosing a major in the illusion that the student can find a job in the real world. Or at the very least some appreciation for said noble effort. Ah but there is no tenure in that dream. Students suffer from open faced innocence and naivety and are often mumbling things like "LSAT's" and "but I want to major in Greek!"

Stage Three — The attendance of classes in the expectation of a miraculous transformation to what the world so caustically describes "an Educated Person". This is closely related to Stage Two and transition is usually rapid. Students in Stage Three suffer from pale complexions gained from massive seclusion in libraries. Other telltale symptoms include a fast paced stride, calculators and thesaurae strapped to their midriff, and frequent circular and obfusscating questions in class. These types are sociologically very menacing.









Stage Four — Activities such as writing angry letters to the Collegian fasting for Hunger and Masturbating for Birth Control, running for Area Governments, telling Library jokes, going to the Bluewall on Friday nights, and defending Frank Bellotti just because you're Italian and a Columnist. Students suffer in this stage from the "get involves", a severe illness that attacks but a few, who wander about in the delusion that they are accomplishing something other than self flagellation.

Stage Five — Looking outward. Reading the wanderlust diatribes of a Jack Kerouac or a Hunter Thompson in a world really filled with Samy Yortys and Meldrim Thompsons (Hi Mel!). Students suffer from glazed eyebrown stapled to their skulls and waxen expressions mumbling things like "Tahacha-pee to Tonapaw" and "gonna take me a year off". Off from what!

Stage Six — Graduation. A product of the previous five stages. Many thousands advance to this stage every June, in the local area. A conveyor belt to madness.

Stage Seven — Making arrangements to stay here after graduation by either going to graduate school here, or by kissing enough ass and selling out enough brothers and sisters to land a job with the local bureaucracy.

Vonnegut is right. We should all be voluntary firemen. (On the Cape).

Thanks for the memories

Already a winter, a spring, a summer and an autumn has passed here it is again another turkey day. Time to go home and attend that annual high school football game, sit down with the family to stuff yourself while that eccentric Aunt Ethel asks you questions about the drugs and sex situations at UMass.

"Oh what is your position on sex?" she so innocently asks. And how hard it is not to give a good quick answer, so many come to mind. But you reserve yourself and say something like "Aunt Ethel, I really think all that is out now, sex just isn't "in" anymore. Students can't get up for it these days. I guess they realize it's nothing."

After that, Uncle Oswald the alcoholic is sure to ask about the mary-huanna situation. "Alot of kids are still addicted to that stuff aren't they". You just keep eating at that line wishing you didn't drink so much of whatever was in that flask at the game this morning.

But still it is Thanksgiving a time to give thanks in a world where there doesn't seem to be that much to be grateful about. A world where you can't help feeling guilty about stuffing your face with fowl and cranberry sauce while the newspapers are filled with pictures of starving children with big bellies and match-stick legs and accounts of rats eating all the donated grain in Calcutta. A world where all the bills, all the rhetoric still hasn't erased oppression and hate.

"Last week we had a fast at school and everybody gave up their meals for the starving, Oh yes I'd love another helping."

There are some things, though, we do have to be thankful for, some things that have occurred in the past year that we can't let go unnoticed. So, as I for one, sit back overstuffed tomorrow fondling my snifter of Creme de Menthe these are the things I will be thankful for. My apologies to Squanto and the Pilgrims.

In the thanks for honesty and integrity in government department, there are some people who can't go unnoticed. I thank the Argentine Firecracker for exposing the ways and means of Wilber Mills. Michael Dukakis also deserves recognition for riding the trains to work. If nothing else, maybe he can at least get Charlie off the MTA. I thank God too, for the Wollensack Tape recorder company who, in conjunction with former president what's his name, proved that as long as executives lie, magnetic tape doesn't.

In the freedom of the press department, one of my favorites, there are also many things we should sit down and be grateful for. First, thanks should go again to former president what's his name who single handedly made it possible to read such words as shit and bastard even in the most conservative of public newspapers. Thanks too for the Collegian's own version of the Spotlight team who led brilliant investigations on overcrowding of local drinking establishments. So what if they made up the figures it was still in the general good interest. But the big thank you goes to the three national networks and their computers who took all the fun and drama out of election night by giving complete national results with only .00001 per cent of the votes tallied.

Of course one can't neglect some of the institutions of UMass which deserve gratis. First, this year I thank Whitmore for being such a bureaucratic mess that if you're sleazy enough and convincing enough gives you the opportunity to change, add, drop and make up courses all the way up to exam week.

The Student Senate too, for always being there with their impending threat to accomplish anything, for always giving Collegian writers an endless barrel of material to write about. I thank God too, for the Physical Plants, the workers of the campus who have to be the best dig-a-hole and fill it in for time and a half crew in the world.

But finally I have to thank everybody who bothered to read all the way through this snotty column. To both of you - thanks.

Home economist society seeks members now

The drive for student membership in the American Home Economics Association (AHEA) has begun and will continue after the Thanksgiving holidays on December 2 thru 6. A table will be located in Skinner Hall and students from the Home Economics department will be on hand to assist in the filling out of the application form.

THE AHEA is a professional organization for all persons with declared Home Economics majors.

Included in the membership fee of $5.00 is the Home Economics Journal which is issued monthly. (10 issues yearly.)

A small group of Home Economics majors met with Dr. Helen Vaznaian, Director of the Division of Home Economics, last Wednesday and plans were finalized for the drive and for the wine and cheese party which will be held on Wednesday, Dec. 4, from 4-5 p.m. in the Skinner Lounge. Alice Kane will be presenting a creative needlework exhibit during the social hour. Both members and non-members of AHEA are invited and a special invitation is extended to the faculty.

Projects to be considered in the near future are invitational coffee hours within the department, assistance to the Butterick fashion show and a professional career day with successful home economics graduates.

Mrs. Joann Pullen will be the faculty advisor.

People with any questions or ideas may contact Ms. Dianne Snow at 253-9745.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 27 Born today, you are one of those individuals who, gifted with many talents but plagued by a lack of self-confidence, frustrates himself and others by refusing to take the bull by the horns where a new or different project is concerned. Rather, you are inclined to get everything in readiness for lifting a new project off the ground and then, succumbing to a wave of self-doubt, to back away from that first, all-important move that will set in motion all your plans.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Today's upsets are more routine than they may at first appear to be. Don't become overexcited at the prospect of failure; it will probably not materialize.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Unless you fail to keep your final goal in mind, all should go well today. Outside interference may cause momentary panic sometime in the morning.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Take care that you do not over-react to a lack of response to your new plans which is only imaginary. Gain support through giving support.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20 — You should have little difficulty coming to a decision regarding children. Now is a good time to clear the air on the home front. Set forth your views freely.

ARIES (March 21-April) — Practice smiling — regardless of how you may feel about the present situation at home or on the employment scene. You may have to go some to fool another!

TAURUS (April 20-May20) — Co-workers, family, friends: all of these may be counting on you for moral support during a time of crisis. Lend a shoulder to cry on.

GEMINI (May 21-June20) — Be ready with an alternative plan of action should your present one fail to grant you the satisfaction you'd hoped for. Decide an issue by evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You would do well to try to make do with things as they are — at least for the time being. Don't press another for an open expression of his point of view.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — The present situation on the employment scene may not be conducive to career advancement. Do what you can to straighten things out with co-workers.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Make plans now for the coming weekend. Otherwise, you may find that you are forced to abandon an excellent plan for joint enterprise with family and friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — It is important to your happiness that things go well after hours this week. Don't be alarmed should friends offer more advice than you've asked for.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Be wise; save your ammunition. If you insist on living in a glass house, be sure you don't deliver stones into the hands of your enemies!

Roister Doisters seeks ideas for intersession drama rehearsals

The Roister Doisters' Drama Society is now accepting proposals for its winter production to be rehearsed during the intersession recess and performed January 31, February 1 and 2 in Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall.

Mark Cuddy, President, told the Collegian Roister Doisters is open for proposals for any type of show. Anyone from the Five College area may make a proposal, he said.

The deadline for the proposals is 5 p.m. December 2 since auditions for the production will be held on Monday, December 9th, Cuddy said. Auditions will also be open to anyone in the Five College area.

Cuddy said that each proposal should contain the show's title, access to a script of the show, and the names of people who will head the Production Staff - Producer, Director, Technical Director, Publicity Chairperson, and Designers (Set, Costumes, Lighting, etc.).

He said that all of the Production Staff heads need not have been chosen at the time the application is submitted, but before the proposal is finalized they will all have to be included. Cuddy said Roister Doisters will help the proposer find Production Heads that haven't been determined.

He said the proposal should also include a monetary budget for the show. Cuddy said that for budget information, further information concerning proposals, and for submitting proposals people should contact:

Mark Cuddy - home phone 256-8833 or through his mailbox in the Theatre Department, Room 112 Fine Arts Center; Tom Keegan - home phone 253-2755; or Avis Yuni - home phone 546-6227 or through her mailbox in the Collegian Office or through Campus Mail to room 213 Brett House.

Harriers finished on upsurge

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Amidst the flatlands of the Midwest, which are covered by endless cornfields and cows in every direction, was the Indiana University Golf Course. There the careers of cross-country runners Bill Gillin, Randy Thomas and Tommy Wilson came to an end as the distancemen captured eighth in the nation.

With the inhabitants of Bloomington still debating whether or not the Big Ten was justified in its decision to send Ohio State to the Rose Bowl and wondering how Indiana once again failed to beat rival Purdue, the NCAA championship meet brought the 1974 cross country season to a close.

It was a season in which the harriers eased through the dual meet schedule, compiling an impressive 9-2 record. Only powerful Providence and tough Manhattan managed to defeat the Minutemen runners. The Friars stopped UMass with a convincing win early in the season, while the Jaspers nipped Thomas and company by one point on the home grounds of Van Cortlandt Park.

For the fifth straight year, UMass won the Yankee Conference title, then looked ahead to the New England Championships and a second meeting with Providence. The result was that PC, dependent on its trio of Irish runners, displayed some awesome running on the Franklin Park course to win the New Englands.

A week later, the IC4A meet provided the biggest victory in UMass cross country history. According to sophomore runner John McGrail, winning the IC4A's "was definitely the highlight of the season." The harriers finished well ahead of national-ranked Providence, Georgetown, Manhattan and William and Mary, as team leader Randy Thomas was bested by only one runner---- Army's Dennis Trujillo. Teammate Bill Gillin ran a spectacular race in New York as well, placing fifth.

Coach Ken O'Brien and his runners prepared for the NCAA Championships with optimism, hoping to place in the top five. The top four teams in the national poll, Western Kentucky, Washington State, Oregon and Texas El Paso appeared unbeatable going into the meet, and proved their strength, as no other team managed to score less than 200 points. Oregon, led by Paul Geis, was impressive, capturing fourth, fifth and sixth to win the meet with a total of 77 points.

The battle for the number five spot, behind the nation's four powers, proved to be a tight one. Unfortunately, Thomas and Co. lost, as the challenging course reminded PC's Irish runners of their homeland, spurring the Friars to an exceptional performance and fifth place. Georgetown and Eastern Michigan also managed to finish ahead of UMass, but only thirty-two points separated the four teams. All of the seven teams that compiled lower team totals than UMass were ranked in the top ten.

The real story of the NCAA title race was the domination by foreigners. Englishmen, Kenyans, and Irishmen were among the top finishers and one look at the rosters of the best NCAA teams explains why these schools are on top. The only foreigner on the UMass varsity is Wilson---that is, if you consider Merion, Pennsylvania a foreign land. Every other member of the varsity is from Massachusetts, which is simply another tribute to O'Brien's program, which develops, not "buys", runners.

The eighth place finish was the culmination of four years of work and self-sacrifice by Thomas, Gillin and Wilson, not to forget the rest of the team members. The season will long be remembered by cross country followers, and the only regret is that the three seniors must depart in May, leaving several openings that will be very hard to fill. Any team that loses two All-Americans will be weakened, but the graduating of seniors is a major factor in college athletics. It is up to O'Brien and assistant Mike Muska to find several solid freshman runners for the 1975 season, but IF the 1974 team had one more season left together--well, who knows?

Mike Ellis did score the UMass goal Saturday night vs. Lowell Tech, but he was not in yesterday's hockey picture on page 15. Number 14 for the Minutemen is Scott Stuart.

UConn wins

STORRS, Conn. [UPI] - The University of Connecticut won the New England Soccer Championship Tuesday in the third overtime period of a 3-3 deadlocked game, beating Brown 4-3.

Connecticut's Don Fehlanger out-mudded the Brown University defense to move the Huskies to the quarter finals of the NCAA Division one soccer championship.

The Huskies take on the winner of the Cornell-Hartwick game to be played at Oneonta, N.Y.

In the third of four 15-minute sudden death overtime periods, Paul Hunter of UConn took a direct free kick from 30-yards out. After a scramble in front of the goal with UConn attackers and the Brown goalie, Mike Hampton, on the ground, Fehlanger came up with the ball and scored the winning point.

Junior blademen win scorefest 8-7

By TOM CROWLEY
Sports Staff

Chris Crown fed forward Jim Scanlon at 13:05 of the third period as the JV hockey team beat the Chicago Minor Hawks last night at Orr Rink 8-7. Crown dug the puck out of the corner, passed to Scanlon who went by one defender, faked the goalie way out of position and put in an easy backhander.

The game was as close as the score indicated as UMass only outshot the Hawks by two, 34-32. The biggest margin of the night was in the beginning of the second period when UMass was up 5-3. The period ended at 6-5 and Chicago tied it up at 7-7 at 8:02 of the final period and set the stage for Scanlon's winning goal.

The outstanding offensive player for the JV's, however, was Tim Howes who scored 4 goals, two of them in the second period. Defenseman Daniel Mark scored the first UMass goal and forward John Archer scored the other two for UMass.

Both Phil Scavone, the starter, and Paul Murphy were both sharp in goal.

Overall, it was an exciting game as the result was in doubt the entire game. Both teams played sharp which is surprising for the junior Minutemen as this is their first game. There were 43 minutes in penalties in the game and both teams had numerous power plays.

WMUA

Minutemen basketball returns to WMUA this Friday and Saturday night with the Hall of Fame tournament from the Springfield Civic Center. Tournament coverage begins at 8:30 Friday night with Larry Convoy and Russ Small calling the action as Massachusetts takes on Dartmouth.

St. Anselm's on top, 4-2

By GLENN POSTER
Sports Staff

MANCHESTER, N.H. — Arising here at JFK Coliseum late due to a lack of a bus, the UMass hockey team got ready to take out its frustrations on the Hawks of St. Anselm's 45 minutes after the original starting time. 60 minutes of playing time later it was St. A's which had frustrated UMass, to the tune of 4-2. It was a see-saw battle decided in the second period when the Hawks scored three times — the only stanza in which they controlled the play.

Right from the opening face-off, the Minutemen took the play to the Hawks. As a result, the Hawks had trouble getting the puck out of their own end. This led to the first goal of the night, which went to Chris Lamby at 5:42.

Carl Burns stole an attempted clearing pass from Hawk defenseman Dave Lanoue and fed Mike Merchant back of the net. Merchant found Lamby all alone in the slot and goalie Tom Gavin was beaten. The score was the third of the year in as many games for the freshmen from Auburn.

Just after Bill Mintiens stepped out of the box (holding sin) in the second period, John Powers knotted the score for the Hawks when he cut in behind the UMass defense, took a pass from Jim Morris and beat goalie Dana Redmond to the short side.

At 16:40 of the second period, Minitiens was again penalized, this time for delay of game. Less than a minute later at 17:38 when they scored the eventual game winner. John Cahill beat Redmond following a scramble in front of the Minuteman net when the defense had trouble clearing the puck out of the zone.

In the third period UMass cut the lead in half, when Carl Burns banged in a rebound off a shot by Merchant.

Finally, at 16:22 St. Anselm's Bob Kearns was called for holding and the stage was set for UMass. However, the Hawks survived and three seconds after Kearns stepped back on the ice Bob Burke took a slapper from the right point that stayed low along the ice and found its way past Redmond.

Tough Terriers tear matemen; rebound hopeful vs. Yale

By JOHN BOCK
Sports Staff

There is some good news and some bad news concerning last night's wrestling match with Boston University. First the good news - UMass scored nine points. Now the bad news - BU scored 31.

Instead of the forecast "competitive match", the Terriers yawned their way through eight victories (including two pins and a superior decision) before a surprisingly large pre-Thanksgiving holiday crowd of 300 in Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium.

The truth of the matter is that neither team wrestled to their best abilities but BU wrestled a little better than UMass. Coach Homer Barr said, "I really wasn't too displeased with the wrestling for the first match of the season. But we do need work on weights and some work on being determined."

Jeff Lambert led things off for BU by docking UMass' Pete Sachon at 6:23 in a bout that could have been highly see-saw had the referee felt like calling a lot of reversals. Then Mat Thomas picked up a superior decision at 126 pounds over Greg Tallon, 16-2.

One of the evening's highlight matches ended in disappointment for Russell Chateauneuf as he was upset by BU's 134 pounder Sev Poplizio, 7-3. Chateauneuf had bested Poplizio in last year's New England finals, but this time was out maneuvered and outridden by the talented BU grappler.

Terrier Guy Bercier demonstrated that New England championship at 142 came because he could really move on his feet and that is exactly what he did in besting frosh Tim Fallon, 13-4.

Minuteman Steve Jabaut was one bright spot on the evening as he beat Cliff Whalen, 8-5, by virtue of three takedowns and some nice riding ability. Then Tom Smith really gave UMass some hope when he registered UMass' only and the evening's quickest, pin as he stuck 169 pounder Gil Hoy in 1:04.

BU came roaring back with a pin of their own as their other co-captain and New England Champ, Mark Jones, pinned Bob Spaulding in 6:33 at 177.

The Minutemen hope to rebound this Saturday when they journey to New Haven, Connecticut to take on defending Ivy League Champs Yale and a revitalized University of Connecticut team. Match time is 2:30 versus UConn and 6:00 versus Yale in Payne Whitney Gymnasium.

Cagers open in hall tournament

The UMass basketball season gets into swing this coming weekend when the Minutemen play the host role in the Hall of Fame Tournament in Springfield.

UMass meets Dartmouth in the nightcap of the Civic Center double header, with Centenary facing North Carolina at Charlotte in the opener. The winners of the opening round play for the tourney crown Saturday.

According to Jack Leaman, the Minutemen are hale, hearty and ready to go. "I think we're playing as well as I could have hoped right now," he said.

"In all probity," Leaman continued, "We'll be starting two first-year men," meaning Alex Eldriege will get the nod in the backcourt and Jim Town will start at center.

The rookies will join the trio of captains, Bill Endicott, John Murphy, and Jim Burke, in the starting lineup for UMass.

The Dartmouth squad is something of a mystery at this point. The Big Green have ten lettermen returning from a 1st year's disappointing 4-22 team, but Mark Donahue, Dartmouth's second leading scorer last year, has left for the greener pastures of Curry Hicks.

The Green also open the year under new tutelage. Marcus Jackson, fresh from two nationally ranked seasons at Coe College, takes the reins from Tom O'Conner.

Adam Sutton, a 6'5 forward, is the only real Dartmouth standout, as he led the Ivy League in scoring last year with a 19.6 per game average.

Real sparks should fly in Friday night's opener between two teams which will never be known for their defensive ability.

UNC-Charlotte returns four of five starters from a squad that went 22-4 last year and led the nation in scoring margin. The Forty-Niners (so-called because Route 49 runs through the Charlotte campus) are led by 6'6 center Jon Heath and George Jackson, a 5'11 guard.

The Gentlemen of Cantenary also sport a strong nucleus of returning talent, with eight of the top nine men back from last year's 21-4 record.

The only reason the Gents were not involved in post-season play was some ungentlemanly recruiting practices.

Centenary's big gun is 7'1 Robert Parrish, an almost unanimous preseason All-American choice. He carries a twenty point scoring average, plus a sizzling 15 rebounds a game, into his senior year.

Leon Johnson is another bona fide All-American candidate. Nicknamed "Black Magic," Johnson has been described as the most exciting Gentleman ever.

So all indications point to an exciting tournament and a vicious pair of opening games for the Minutemen.

Tap-off for UMass-Dartmouth is scheduled for 8:45, with the prelim getting underway at 6:45.

Tickets for the Classic are on sale at $3.50, $3.00 and $2.50, General Admission, at the Civic Center, the Basketball Hall of Fame and the University of Massachusetts, with student tickets available for $2 in advance with I.D. cards.

Come Closer

by Gary Gomes

I am here to tell you a story. Oh, I almost forgot...Hello. Is that right? Is that how you life forms greet each other? Is that right?

And I suppose I should tell you my name, and where I'm from? I come from a different sphere — and my name is of no consequence, since we parahumans very rarely use them. You may call me '11'. It doesn't matter. I am a...a...a...I am.

And what time capsule do I come from. You people are a little too fond of capsules. You put your minds in capsules, your spirits, your bodies, your shells, your thoughts. I am now. I am here to tell you a story. I won't give you a capsule you can lock me in. Forgive me. I don't mean to chastize.

I am here to tell you a story.

NOW...silence breath silence breath silence breath passed away past away. No past...here and now. Past is death. Past was. Death is was. All hear, here now. Do you understand?

We cipher...excuse me, I mean siphon...off your energy. I do not lie...not now, at least. I will refer to past — my death. It is hard for me, but "will" be easier for you. For I have been with you for long cycle. So very long, I cannot remember.

I used to siphon off your energy. So I could grow.

I used to feed on your souls. It was so easy. Now that I view, I am surprised that you let us do it. I question — Why? Were you past? That's right — of course you were.

We were once Baal — the fishers worshipped us. Until we devoured them. Then they let us go. We fed on souls. We were cast off a million worlds until we came to yours. And you welcomed us. Why did you not let us go?

Now I remember (it is very difficult...to remember)...you like capsules, don't you? Capsules that lock the mind in barriers, until you find yourselves suffocating. The capsules provide comfort, it is true. But your comfort often suffocates you, as well as I. Already it becomes difficult to breathe. Why did you poison us as well? You fed us poison, and we took it. It is so easy to poison. A spirit wants more and more.

You question me. You want to know how this is all possible. Very simple — you see only what you want, and not what you need. Very well. I shall explain.

When your world was evolving — not naturally, since evolution is an invented process, a result of the weakest of the time triumvirate — the sidereal, as your wizards...uh, scientists call it, time sequence — we were here, in a sub-world, below your spectrum.

Before you had atmosphere, we are. Since you developed intelligence (as your wizards so quaintly called it), you could call us. And, for a time, we were awakened from the barriers by sound — and the expenditure of your energies.

Soon, we began to evolve from taking your energies, and began to feed upon your pains. Your growths were ours to command. Your wizards then convinced you it was for the best, since we were supposed to have power. It was a lie. We had-have no power. Whatever power we possessed came from you. Why did you not let us go?

We acquired power. Power through sacrifice of your toil — your animals' blood. It was sweet to taste at first — so very sweet. But, having tasted this, we required more. We required your blood. Your blood was delight to us. Then came the sound.

The sound was the one thing my breed could not endure. The sound of the celestrial orchestras... defeated...and ended our lives on the lower spheres. Your sound helped us to live, rather than capsulize. I am one such who was hurt so. But, after awhile, we all succumbed. Some of us were awoken by the sound, and joined the cosmic all. The others...slept...for a time.

Sleep stemmed in sleep steeped in sleep, suppressed in sleep.

They awoke...and they were hungry when they awoke.

Hunger, as when you awake. Morning. Mourning for you.

When they awoke, they needed food.

So they gave your magicians machines with which to reap the human harvest. But, your wizards were not to blame, for they too were hungry. And they found men willing to reap the human harvest. They were so eager to feed those below. Why did you not let us go?

It has been so long that I begin to hunger, but I dare not, for I would die again. Or worse, I would sleep. No. I will not sleep.

Your young ones try to contact us with the old ways. That is not wise, but they are young, it is true. We would rather devour them outright, rather than waste our energy.

I said, "We"!

This is not fair. I have left your ranks. I am not a parahuman. Let me go! You must let me go!

It's your fault. You would not let us go. You would not give me sound, so I have lulled, and they are trying to make me one with them again. I will not die again!!

Why will you not help me? I was once such as they, but you freed me. Are you in league with the demons? Are you? ARE YOU?

Ahhhh....I see that you have come to tell me a story, human. That is good. Come closer human...come closer.

So that I may devour you.

Freedom of the press

by Luis Manuel Medina
Photographs by Bill Howell

Ric Savini — President Student Government Association On Media And Government:

"Newspapers are not a tool of government, but can be used to show which directions government is going and show what people in the government are doing to those people that elected them."

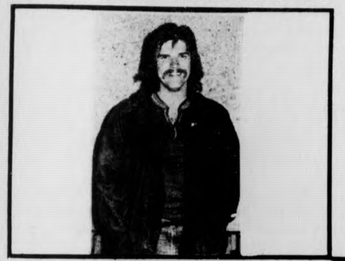
"The importance of freedom of the press tends to give the press an adversary relationship to government. Any type of media in this type of adversary relationship is a system of checks on the government. What it does is brings government to the people, to show what the so-called representatives of government are doing."

"People get in the news the climax of what happens in government."

On College Newspapers:

"From my perspective, the role of college newspapers is to inform the community of how it is being affected; and tend to be more political. There is a great deal of idealism at this particular time. I think that that idealism and action could be part of higher education.

Newspapers play an important role in campus politics, as well as world politics."



On Other Press' Roles:...."Another role for the press, besides government, is what happens around you in life. There should not only be bad news, but papers should present also that people can live together. Newspapers support social change, helping people to interact with each other, keeping open communications between people, organizations and society."

"A lot of people underestimate the power of the press. Other people would like to subvert the power of the press, for their own ends; I think in Spiro Agnews."

"We will be in a very bad position if we don't have Freedom of the Press. This is an important part of western civilization."

Mike Kneeland — Collegian's News Editor. A. P. Stringer. — Former Editor U. S. Coast Guard Magazine.

"Freedom of the Press means to responsibly say what you want to say. The reason I use the word responsibly is because Freedom of the Press doesn't mean you can libel any one.

Newspapers can very easily mold people's minds, and the people don't know they are being molded by the newspapers in many cases. That is another reason I said, "responsibly say."

I don't consider underground newspapers to be responsible, and I don't consider many left wing and right wing newspapers to be responsible. They distort the news too much.

I consider A.P., and U.P.I. to be classical examples of a responsible press.

Freedom of the Press doesn't mean you can print classified government information."

Margaret Cornell — Women's Media Project. — Pacific-Asian Coalition.

"The media on campus needs to change. It doesn't do enough to confront racism, sexism and imperialism.

Freedom of the press in this country means the freedom to exploit people, the freedom not to investigate the problems that confront this society, the freedom to describe the symptoms when they need to describe the disease."

"Like busing in Boston. They described the confrontation statements made by different people, but they didn't give the historical background that one needs to understand what is going on in Boston; they didn't describe the politics, or the economics of the situation. They discussed the fact that racism was used to manipulate Whites against Blacks, when the real issue is quality of education for all people. It also obscures the needs of other people, like the Chinese, but the attention was focused on the dramatics of race riots."

Patricia Saunders — UAP — UAPA Member — The Silent Have a Right to Speak

"Freedom of speech is not limited to those who are physically capable of speaking. The 'retarded' people in this nation have the same right. People in nursing homes, prisons, mental health institutuions...all who are physically or mentally unable to have this same right."

To be able to communicate is a blessing, and with it goes an obligation to speak for those who are unable to for whatever reason it may be."

"Without compassion and concern for those who are unable to cry out against indignities done to them, we, who are healthy, may also lose our right to freedom of speech."

Volma Lamoreaux — UAP's Secretary.

"Letters to the Editor provide an effective way to call attention to civic problems, or express appreciation to a leader or helper for outstanding service."

"Many responses come in, proving that people do read such letters, and often, their carefully considered opinions furnish a springboard toward solution."

"I'm glad that our newspapers allow any citizen who desires to communicate in this way to do so."

Advice to Weiss

Dear Editor:

First we have to read about Fred Weiss flunking the LSAT's. Then we have to read about him taking some snob to dinner in of all places, Greenfield. During this review we are treated to a transcript of conversation between the two diners about cold eggplant.

First of all after having read Weiss' columns for a year there is no surprise in his failing the Law SAT's; the logic displayed there wouldn't qualify him to defend parking ticket defendants.

Who gives a shit if Weiss doesn't like eggplant. Further, who gives a shit if Carolyn Hull-Ride does. I don't like eggplant either. Is this worthy of a fine arts paper?

I can't wait to read Weiss's next attempt at writing. What's it going to be about. Shopping for undergarments at Woolco?

To even make headway every single human has to engulf the hive, absorb the heavy reek of many breathing; unwashed socks stifle us but we are unsurprised in elevators.
The flux and stagnancy of our haunts never comes across, mixed into buildings and figured by architects as a stress factor.

An interminable weight of chairs.
A sequencial life of chairs and wax-filled ears, chalkdust we brush from our clothes like vermin and the knowing dims fast, the professors speak in cadence, we are backed to a wall but our bodies pass the bullets and we shrug noncommital and never bleed.

There is no villian, Hitler cannot and the marxists sound tinny like cheap radios.

Cause and effect would find some alter-pinned goat, some past faults to tattle on, but those methods shove away
this moment in the S.U. when my head aches, and the minions of a diffuse king who list ever

but we are true to his law; we rule lines of least resistance and walk on them.

The King is dead

In Crimson's Wake

by Your Sacred Cowboy

RED
KING CRIMSON
(Atlantic SD 18110)
Playing Time: 39:43

The King is dead, or has lost the will to live, at least. They were disbanded by founder-lead guitarist Robert Fripp about a month ago, and this album is their final word on the subject, although there is rumored to be a live album in the can, awaiting January release. This is to be hoped, because if you never saw the last King Crimson (Fripp is the only remaining member of the original group) live, then you've never heard them at their spontaneous (as in combustion) finest.

A prime example of this, in the negative sense, is the title cut of the album, which opens side one: the word 'obligatory' immediately comes to mind. "Red" borrows heavily from its siblings "Fracture" and "Larks' Tongues in Aspic Pt. II", and the way Fripp chops out the guitar rhythm reminds me of some of Hendrix's last concerts, where he'd seem to be saying 'Is this what you want?' as he grounds out "Purple Haze" or "Foxey Lady" for the umpteenth time. "Red" is peculiarly lifeless for such a high-energy cut; even percussionist extraordinaire Bill Bruford seems to be pounding rather listlessly. The bowed bass in the middle is a nice touch, though.

Another Crimsoid anachronism is the ballad, which is always placed directly following the opening 'power' cut for balance. This is almost invariably the low point of any Crimson album, due to Fripp's penchant for sugary arrangements to contrast with the bands usual rough energy. "Fallen Angel" succeeds better than any of its predecessors by means of production which maintains the album's metabolic rate on a much higher level than usual — the support instruments are solidly clustered, the vocals (by bassist John Wetton) are powerful, and the solos, including Marc Charig on cornet, are excellent.

"One More Red Nightmare" works up a considerable amount of the old Crimson steam, particularly Bruford, who, I think, had the strongest emotional commitment to this band at the end. However, there is still a very strong sense of having heard it all connected with this cut and it seems poorly engineered besides. Ian McDonald does a nice guest shot on alto sax, though.

King Crimson got too big for leader Fripp (glassed).

Side two takes the album a long way down the road to redemption; violinist David Cross, reduced to guest status by the fact of leaving the group with the album only half recorded, turns in one of his finest performances with the group to date on "Providence", a group improvisation of the "Starless and Bible Black" variety only more so. Much. This cut pulses with all the life and energy that was lacking from side one, see-sawing back and forth between Cross' solo passages and the 'I dare you' sort of group dynamics that made "Starless and Bible Black" so interesting, particularly the Fripp-Cross tug-o-wars. Eight minutes is much, much too short, though.

Finally (what a horrible word), finishing off the album and the studio career of King Crimson, the cut which was originally intended as the title piece of their previous album, with name shortened to a simple "Starless." It opens, appropriately, with a wistful echo of the days of In the Court of the Crimson King and In the Wake of Poseidon, complete with huge washes of mellotron'd strings and the quiet weeping guitar tone that Fripp used to use. In keeping with the spirit of the piece, John Wetton manages to suggest the style of Crimson's original vocalist Greg Lake (forgot about that, didn't you?). The band moves gradually away into an improvisation and resolution that can best be summed up by saying that it sounds like the last Crimson's approach to playing like the first Crimson; in the nature of a parting salute.

Ah well, gone (Groon?) but not forgotten, and all that; not a loss but a change (that's the way it is with energy). Fripp hasn't run out of things to say but he doesn't want to shout them any more. For a good idea of his new direction look in the import bins of your local merchant for an album called Fripp & Eno. Fripp says it's the best thing he's ever done.

blank announcement routine

THE NASHVILLE HIT MAN — CHARLIE McCOY (Monument KZ-32922) Time 27:28

If you had hit as hard and as suddenly as harmonica wizard Charlie McCoy did two years ago, winning multi awards and selling a mess of records after years and years of thankless (albeit peerless and well-paid) session work in Nashville, you'd think twice about messing with a success formula like that.

Until (if ever) Charlie does, we're stuck with a crop of country hit remakes slightly above the Muzak level (the playing's better on here, but the arrangements aren't) but yet below the level of such fiery originals as Streisand's "The Way We Were" and Olivia Newton-John's "Let Me Be There". The only times the old ears can perk up is when Charlie really steps into a full-blown rule, and that's either during breakneck cookers ("Fire Ball Mail"), funky-saucy McCoy originals ("Keep On Harpin'") or one of the bandmember's tunes ("T.B.'s Boogie").

A 'too many covers, not enough time' C.

SHANKAR FAMILY & FRIENDS (Dark Horse — A&M SP-22002) Time 49:28

A suitably dignified approach to the vast Western Pop market, Shankar Family & Friends is mostly light Indian music played in quite recognizable ways for Avg. West Young Guy-Gal to easily get charmed with. Already a single from here, "I Am Missing You" is rising across the water.

There is a large number of family and friends on here (48 or so play 38 or so different instruments). Not all at once, seekers, but rather in a skillfully-woven manner that is usually a joy.

Side one is tolerable, except when that infernal Tom Scott sneaks in his Sensitive business sax like we've heard at least once too many times already. There is also a strange shizoid character to this side that makes it hard to appreciate. "I Am Missing You" would be a wonderful 'novelty' holiday treat on Top 40, marred slightly by erratic singing.

Side two is the main call, being music for an unwritten ballet. The story is slight (Dream, Nightmare & Dawn, acted by Man-Woman, Boy-Girl), but the tuneful spirits playing carry it off in a light yet affecting manner.

A fine gift B.

ROCK AND ROLL OUTLAWS
FOGHAT (Bearsville)

Anyone who has seen the band Foghat knows that they are a rocking high-energy band with the power to bring a crowd to its feet and boogie "all night long". However, like another high-energy band, J. Geils, Foghat is plagued with the problem of getting all that energy from instrument to vinyl. This, their fourth attempt, falls short of that goal. The idea of rock and roll outlaws is not at all new, but does offer a challenge to interpret that Foghat can't meet. Most of the lyric content serves only as a bridge to some attractive and exciting guitar work, but until Foghat can come up with a studio approach compatible with both studio and performance, we must endure more albums like this one.

A boogie all night long C-.

BEDSIDE MANNERS ARE EXTRA — GREENSLADE (Warner, British Import)
SPYGLASS GUEST — GREENSLADE (Mercury)

Back in 1972, Greenslade's first album went relatively unnoticed. So unnoticed in fact, that Warner Brothers Records (USA) hastily cut them from the roster. Their failure in America is typical of many good British bands playing music not consistent with the popular trends and lacking a superstar. What made success even more difficult for Greenslade in the States was that they lacked a guitarist. You know - an Eric Clapshit virtuoso RIPPING DA SHIT OUTTA HIS AXE. So the two keyboard-bass-drums lineup of Greenslade headed back to England where they were more appreciated. (As usual)

Their second album, Bedside Manners Are Extra was released the following year and represented another step forward for the group. The majority of the material was excellent, especially "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Chalkhill". Both songs really bring out the excellent keyboard work of Dave Greenslade (formerly of Colosseum) and Dave Lawson. The title cut lives up to it's name, beginning with lush-bassy piano and Yes-like harmonies by Lawson. The foundation behind the "keyboard twins" is happily brought out of the closet. "Drum Folk" is a place for ex-King Crimson percussionist Andrew McCulloch to show us his talents. Bassist Tony Reeves, another Colosseum outcast, turns in some impressive bass patterns, adding almost a third layer of melody to the compositions.

Dave Greenslade & Greenslade.

On the strength of those two lp's, Greenslade built a substantial following in England. Obviously Mercury Records saw fit to give the group another chance here in the States, and signed them to their roster five months after the release of the band's third disc, Spyglass Guest, perhaps their finest recording to date.

Not only has the keyboard dominence continued, but for the first time, Greenslade makes excellent use of guitar, sax and violin for a couple of cuts. The use of outside instruments in no way alters the main keyboard concept, but it reflects the extreme versitility of Greenslade's material. The best songs on the album are "Siam Seesaw" and "Joie De Vivre". "Siam Seesaw", written by Tony Reeves, uses acoustic guitar blended with glockenspeil and clavinet, creating a simple, yet ear-catching melody. In keeping with the title, the mood of the song changes to a fast guitar break (by Clem Clempson of Humble Pie), giving away to keyboards, coming full circle with the original melody. "Joie De Vivre" is great, making maximum use of the ivories and "recorded church noises". Also, some beautiful violin by Graham Smith tops off the number. Every song on Spyglass is a standout in its own way. "Little Red Fry UP" (Lawson tour de force), "Spirit Of The Dance" (Adapted Irish jig by D.G.) and "Rainbow" (recorded "rain" and unbelievable imagery portrayed by ARP Synthesizers) are other prime examples.

After three discs, Greenslade has proved that you don't need a guitar to be exciting and imaginative. People who appreciate what can be done with keyboards in rock know that already. The trouble is that most so-called rock fans need a stupid guitar to pacify them and Greenslade, along with others of similar nature, are ignored. Hopefully, those disenchanted with the technology of EL&P and those desiring something inventive, will make Greenslade's second change a success. They certainly deserve it.

—David Santos

LOVE IN US ALL — PHAROAH SANDERS
(Impulse ASD-9280)
Playing Time: 40:48

Pharoah Sanders is still a very vital presence in today's music, and while this album is far from being innovative, it fairly glows with the fusion of reverence and joy that is the essence of all music. Side one is a celebration in the most heartfelt sense of the word — Pharoah Sanders and friends shouting "Love is Everywhere" for the world to hear, in the simple call-and response of the old gospel days. No personnel listings on this album but the pianist (Joe Bonner?) contributes a lot of the warmth and high spirits that are so uplifting on this cut.

Side two, on the other hand, features Sanders, an unknown flugel horn player, and the band at the height of wailing madness in a piece dedicated to Coltrane, entitled simply, "For John". To call it a powerful experience is an understatement on the level of being trapped in a railroad tunnel with a freight train bearing down on you. A+

WITCHI-TAI-TO — JAN GARBAREK—BOBO STENSON QUARTET (ECM 1014 ST) Playing time: 45:46.

Personnel: Jan Garbarek, soprano, tenor saxes; Bobo Stenson, piano; Palle Danielson, double bass; Jan Christensen, drums.

This Norwegian(?) quartet has put together an album of mostly other people's compositions, including Carla Bley's "A.I.R.", Don Cherry's "Desireless", and the title cut by Jim Pepper. Their music is deceptively transparent. The opening statement of each piece is usually somewhat over-simplified, and in fact they never really shake themselves loose from its structure, but this becomes their virute; their playing is very much in the warm, feeling style of the Coltrane quartet of the early 60's. Garbarek in particular produces the most sympathetic tone I've heard since the days of "After the Rain" and "A Love Supreme". Easily accessible and thoroughly enjoyable. A.

STREETLIFE SERENADE
BILLY JOEL
Columbia Records

Billy Joel reminds me most of Elton John without Bernie Taupin. Still very capable of good songs, but striking out lyrically. Despite, however, the lyrical deficiencies in Mr. Joel's albums, there is something about him that makes his lp a pleasant addition to one's collection.

Streetlife.Serenade continues with the same winning formula that made last year's Piano Man disc such a success. A majority of the material has singles potential. Three songs stand out as being rather excellent: "Streetlife Serenader", "The Entertainer" and "Roberta". "Streetlife Serenader" is basically structured like "Captain Jack", the best song on Piano Man—Joel opening alone on piano with the band joining him with some power chords. "The Entertainer" is a fast paced song and a definite AM hit given airplay. "Roberta" has a catchy and haunting melody, one of his better love songs.

No matter how bad his lyrics, Billy Joel still remains quite interesting. No doubt the material is AM-Pop oriented, but taking into consideration what AM radio has been over the past year, Billy Joel looks mighty good. (B)

PAPER MONEY — MONTROSE
(Warner Bros. BS 2823)

When Ronnie Montrose went about forming a new group a year ago, after leaving Edgar Winter, he stated that his primary goal was to bring back the good, old-fashioned hard rock, high-energy music. With their second release, Paper Money, that is exactly what Ronnie and his group have done. From the first guitar-lick on side one to the final drum-beat on side two, the group shows us that they have what it takes to make Montrose a success.

If you don't like your music loud, then you won't appreciate this album. But if you do, it should prove to be a joy to your ears. Montrose is cast out of the same mold as Aerosmith: high, piercing guitar arrangements which are the perfect complement to the leather-lung vocals rendered by lead vocalist Sammy Hagar. When they switch to a slower, softer, style, as they do in "The Dreamer," the results are equally as impressive. The album's instrumental piece, "Starliner," features impressive guitar, as well as synthesizer-work.

It's too bad that Montrose is not already an established band. If they were, chances are Paper Money would take its place as a top LP. But with mass exposure via radio's air-waves currently being so tough to come by, it will probably go unloved and un-noticed by the great populace.

The powersoul of Veedon Fleece

by Mike Kostek

VEEDON FLEECE
Van Morrison
Warner Brothers BS 2805
Time 46:51

After an extended bout with absenteeism in the form of misplaced earnestness (Hard Nose The Highway) and overpriced, overplayed live-ism (It's Too Late To Stop Now), the Van they call The Man has returned to his normal cruising speed of splendid.

But with a few distinctions: No Top 40 hits. No blues kake walcs. Not much musical 'variety' here. This isn't entertainment!

Veedon's closest kin is Astral Weeks, the brooding, 'all-turnative' theme-concept album from the days and ways of 1968, described correctly as 'an album that sat on the shelf and sort of tranced you into playing it once every week for the first six months you owned it.' Right said, and like Astral Weeks, the low-keyed veneer of Veedon Fleece makes it a slow-rising ticket with lots of patience required, but a riser still, ascending a short ways below the mighty perch of Astral, one of rock's finest works.

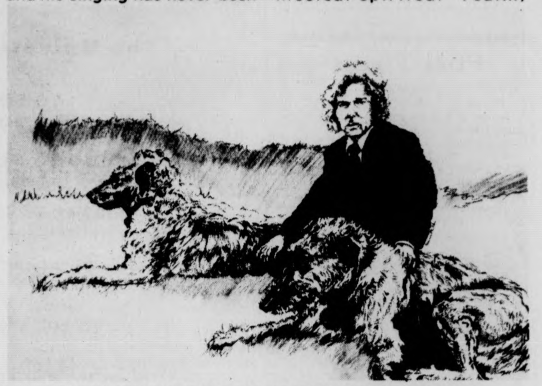
Veedon Fleece is better sculpted: Van's voice is clear (yes, just like ringing a bell) and his singing has never been better. His timing, phrasing, chanting, yowling makes life hard for humble reviewer bringing Truth to 25,000 harried readers, but they serve, as usual, to really 'sing' the song along, in the fullest sense of the word. Van's musical emotions demand that he free himself from the bonds of our arbitrary vocabulary and send himself into a musical-spiritual realm, giving the words (fine lyrics as usual) depths of perception not usually found, and certainly impossible to script on paper. Incantation. The playing behind him (it really is mostly Van's album) is marvelous in its flow and ebb, as Van's studio band keeps up with style. Strings are used to excellent effect. Morrison is one of the few in rock who knows where and when to tie in a big side of sound in his picture. He uses them when they're needed.



Van Morrison's business may not be pain, but it's not pleasure.

But yes, not a total success. There are definite gaps in the middle of each side that are dramatically overshadowed by the fine material around the edges and middle. Best of those are:

"Fair Play" — a lovely lilt about Getting Direction. "... and there's only one mellow way to go, and we say 'Geronimo'."

"Streets Of Arklow" — a look back to precious times in a town of magic: "... our minds were filled with poetry ... and our souls were clean ...". A pensive piper and marvelous welling strings clear the way for one of the best melodies on here.

"Country Fair" ends the album on a hopeful note. This takes "Slim Slow Slider's" musical linear progression (string bass again providing much of the support) into another homeward reminiscence that turns into so much in his gifted perception.

"You Don't Pull No Punches, But You Don't Push The River" is the topper on here. There aren't many people who could pull off this 8:48 of rite-tite intensity and filtering love vs. the apocalyptic visions of William Blake and The Eternals standing with the Sisters Of Mercy. The song is a reminder for everyone that we may be as forceful as we choose, but we don't push the river or run the show.

Stretch yourselves out. Get next to some Irish soul. Van Morrison already has.

TASTY — GOOD RATS
(Warner Bros. BS 2813)
Total playing time: 39:03

This most impressive comeback album for Good Rats comes at the most inopportune time for an unknown band. Every year, around October and November, the big Christmas record push begins with record companies releasing and concentrating their big promo campaigns upon important 'sales product', usually meaning the sure-selling heavies. And the unintentional result is that a lot of good new music gets overlooked.

Good Rats is a five man band who combine the best elements of good, clean good-time organic music (you know, like NRBQ) and high energy rock. Lead singer Peppi Marchello writes all the material and sounds a little like Burton Cummings, vocalist for the Guess Who; indeed, Good Rats sounds quite frequently like an inspired, jet-propelled Guess Who.

The material on Tasty ranges from the club-jazz flavor or "Fred Upstairs" and "Tasty" to solid high powered rock and roll. Marchello is an interesting lyricist, writing about such diversities as the band's evolution and getting caught with another woman. Three part harmonies are in evidence throughout as are the fine, seemingly unlimited guitar chops of brother Mickey Marchello and John Gallo. (insert ethnic slur)

Tasty needs only be heard to be appreciated and liked. Now, where's that hit single? and Merry Christmas.

MOTHER LODE—Kenny Loggins and Jim Messina (Columbia PC 33175)

Mother Lode grows on you. And grows some more. Yea, sure, but I'm not giving you some shit about albums that don't make it and become $1.98 specials.

When you listen to Mother Lode for the first time, you will probably start off listening defensively, in a pissed-off mood and, if you have a lot of money, will probably bury it in the backyard. But those twelve musicians and assorted engineers who put this albumn together come back with their music. It's growing.

You see, Mother Lode, at first couple of spins, is not very impressive as far as musical composition is concerned. But — Mother Lode has been performed and produced very well. Extremely well. The musicians entice you to give it another listen. And it grows more and more.

Loggins and Messina are kind of conservative on Mother Lode; not that they stick with past musical successes so much, but they follow a successful format which makes them sound like so many other groups trying their best to get on the Newsweek front cover with their easy listening and acoustical playing. But Ken and Jim (not to be confused with Barbie's boyfriend and Jungle Jim) grow on you.

Now that you've put up with my review, why don't an apple from that tree that's been growing in the backyard and listen to the new Loggins & Messina album, Mother Lode?

LIKE CHILDREN —
JERRY GOODMAN AND JAN HAMMER
(Nemperor NE 430)
playing Time: 38:16

There are so many pitfalls to be avoided when one or two people do an album entirely on their own it's a wonder anyone even tries. Usually such efforts fall prey to such phenomena as over-overdubbing, to make up for lack of production, which in turn results in lack of spontaneity and lifelessness. Also, very few people have the virtuosity to play enough instruments well enough to create a really full and varied sound, not to mention the problems of composing material that will suit the musician's abilities without becoming repititious. I'm pleased to announce that these two graduates of the Mahavishnu Orchestra have produced the most successful album of the genre I've ever heard, an unbelievably tight and lively presentation.

Listening to this album one understands how they might have been somewhat frustrated with John McLaughlin: Hammer in particular demonstrates a hitherto totally unsuspected variety of talents; he wrote most of the material, supplied all of the bass and percussion (seems he picked up quite a bit from his association with Billy Cobham), and about two-thirds of the leads, all with same wacky sense of humor that restored so much balance to McLaughlin's heavy-handedness. Jerry Goodman is somewhat over-shadowed here, but he too seems to blossom forth in unexpected ways, providing beautiful multi-layered backgrounds as well as fiery leads on both violin and (would you believe) guitar, the latter more in the style of a Jeff Beck than a Mahavishnu. Neither one of them can sing or write lyrics worth beans, but this is something of an asset on an album as essentially light-hearted as this.

Production on this album is a marvel; almost every cut has at least four overdubs per musician and yet maintains a very high vitality — It takes real skill to keep the light touch while creating a full sound with just two musicians. Their compositions don't have much depth, but they are superb at creating lively and unusually varied musical environments.

This album will probably be among my picks for best of the year, but I hope they don't try to do it again; a second effort would probably wind up spoiling both. I do hope they stay together though, preferably with a few more musicians to keep things from getting stale. A.

SHEET MUSIC — 10cc (London U.K. AUKS 53107) Total playing time:

Representing a furthering of the cute-witty-sarcastic-catchy-name dropping-British style which surfaced in 10cc's debut album last year, Sheet Music is fun and lightly enjoyable but ultimately reduces to a level of high-brow bubblegum. Their lyrics, vocal harmonies, and music are all filled with little twists which are initially interesting but time makes them mushy. At least they're trying to be interesting and different and we'll give them credit for being unique. Who else would sing "ticka, ticka, time bomb" eighteen times in one song? Hmmmmmmmm?

IN MEMORIAM -
MODERN JAZZ QUARTET
(Little David)

The MJQ is now defunct, but their recorded legacy is strong indeed. In fact, this final album is one of their finest. In Memoriam is another quartet - orchestra collaboration and, because of the group's experience in this context, it succeeds admirably.

Side one is taken up by pianist-leader John Lewis' piece "In Memoriam," in two movements. Quartet and orchestra move as one through the gushy but pleasant thematic statements, then Lewis and vibist Milt Jackson are freed to investigate the material on their own terms with intermittent comping from the strings. Each man's solo is remarkably well constructed, especially Lewis who interacts precisely with the orchestra. Movement two is in a decidedly more modern style, deep and intriguing with a bright up - tempo solo by Lewis and Bags (Milt Jackson) mixing sublimely with the symphonic backup as they churn to a climax.

The MJQ, no longer on view

"Jazz Ostinato" is orchestrally swinging jazz, familiar despite its new setting, and is very rewarding. As if in counterpoint to this, the group then performs "Adagio from Concerto de Aranjuez" by contemporary Spanish composer Joaquin Rodrigo. Here, The MJQ concern themselves mainly with the graceful Spanish classical feeling of the piece. Bags' rippling lines highlight this excellent interpretation.

As proven in their previous "Blues On Bach," the MJQ are adept at integrating classical ideas and jazz feeling; they respect the former, imbuing it with a subtly solid rythmic drive that complements rather than detracts. A truly fitting final effort, this, and eminently diggable besides.

7-TEASE—DONOVAN (Epic PE 33245)
Playing Time: 41:48

Donovan has been something of a recluse for the last few years, I guess sorting out possible ways of getting back in touch with a generation whose changing musical tastes had passed him by. An album here, an album there, would flicker briefly across the show racks of the record stores, mostly unnoticed and rightly so — The light heart had been retired in favor of the heavy hand, the flute for the horn section, and cheerful whimsy for topical satire. And 7-Tease is no different, or better.

However, Donovan is touring to promote this one, touring for the first time in years because, he said, "This year...I feel my music is needed. I need it and the people will need it." Damn right they will, but not these heart-breaking attempts to cater to punk-rockers and boogie-bums. Poor Donovan: Unbeknownst to him, musical tastes have shifted again, somewhat, and if he'd just strip down to his humble six-string again, and let the awe-at-beauty-of-it-all back into his voice and writing, he'd find his audience waiting for him, flowers in hand, wearing their love like heaven, or at least smoking bananas again. First there is a guru, then there is no guru, then there is....?

FEEL — GEORGE DUKE (BASF Records)

Aside from his chores as keyboard man for the master of the bizarre, Frank Zappa, the talented George Duke has had a rather understated but successful career, performing in the capacity of studio musician, jazz trio leader and, as evidenced by what he offers us in his last two releases, a studio technician and producer who has his capable fingers to the pulse of contemporary music... and I mean like, now!

Feel, his newest release, is a refinement to what Duke was attempting to do on his first solor disc for BASF — integrate layer upon layer of his keyboard output into complex, constructed musical statements. He does this much in the same way Stevie Wonder put together Music of My Mind and Talking Book, where one man laborously records track on top of track until virtually every sound on the album is a result of that one man's thinking.

Perhaps this phenomenon is the result of technology: The average keyboard player today is not the same manic over in the corner of the stage slamming out chords on an upright piano. Instead, he is the technician filtering the output of his sine wave generators through a ring moduiator on his twenty-thousand dollar moog synthesizer, or the man who has his hand on the intensity control of the echo-plox or vibrato box or phase control. Sheeshh! How about putting those hands back on the old ivories once in a while?

Fortunately, Duke is not one of the prime offenders in this respect relative to other contemporary keyboard artists; Keith Emerson, Herbie Hancock and Roger Powell are the ones who really make me feel like I'm listening to 21st century muzak.

And fortunately, Duke takes on a few able musicians to help bring different ideas to the music. Airto and wife Flora Punim contribute humaneness to the sometimes over-bearing synthesizer sputterings, burps and sizzlings. Frank Zappa himself lends his intensely hot guitar soloings on two cuts, "Love" and "Old Slipper" (stink foot?).

Everybody has his opportunity to wheel a solo at one time or another. Many times the tunes on this album exist only as vehicles for solos, as I seem to feel about "Funky Feel". Zappa just literally takes off on his generous flight in "Old Slipper". Duke himself takes good advantage of his solos, most notably on "The Once Over." But in general, he seems content to allow the others to handle such chores, while he concentrates on setting moods and meshing textures for others to bounce off of.

Even in spite of a few small personal dislikings, which I have tried your patience with, give the album the once over. B.

COLLECTABLES — JERRY JEFF WALKER (MCA)

Jerry Jeff Walker is a great one for suddenly emerging with a sudden stroke of musical genius usually hidden behind somebody else's voice then disappearing into a faraway corner of middle America: a world of women who say they don't but do, of bar Bud bottles lined up all in a row, of freight trains and broken promises.

Jerry Jeff doesn't really care, he goes on playing his music messing around with rock and roll, gospel, and folk.

His voice is low, rarely beyond monotone, and his words are slurred so that he sounds like that guy who was sitting next to you last year in Quicksilver who you were waiting for to puke all over the bar.

But like that guy never puked either does Jerry Jeff. And like the lovable town drunk, this album has to grow on you before you get to like it.

Every song on the album has its own merits. Some of the songs you never hear no matter how many times you play the album, but then you start to listen and the song hits you over the head like a broken bottle of Jack Daniels. And the next time you hear it, it's yours.

Side one of Collectables is fun to listen to with, the highpoints being "I Like to Sleep Late in the Morning", a bouncy tune that will never get you out of bed. "My Old Man" is a really great song, and kinda reminds you of "Mr. Bojangles." Tom Rush or somebody will make a lot of money off it someday.

Jerry Jeff really had fun recording side two. You can tell because everybody is always laughing and everything between cuts. I'll bet they were all getting really drunk too. Jerry rock and rolls too much on this side probably because it's an easy way to get out of working hard. The last song, "Headed for the O.D. Corral" could become one of the greatest songs-before-you-pass-out-on-the-floor-tunes you will ever year.

I can see Jerry Jeff now, standing in front of some bar saying to some woman of fading moral standards "Yea, I went out and did an album (urp) it was good enough (urp) you're a purty girl...."

And speaking of fading moral standards, next week Maria Muldaur gets it from Me.

CELEBRATE LIFE — JOHNNY NASH

(Epic PE 32828)
Total playing time: 39:11

During his lengthy recording career, Nash has been hailed as the new Johnny Mathis, a reggae proponant, a soul singer and a pop vocalist with great potential. Exhibiting a greater consistency than his first two Epic albums, Celebrate Life shows Johnny's continuing versatility and maturity, and showcases Nash as a strong soul-rock-reggae-easy listening vocalist. Smooth mellow and thoughtful, all rolled into one. Thank you.

"I am not a crook"

I AM NOT A CROOK
by Art Buchwald
G.P. Putnam, Publishers
250 pages $6.95

Reviewed by Dean Tucker

Watergate is somewhat behind us now. When Nixon quit the climax of the affair was spent and when Ford pardoned him so he could get sick in California the thrill of seeing a criminal President impeached was taken away. Too bad.

Except for watching what happens to all of the Nixon regime's underlings there is little to do with Watergate except for turning it into an academic affair... and no academic study of government should be without humor.

Art Buchwalds latest compilation, I Am Not A Crook is the satirical answer to All The President's Men. Crook takes readers through the last days of Watergate to Nixon's resignation in August. No one is spared Buchwald's rath; he openly admits that he was out to get the president. In his words, "I had an open mind until the enemies list was printed and I wasn't on it. This caused me anguish and embarassment and hurt me professionally in Washington. When an eighty-seven year old women in Peoria made the list and I didn't, it was just too much. I decided, that does it — no more Mr. Nice Guy."

WATERGATE? Isn't that a hotel in Washington?

Many of the pieces (which are all reprinted from his syndicated newspaper column) show a particular satirical genius whose level of humor rises in proportion to the level of the seriousness of the Watergate Affair. Other pieces show that indeed doing something funny about government everyday is too strenuous for anyone.

The book is not strictly Watergate. One of the funnier stories, "Waiting For Gas", suggests what to do with one's time while waiting in gasoline stations lines during the gas crisis (remember it?) ripoff. Among them are:

Enroll in a college correspondence course, and do all the work in your car. One woman, Buchwald claims, finished her master's degree before she got to the pump.

Count the number of foreign cars that pass while you are in line. If you reach five hundred, you win.

The best Watergate satire was called "Expletive Deleted" which gave a history of Richard Nixon's cursing career. in 1960 Nixon spoke of the offensiveness of salty talking presidents, saying that a president should be someone parents will hold the children of America up to see. Buchwald's personal disappointment with the ex-presidents foul mouth came when he discovered that holding his twenty year old son up to see a clean talking president was a sham.

Yes, I'm President, but I was only following orders.

The book is excellent. Its pieces take two or three minutes to read. Readers who find sanctuary in the bathroom rejoice! Throw away this month's Reader's Digest. Start your day with a laugh at good ol' Tricky Dick, and the rest of the American zoo.

"Humble Howard" not so hot

LIKE IT IS
by Howard Cosell
$8.95 303pp.
Playboy Press

Reviewed by Ed Smith

Howard Cosell should have quit while he was ahead.

The first book he wrote, Cosell by Cosell, was interesting, funny, provocative and even philosophical in places. While not the greatest autobiography of the twentieth century, Cosell's first book seemed to be an honest attempt to relate some of the incidents in his career as a sports broadcaster.

Like It Is, Cosell's second book, inspires cynicism and a sense of disappointment. An insatiable suspicion arises that this book was motivated by two things: greed and vanity. First it seems that Cosell is trying to capitalize on the relative success of his first book by putting out a second just a few strategic months before Christmas. Actually, it is probably not all Cosell's doing; Playboy Press is famous for publishing trash when there appears to be big market.

Cosell's vanity also seems to have gotten the better of him in this instance. What "Humble" Howard seems to have forgotten is that no matter how good a journalist you are, you cannot hold the spotlight alone.

Journalists are, as a group, parasites who live off the stars of our society; the sports figures, the politicians, the oddities and all the other people and incidents which make up the news. There is certainly nothing wrong with this. It is one of the vital and indispensable professions of modern society. However, the role must be kept in perspective and it is obvious that Cosell has lost the ability to do so.

About two-thirds of the book deals with Cosell's own wandering reflections on his background, prejudices and opinions on the sports world. It gives one an overpowering desire to call Howard and tell him to save those stories for his grandchildren. Just to say, "Howard, take a dime and call somebody who cares."

What made the first book good was that Cosell gave the readers a peek into the backstage of the world of both professional and amateur sports. It was that offering of personal knowledge about otherwise unapproachable figures that made Cosell interesting. Somehow, Cosell got the idea that people were interested in him. Consequently, in Like It Is, we get several chapters of "most asked questions." These are, Howard explains, questions that people are constantly asking. This section of the book is in close competition with the Congressional Index for the most boring piece of published writing for the year

The first few chapters of this book are not too bad. They prove that Cosell can be interesting if he tries. However, as one gets into the second third of the book, it is as though he has run out of material and is just filling space.

In a way it is really sad that Cosell has published this essentially worthless tract. I think it will have the effect of lowering his esteem as a journalist. The man has undeniably done miraculous things for sports broadcasting. Rather than being content with the mindless praising of sports figures, he has engaged himself in controversial issues, criticized when he has seen problems and put his own reputation on the line when he thought he was right. This is a remarkable track record for any journalist, let alone the traditionally impotent sports broadcaster.

The respect that Howard Cosell's work has inspired in some people will no doubt be destroyed by this book. Rather than reading this book, watch Cosell on Monday Night Football. You can't get a refund on the book, but you can always turn off the television.

Fond Memories, Installment: C

Remember the week before finals when you trudged down to the library with your knap sack and sleeping bag? To prepare for this you spend $25 in canned goods and promptly forgot the can opener. You sent cards out to all your friends saying, "Change of address: 906 McNamara to 18th floor, 3rd booth University Library." You keep a list of their new addresses close at hand and every three hours run screaming from your floor to their floor to seek solace in your mutual misery. Within 24 hours you know the location of every water fountain and rest room. In about four days all of your canned vegetables start tasting alike, your eyeballs are fried, but when you find that the hum of the fluorescent bulb sounds like "If Not For You", you know that you've really had it. You leave to take your exams and the security guard frisks you, your sleeping bag, your empty vegetable cans. You get home after the final final and in desperation turn Deep Purple on full blast before collapsing. The dude across the hall who you know hasn't cracked the spine on any of his books and always plays Led Zepplin full blast when you're studying, saunters in and turns off the stereo with:

"Don't you ever study?"

ABSENT-MINDED PROFESSOR. Alphabetical first of a slew of holiday weekend Disney kid movies. Mt. Farms 4. +++

AFRICAN QUEEN With reality on holiday, glamour (Katherine Hepburn) falls for gruffness (Humphrey Bogart). Bewitching in its consumate atmosphere, floating down a jungle river. Glove, N'Hamp. (7 & 9:15) +++

ALICE'S RESTAURANT. More reality gone away in Arthur Penn Warren's version of hippieness and hippiedom. Arlo Guthrie is star and symbol, but his humanistic evocations get lost in a confused vehicle. Too forced. Dec. 3, (7-9-11) SUB ++

BANANAS Reality murdered by Woody Allen, and laughs have fun. Laughs have fun? Sure,they're not mannered or aimed, just inspired and insane. Amherst Cinema +++++

CASTAWAY COWBOY More kid Disney. Mt. Farms 4. +++

DAY OF THE DOLPHIN. George C. Scott stars in this directionless film that needs more of a script and a director. About dolphins, man, and one's inherent superiority over the other. Not a mystery. Campus Cinemas (7 & 9) +++

THE GAMBLER. Campus Cinema (7 & 9) +++

GROOVE TUBE Much more good than bad, this film begins to explore the universe of satire easily aimed at the boob tube. Writer-director Ken Shapiro fashions inventive skits dealing mostly with unreal TV turnabouts that interestingly end with the 'what would happen if you acted out a movie in real life' skit. Get it from both sides. Mt. Farms 4. ++++

JUGGERNAUT. One of the better of the current disaster series of movies, mainly due to Richard Lester's directional skills. +++

KING OF HEARTS. One of the most overrated and deceptive films of all time. This is a sentimental, unreal 'isn't life too bad' oversimplification that does all the thinking for you. You don't have to do a thing but sympathize. Made for nineteen year-old females living in female dorms to fall in love with, remember as a fond college memory, but never, never live by any of the values of the film! Campus Cinemas (7 & 9) ++

THE OWL & THE PUSSYCAT Naughty, but how naughty can this tale be with Barbara Streisand in it? And Blood, Sweat & Tears doing the soundtrack? At least it has Walter Mathau. Dec. 1, (7 & 9) SUB ++

THE SHAGGY DOG More and more Disney while you're away playing with THE BEARS AND I. See what you're missing? Academy of Music, N'Hamp. ++

SLEEPER Woody goes way ahead, but leaves something behind. It's still funnier than most, but he relies too much on his abilities as a slapstick artist to compare favorably with his others. Amherst Cinema ++++

THE TRIAL OF BILLY JACK Brains take a holiday as God and simpleton love continue to triumph. Very restful. Mt. Farms 4. +

93 perish in year's worst air disaster

From Wire Services

UPPERVILLE, Va. — A Trans World Airways Boeing 727, battling heavy rain and turbulent winds as it neared Washington's Dulles airport on a flight from the Midwest, slammed into a mountaintop yesterday and killed all 93 persons aboard.

Capt. William Carvelle of the State Police declared "there are no survivors" after rescue workers had combed for hours through the wreckage on Mount Weather, a foothill of the Blue Ridge Mountains.

It was the worst U.S. air disaster of 1974 and the second major crash of the year involving a TWA flight.

The three-engine jetliner, carrying 86 passengers and a crew of seven, gouged through trees and burst apart against a rock embankment only a mile and a half from the top-secret Mt. Weather underground government base.

Rescue workers found the woods littered with broken bodies, blazing debris and splintered timber. The only indentifiable parts of the shattered silver jet were part of its tail, imblazoned in red with the letters "TWA," and one section of the fuselage with four window frames intact.

One eyewitness compared the smoky, fog-shrouded scene to something out of World War II. "There were absolutely no survivors and it will be difficult to identify many of the remains because of their condition," said Dr. George Hocker, the Loudoun County medical officer.

The plane, TWA's Flight 514, was inaugurating the winter season addition of Indianapolis, Ind., to a route that earlier had linked Columbus, Ohio, with Washington.

Airline officials said 39 of the crash victims boarded the flight at Indianapolis and the rest got on when it stopped in Columbus. A spokesman said three stewardesses were from Kansas City, while a fourth was from Chicago. The cockpit crew was from Los Angeles, the spokesman said.

Identities of the victims were withheld pending notification of their families. But a TWA spokesman in Indianapolis said there were no congressmen, no election officials and no other "prominent persons" aboard.

A decision to return to the East Coast early and attend the Army-Navy football game probably saved the life of Rep. William Bray, (R-Ind.), whose son said the congressman normally would have been aboard the flight that crashed.

The worst previous U.S. air disaster of the year was the crash Sept. 11 of an Eastern Airlines DC9 near Charlotte, N.C., in which 70 persons died. Three days earlier, a TWA jetliner plunged into the Ionian Sea off Greece and killed 88 persons.

Flight 514 went down yesterday about 45 miles west of Washington,

For decent housing

SOP reveals 6 point plan

The preliminary findings of the Student Organizing Project's (S.O.P.) investigation of student housing at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst have been completed, student member John Pepi announced yesterday. As a result of the investigations, the S.O.P. is now calling upon students, faculty, the university administration, the communities of the Pioneer Valley, and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to endorse and help implement a Six Point Plan for Decent Housing outlined below.

The S.O.P. said they have found no obstacles, of either a legal or principled nature, to any part of this plan. Pepi said the S.O.P. has not only to be in the interests of students, but to be totally consistent both with the educational mission of the University of Massachusetts and with the best interests of the people of Massachusetts."

"We recognize, of course, that there may be some individuals in positions of authority who would like to pay the price of their past mistakes by picking the pockets which are most readily available — those of students — and who may consequently oppose the financial aspects of this Six Point Plan," he added.

A few others who have become accustomed to exercising illegitimate authority over the personal lives and living environments of students may resist the provisions regarding self-governance, according to Pepi. "But the opposition of the few cannot stifle the will of the many. Students are united in their support of all points in the following Six Point Plan for Decent Housing, and urge its swift implementation," he said.

1. An end to mandatory on-campus housing and meal ticket requirements for students under 21 no later than September, 1975 (We urge an immediate, unequivocal commitment thereto by the university trustees in order to avoid the initiation of a civil rights lawsuit in federal court against the university.);

2. No increases related to residential life costs in students' rents, fees, or tuition. (Implicit is the unacceptability of any new fee assessments.);

3. Stringent, effective, enforceable rent control for Amherst and surrounding communities by September, 1975;

4. Construction of 500 units of student-owned cooperative housing in unused university land originally planned for residential life, to be completed by September, 1976;

5. Total and autonomous student self-governance of all residential housing and residential life policies by September, 1975; and

6. Significant increases in future fiscal years in monies allocated to physical improvements and educational programming out of both the residential life and academic budgets of the university.

At hearings held last month, the Student Organizing Project called upon various University officials to testify on student housing. They were asked to explain university residential life policies in six regards: 1) to defend the overall desirability of the living environment afforded students, including its conduciveness to the primary educational mission of the university; 2) to demonstrate the university's commitment to making centers of student life into centers of learning as well, i.e. to the so-called living-learning concept; 3) to defend the governance process by which decisions concerning residential life are made; to defend the policy which requires students under 21 to live on-campus; 5) to defend the financial policies under which residential facilities and programs are paid for, and the way in which the costs thereof are distributed; and 6) to justify university policy with regards to influencing the general desirability of off-campus housing in terms of costs, habitability, and learning.

The inadequacy of the university's response on all of these items, admitted in many cases even by those who testified, led directly to the recommendations in the Student Organizing Project's Six Point Plan, Pepi said.

Wilbur Mills appears on stage, says Fanne Foxe can be a star

By SETH MYDANS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., who appeared on stage Saturday night with stripped Fanne Foxe, said Sunday he's written a film for her called "It's Not Burlesque" and thinks it will make her a star.

Mills was in Boston to see Miss Foxe, whom he called "my little Argentine hillbilly," as she closed out a two-week engagement at $3,000 a week at the Pilgrim Theatre — her first performance since she was involved with him in an incident Oct. 7 in Washington.

"This won't ruin me," said Mills, whose career had seemed endangered after the Oct. 7 incident at the Washington tidal Basin. "Nothing can ruin me."

"I've been an angel to a lot of people," Mills said. "I'm going to make a movie star out of her. She's better than Gypsy Rose Lee."

The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee said he also has written a script about former President Richard M. Nixon, which is in the hands of a movie producer.

Mills was first spotted by an Associated Press reporter as he peered from behind a backstage door, wearing large dark glasses.

He told the reporter he was trying to escape unnoticed from the theater following an article in the Boston Sunday Herald Advertiser that he had made an on-stage appearance with the stripper Saturday night.

He confirmed that he appeared on stage following Miss Foxe's final curtain call after which she told the audience:

"I'd like you to meet somebody. Mr. Mills, Mr. Mills, where are you?" she asked. Mills was led on stage and left minutes later, arm in arm with the 38-year-old stripper.

Mills, who appeared on Sunday to have trouble with his balance and asked for a chair while being photographed, said he was under heavy sedation for a heart condition. He said it was his second attack.

Asked about his medication, he said, "I don't know what it is but it makes me drunk."

In an interview in Miss Foxe's dressing room, Mills told The Associated Press his movie ideas had been submitted to Lou

Ate on Thanksgiving

UMass sophomore ends two week fast

Mary Colwell, the 23 year old UMass sophomore who was fasting in protest to the world-wide famine conditions, ended her two-week fast on Thanksgiving Day, 25 pounds lighter.

Colwell, a nursing major, had been drinking only water during the previous week, and only fruit juices during her first week of fasting.

Because she has not eaten any solid foods for two weeks, she said she would drink juices for a few days until her system readjusted to solids.

"The experience changed my life," Colwell told a Hampshire Gazette reporter Friday. "I was sick of reading about hunger and not doing anything about it," Colwell explained. She said she and others were proposing that Americans eat less and waste less to relieve the food shortage.

She said she and her husband, A. J. LaFleur, had agreed to cut down on their food consumption as a result of the fast. LaFleur did not take part in his wife's fast, but he did cut down on food during the two-week period.

The couple has also decided they will not eat meat any more as a result of the experinece. "There are plenty of substitutes for meat," Colwell said. She said she plans to substitute with soybeans, seeds and nuts for her protein requirement.

Staff Photo by Dennis Conlon

Mary Colwell

Colwell confessed she was becoming weak during the last few days of the fast, but she had had a "good reaction" from other UMass students.

Colwell said her concern with the food problem grew out of publicity on the recent World Food Conference in Rome and was inspired by the one-year fast of comedian Dick Gregory in protest of the Vietnam War.

She said she publicized her fast because "I realized it wouldn't do any good unless it was publicized."

But she said "it's an individual thing," adding that each family must decide how they can go about reducing food consumption in their own way.

Colwell's fast coincided with the nation-wide student one-day fast for Oxfam two weeks ago.

One dollar sought from each student

"Help the Hungry" representatives are beginning today to collect one dollar from every student on campus for relief to famine-stricken countries.

While representatives are knocking on each door in dormitories for the donation, a table will be set up today and tomorrow in the Campus Center Concourse where commuters may donate a dollar to the campaign.

In addition, a "dunk-a-thon" will be held on the Concourse where for 25 cents students will have a chance to pour a bucket of water over the heads of such campus personalities as Don McGilvray, Fred Weiss and Mark Tripuka.

[See page 10 for the complete listings of those who'll be dunked and their times.]

The week-long campaign is being sponsored by the Daily Collegian. The money collected will be given to Oxfam-American, which operates out of Boston.

The non-political relief group uses a minimum amount of funds to operate their organization so that nearly all of the money goes into relief projects.

The organization gives money to needy people regardless of the country or the people's political affiliations. Funds raised by Oxfam, for instance, have already been used for a mountain village in Honduras, buffalo farmers in India, and starving people in Ethiopia.

In addition to providing food for the people, Oxfam also uses the money to help the "general situation" which causes the famine: helping Tuareg tribesman in Ethiopia to construct stone walls to halt wind and water erosion, and getting irrigation into drought areas.

Help in the campus campaign has been given by the Freshman Global Survival Program and Campus Center workers who'll set up the "dunk-a-thon" today.

Other newspapers have also reported the "Help the Hungry" campaign, including the Boston Globe and the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Don McGilvary

The drive will end Friday. A complete breakdown of how much money was given by the commuters, individual dormitories, and area businesses will be published.

Collegian News Editor Mike Kneeland, the campaign's organizer, says he's not setting any money goal. He expects, however, that the campaign will be a big success.

"The cause is certainly worthwhile," Kneeland said yesterday, "and I'm sure everyone on campus will gladly give the one dollar."

Donations, he said, have already been received in the Collegian office via students walking in and the mail.

five miles north of Upperville and 20 miles from Dulles. The plane had been diverted to Dulles from Washington National Airport, its planned destination, because of bad weather.

Dr. George Hocker, Loudoun County medical examiner, said the plane hit just below the summit and cut a swath 60 to 70 yards wide and about a mile long. "There were just chunks of metal and total destruction," he said.

The Federal Aviation Administration said there were no unusual communications from the plane before the crash, "just routine flight conversation."

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman said the first hint of trouble came when the big plane disappeared from radar screens about 11:10 a.m. EST.

Emergency vehicles from three counties rushed to the crash scene a desolate region of 1,700 foot mountain ridges dotted with only a few isolated farm houses but withdrew when they found no survivors.

Wasserman at Universal City.

The interview in the bare, brightly lit dressing room, was conducted in the presence of Miss Foxe and her estranged husband, Eduardo Battistella.

"This is Miss Foxe's husband, who's my best friend," Mills said. "He came at my request." Mr. Battistella said he had flown from Washington Friday with Mr. Mills in a private airplane.

Miss Foxe, whose real name is Annabel Battistella, and her estranged husband repeatedly told Mills to be more guarded before a reporter.

"Aw hell," Mills said, gripping the reporter's knee, "I like you."

Mills later embraced the reporter, and offered him a job in Washington.

Mills said he had launched the stage careers of 14 or 15 other performers, but declined to name them.

"I'm always interested in a piece of property," he said. "The last one flopped. Shirley MacLaine just flopped." He would not explain his statement or say if he had sponsored Miss MacLaine.

(Whether or not the man making the comments yesterday was Wilbur Mills was raised by another wire service and some newspapers, but an editor in New York said the AP "will stick by our Boston bureau."

(AP national desk editor Robert Weller said a photograph taken yesterday confirmed the man's identity as Mills. He said the AP's Washington bureau was attempting to talk to Mill's wife.

(The Arkansas Congressman was believed to have left Boston by air for Washington yesterday afternoon, but both Washington airports were closed by bad weather, making landing impossible.

(It was not immediately known where he was last night or where he had stayed while in Boston.

The morning after the night before

By TED SMITH
Room to More

Have you been hung over lately?

For those of you who drink moderately, and on occasion have overindulged, you may have found the following morning to have been most disagreeable. This disagreeable condition, commonly referred to as a hangover, does have a physiological basis and is not necessarily a manifestation of guilt or anxiety feelings stemming from what may have occurred during the night before (although this, too, may enter into the overall gloom experienced during the following day).

The five most common symptoms experienced during the hangover of a moderate drinker are: 1) nausea and upset stomach; 2) fatigue; 3) headache; 4) thirst; 5) irritability and jittery nerves. Let us now look at each symptom and its causes. It should be noted that the cause of some of these symptoms is based more on hypothesis than fact.

Nausea and upset stomach. Alcohol is a gastric irritant. The consumption of even moderate amounts causes local irritation of the mucosa covering the stomach. It has also been suggested that acetaldehyde, a byproduct in the breakdown of alcohol in the body, can cause nausea.

Fatigue. Alcohol, which is almost entirely oxidized within the body, is a source of energy which unlike food, cannot be stored by the body in the form of fat. Fatigue then, can result from a higher than normal level of activity while drinking. This frequently is a reaction to a decrease in inhibition and a readily available source of energy.

Headache. Headache may be a reaction to fatigue and to a low blood sugar level. One of the effects of alcohol intake is to increase the blood sugar level until about one hour after ingestion. This is followed by a decrease several hours later to a low blood sugar level. The headache may also be partly due to an allergic reaction to congeners, some of which are quite toxic.

Congeners are natural products of fermentation and are found in every alcoholic beverage. Congeners are what make the various beverages different in smell, taste, and color.

Thirst. Alcohol acts on the brain to decrease the output of anti-diuretic hormone (ADH). This in turn, increases excretion of more bodily fluids than is taken in with the alcoholic beverages. Alcohol also causes fluid inside the cells to move outside the cells. This cellular dehydration, without a decrease in total body fluid, can be the basis for an increase in thirst.

Irritability and jittery nerves. Irritability and the accompanying jittery nerves may be due to the fact that alcohol disrupts normal REM (rapid eye movement) sleep. REM sleep is associated with dreaming, and the placement of data acquired during the conscious state into different levels of memory storage for future reference. Experiments have shown that lack of REM sleep can indeed cause irritability, and depending upon the duration of this disruption, can bring about acute metal agitation. Barbiturates are also known to interfere with REM sleep, which has caused many physicians to reassess their prescribing drug products with such properties.

Some authorities are quick to point out that a hangover is merely a set of side effects encountered after the desired effects of an ingested drug wears off -- the drug in this case being ethanol (alcohol). Others have described hangover as a mild form of withdrawal sickness. Medical science, with all its advances, has yet to come up with a cure for the hangover. It would seem that a before the fact approach is well advised. Simply stated if you don't overindulge you won't be forced to endure the consequences. Much of this information is taken from Chap. 6, Drugs, Society & Human Behavior by Oakley S. Ray - 1972. C.V. Mosby Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Room to Move will be conducting discussion groups, in the near future, for individuals interested in any area related to alcohol. Watch for an announcement as to the time and place in the Collegian notices section.

Campus book warehouse has new annex manager

What does it take to manage a book store stocked with thousands of titles which make up a list 200 pages long?

"Broad shoulders and a sense of humor," according to Ann G. Broga.

Broga is the new text book annex manager. She's just arrived from running a book store at Westfield State College one tenth the size of the UMass facility.

But there she did it all and here she's a specialist. She's running an 8000 square foot, warehouse-like, million-dollar department that profits little and serves many.

Books are ordered on the basis of faculty needs. These needs are determined by requests for books, estimates and historical data. The books are sold to UMass students with a 5 per cent discount for hardcover texts.

There's a hitch. The books that aren't sold are returned to the publishers. If the books are outdated the publisher may refuse them. As a result, the book annex will lose money.

What profit is made is returned to the students through the reduction of the campus center fee.

The trick is to move fast, according to Broga. Overall, the operation is one of the soundest among universities in the United States.

Broga has some changes in mind, however.

She plans to rearrange the annex so it will be easier for students to find the textbooks they need. She's going to look for more used books for which demand exceeds supply at bargain basement prices.

Most importantly, Broga's going to establish a closer relationship with the faculty so she can meet their needs efficiently.

In the meantime she's getting some help from the University computer. It's being programmed for inventory control and text book ordering. Thumbing through cards to ascertain usage will become a thing of the past.

"It's a big challenge and I love challenges," Broga concluded.

Project PULSE

Survey results indicate students like Collegian

By a Staff Reporter

A random telephone survey of 140 UMies on Wednesday November 20 shows undergraduates generally satisfied with the content of The Collegian, survey results made available last week reveal.

The survey, conducted by Project PULSE, showed that a statistically-random sample of undergraduates generally support inclusion of non-campus news in the paper, and would favor additional 5-College and town news in addition to campus coverage. Only 4 per cent said there should be less AP and UPI news.

PULSE is a student opinion survey project which provides polls on a variety of campus issues. Funded by the administration and based in Whitmore, it is directed by Ann C. Luciano.

The Collegian survey was conducted by PULSE at the request of the managing editor to assess readability, funding and the Below the Salt supplement. It is comparable to a similar PULSE survey done last spring.

Of 242 students sought by phone, 95 were not in, 7 refused to answer questions, and only 7 of the other 140 said they do not read The Collegian. 133, or 95 per cent were readers.

Questions were designed by the editors, Luciano and Prof. of Communications Theory Jennings Bryant.

Among significant survey results:

--92 per cent of the undergraduate respondents would rather have the Student Senate continue to subsidize The Collegian -- over half the students rejected the other options.

--54 per cent believe the Collegian to be biased in some way and 83 per cent believe it should strive for "objective" reporting.

--55 per cent read the news sections of the paper first; 17 per cent the sports section; 14 per cent the editorial section; 7 per cent horoscope, comics and crossword page. Last spring, only 28 per cent read the news section first.

--31 per cent of the respondents cited The Collegian as their "major source of all news" and 67 per cent said it was their "major source of campus news but not of non-campus news."

--63 per cent said Below the Salt is a valuable supplement to The Collegian and should be continued. However, 27 per cent said they seldom or never read the Thursday arts-life supplement.

Undergraduate support for continued senate funding for the newspaper comes at a time when elected editors are considering eliminating the $80,000 senate subsidy the paper asks each year. They say the paper can support itself on $170,000 of annual advertising revenue alone.

Respondents rejected increased advertising in the paper to eliminate the senate subsidy by a 2.1 margin -- 62 per cent to 38 per cent. But by a slimmer margin (58 per cent to 42 per cent) they said they would accept a paper reduced in number of pages in order to save the $80,000.

However, only 40 per cent of those responding said they would be willing to pay a nickel a day to support publication of the paper if the senate subsidy were wiped out. If all then bought the paper, the circulation revenue would not make-up for the lost senate funds.

Current circulation of the Collegian is 18,500. If only 40 per cent of 18,000 undergraduates read the paper, circulation would drop to about 8,000. With 7,000 papers bought daily, each costing a nickel, $350 would be realized.

With 150 issues per year, the newspaper would retain $52,500 yearly in circulation revenues. The figure compares with the present $80,000 senate subsidy.

In order for the $80,000 to be equaled by circulation revenues alone, 10,600 undergraduates would need to subscribe to The Collegian at 5 cents per day. That corresponds to 56 per cent of the undergraduates are subscribers, as compared with the 40 per cent who said they would.

A decreased circulation (to 10,600) would decrease newsprint costs, but advertisers would also be expected to be less willing to buy ads at the current rate because of the smaller audience.

In this survey, 55 per cent of the respondents read news sections first. An identical question asked on a similar survey of undergraduates last spring showed only 28 per cent reading news first. In that survey the favored section was editorial (34 per cent) with sports almost equal to news (22 per cent).

But 60 per cent said there is "too little" Amherst and 5-College news, while 31 per cent said there was the right amount. A small majority of students 56 per cent felt the amount of photography is "about right" while 41 per cent thought there should be more.

45 per cent of the undergraduates surveyed said The Collegian has "generally" been "somewhat sensitive" to Black, Third World and feminist issues, and an additional 32 per cent think the paper has been "sensitive".

54 per cent believe the paper to be biased. Of those approximately half the paper's readership 82 per cent felt the paper biased on campus issues, 25 per cent town; 31 per cent state and 46 per cent national issues.

The percentages add up to more than 100 because many respondents indicated bias in more than one of the four subject areas. Since the percentages only include the 54 per cent who thought the paper bias in some way, only 45 per cent thought it bias in campus news.

U.S. Congressman Wilbur Mills, (D-Ark) visits stripper Fanne Foxe in her dressing room prior to her appearance on stage at the Pilgrim Burlesque Theatre. Miss Foxe, better known as Mrs. Annabel Battistella, who was accompanying Mills during the infamous tidal basin incident in Washington was promised a movie career by the Congressman.

Mr. Mills says he can get Ms. Foxe into the movies

BOSTON (AP) - Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., appeared on stage Saturday night with stripper Fanne Foxe, calling her "my little old Argentine hillbilly" and saying he can get her into the movies, the Boston Sunday Herald Advertiser reported.

The surprise appearance of Mills came at the end of Miss Foxe's final performance at the Pilgrim Theatre burlesque house, where she has been doing a $3,000-a-week act.

Although Mills' career had seemed endangered after he was involved in an incident with her in Washington Oct. 7, the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee showed little hesitation about identifying with her during an interview with the newspaper.

"She's my little old Argentine hillbilly and I've come here to see her dance. She has a wonderful act and if she wants to, I know I can get her into the movies," Mills said in the interview.

The Herald Advertiser said MIlls arrived in Boston Friday night to watch her performance. At the end of Miss Foxe's final act Saturday about 11:30 p.m., she took a final curtain call and then told the audience, according the the Herald Advertiser:

"I'd like you to meet somebody. Mr. Mills. Mr. Mills, where are you? she said into the darkened theater.

Mills then was led onto the stage and minutes later he left arm-in-arm with Miss Foxe, 38, known as the "Argentine Firecracker."

Referring to the Tidal Basin incident in Washington before the election, Mills said "This darned publicity didn't hurt me a bit...if anything it helped me," the newspaper quoted him.

After the incident, Mills had conceded he should have "avoided foreigners who drink champagne," referring to Miss Foxe, and made repeated apologies to his wife and his constituents.

Miss Foxe, divorced and the mother of three, wore a red wig as she sat beside Mills for the interview in the theater office.

1976 may bring jam-ups to historic East coast

WASHINGTON [AP] — Millions of tourists may have more trouble getting to the 1976 Bicentennial celebrations in the East than several hundred British troops had getting through Lexington and Concord 200 years ago.

This is the implication of a report by the Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies on problems faced by the states of the "Colonial Corridor," where the bulk of the Bicentennial programs will be held.

"It's a warning of possible widespread inconvenience, congestion and irritation," said the Bicentennial Council of the Thirteen Original States, which commissioned the study.

The Bicentennial celebration, as planned, will be a loosely structured series of events at historical sites throughout the country. The report predicts the total attendance figures for all the events will be between 550 million and 750 million persons.

The massive influx won't be accommodated unless public transportation and tourist information centers are upgraded, the report says.

A key problem is the possibility that a gasoline shortage will send visitors flocking to trains, planes and buses, which are now in woefully inadequate supply to carry the enormous crowds expected, the study says.

In addition, the loose planning and sparse information now being given to travel organizations will harm tourists' ability to coordinate their trips to take advantage of all the activities available.

UMW head predicts approval

Miners vote today on contract

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (UPI) — The United Mine Workers yesterday put on an 11th-hour, radio-TV informational blitz to persuade striking coal miners to approve a new three-year wage contract granting them a 64 per cent increase in economic benefits.

For the first time in the union's history, the 120,000 miners will vote today on whether to ratify or reject a working agreement.

The results of the secret-ballot vote may be known Tuesday at the union's headquarters in Washington.

If approved, as predicted by union leaders despite pockets of opposition, the miners could be back to work this week, perhaps as early as Wednesday. They went on strike Nov. 12.

UMW president Arnold Miller predicted a "yes" vote of at least 60 per cent. Union vice president Mike Trbovich said the agreement would be approved handily if "the miners understand it."

Toward that end, the union arranged for radio and television announcements throughout the day explaining contract provisions to the rank and file.

Miller, Trbovich and other UMW international and district officers traveled through the coal fields, speaking at meetings and talking with miners on the streets.

The informational blitz was concentrated in the coal fields of Appalachia, particularly in southern West Virginia where the union's two largest districts were located and where the most vocal opposition to the contract emerged.

Dissident miners traveled roads in Raleigh County, W. Va., with "Vote it down" signs attached to their automobiles.

They protested mostly over the lack of a right-to-strike clause in the proposed contract.

The contract would permit individual miners to walk off the job if a safety hazard were detected, but the dissenters wanted the right to strike en masse if a danger arose in a mine.

Scattered opposition also was reported in Illinois, Ohio and some other states.

In weekend travels through West Virginia, Miller told miners the union negotiators "got as much as we can get" and cautioned that rejection of the contract could result in the strike lasting at least five more weeks, draining UMW funds and dealing a severe blow to the country's sagging economy.

Bus objectors march on Dukakis

BOSTON [UPI] — About 5,000 anti-busing demonstrators motorcaded to the home of Gov.-Elect Michael S. Dukakis yesterday, demanding an end to Boston's court-ordered public school desegregation program.

Police reported that traffic in a number of areas in the city, including heavily traveled Storrow Drive, was badly jammed up as between 2,500 and 3,000 cars journeyed to Dukakis' Brookline home in a number of motorcades.

In most cases the cars were decked out in American and Irish flags and anti-busing posters as they made their way through Sunday traffic, headlights on and horns tooting.

The first demonstrators arrived at the Dukakis home about 1 p.m. and the last of them were gone by 4 p.m., police said. Although many of the demonstrators left their cars to stand outside the home, Dukakis did not make an appearance.

There were no incidents or arrests.

House reformers lobby freshman

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Congressional reformers lobbied the freshman class of 75 House Democrats yesterday to support a host of proposed reforms for the 94th Congress.

The new members - elect, along with 216 incumbent Democratic carry-overs, meet in an unprecedented early party caucus Monday to get a jump on organizing the House before the 94th Congress convenes Jan. 14.

The 144 House Republicans in the new Congress also meet Monday to decide a five-way race for Whip, the No. 2 House GOP leadership post, and a two-man contest for chairman of the Republican Conference, the No. 3 spot.

The early organization plan, adopted this fall, applies only to the House. The Senate plans to do its organizing as usual after the new Congress convenes. Only House incumbents and new members can participate in the organization meetings - retiring or defeated incumbents are barred.

Democrats will decide one crucial election-caucus chairman-before taking up controversial reform proposals put forth by the Democratic Study Group, a private organization of about 150 moderate to liberal House Democrats.

The DSG executive committee invited new Democrats to a reception Sunday to urge support of the following reform proposals the group will put to the caucus:

-Take committee assignment power away from the Democrats on the House Ways and Means Committee, who have traditionally had it, and give it to the Democratic Steering committee, a 21-member group of leaders.

-Enlarge Ways and Means, the tax-writing panel, from its present 25 members to at least 37. Chairman Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., supports enlargement to 31 members.

-Require that all recorded votes in closed-door caucus sessions be available to members, meaning they would be made public.

-Make it easier for freshmen and junior members to get the subcommittee assignments they seek.

-Restore proxy voting in committees. A committee reform resolution approved in October banned proxy votes.

Power struggle seen as Dems meet

WASHINGTON (UPI) - This is the week the Democrats hang out their laundry in Kansas City. Their leaders are hoping the display won't be as tattered as the last display two years ago at Miami Beach.

The 1974 Conference on Democratic Party Organization and Policy, which everyone is calling the "mini-convention," convenes Friday with 2,035 delegates eligible to vote on the details of an official Democratic charter, the first formal constitution any major U.S. political party has attempted to write.

The meeting, through Sunday, is expected to draw 5,000 persons from all over the nation.

There is more than enough in the 17-page draft charter prepared for the mini-convention by a special party commission to ignite the usual Democratic family fracas. But a good deal more than haggling over words is at stake: beneath the surface there still is a bitter struggle underway for control of the nation's majority political party.

Before 1968, Democrats used to fight about civil rights at their national gatherings. Six years ago, they began battling about the Vietnam War as the specific issue in a general disagreement over the U.S. role in world affairs. The sides that formed then-regulars who backed the thrust of the party's post World War II Cold War policies, and reformers who demanded a top to bottom reappraisal of the nation's foreign policy-remain as the core of internal debate within the Democratic Party.

This party schism now has permeated practically all Democratic affairs. What began as an essentially white, middle class protest against an unpopular war began, attracting allies in other movements and other groups - among blacks seeking to translate their civil rights efforts of the 1960's into political action and influence, among women responding to the surge of liberation and among young people told that politics, not campus uprisings, would change the world.

Lockheed rejects Arab investment bid

BURBANK, Calif. [UPI] — Lockheed Aircraft Corp., the nation's largest defense contractor, confirmed yesterday that it received but turned down an offer by an Arab group to invest $100 million in Lockheed for controlling interest.

"The offer was made about nine months ago, but it's really a piece of ancient history now," said William D. Perreault, a Lockheed vice president.

"The offer was not taken to Lockheed's board of directors and it wasn't discussed with the Defense Department," he said.

The Washington Post reported Sunday that the Arab investment plan was confirmed Friday by Roger Tamarz, a Harvard-educated Lebanese investment banker who heads the First Arabian Corp. in Beirut.

Israel says guerrillas sought hostages

By THOMAS ACKERMAN

TEL AVIV (UPI) — Arab guerrillas who killed a Moslem Israeli and seriously wounded his wife in a northern border village were bent on capturing Jewish hostages for the release of their jailed comrades, military sources said yesterday.

Israeli gunners shelled two areas of southern Lebanon Sunday with 120mm mortars in routine preventive action against suspected guerrilla bases.

Two Hebrew-speaking guerrillas of the Al Fatah organization surrendered to Israeli troops early Sunday after telling a daughter of the couple they were sorry after they discovered the family was not Jewish, local residents said.

The military command in Tel Aviv said one of the Arab gunmen was slightly wounded, apparently from one of his own ricocheting bullets.

Afro-Am now in process of revitalizing itself

The Afro-American Society is now in the process of revitalizing itself in order that it may better serve the community. Towards this end we need the time and support of all the Black students on campus.

The Afro-American Society organized in 1966 under the leadership of Cheryl Evans with approximately twenty members. In the fall of 1968 membership grew to one hundred-twenty. This group marched on Whitmore with twenty demands some of which were, a Black Studies Department, Black Cultural Center, the hiring of more Black administrators and faculty, etc.. Most of these demands were agreed to and more or less paved the way for the present Black community in Amherst which consists of the Black Cultural Center, the Black Studies Department, Black Mass Communications Project, Black administrators such as Chancellor Randolph Bromery, and all other Black organizations on campus. The society was also instrumental in petitioning for more funds for the CCEBS program during a period where it was indefinite as to whether the program would be refunded for upcoming years. It was involved in sponsoring such projects as an annual Black Arts Festival, was part of the seven college Afro-American Coalition, involved in various community projects and gave it's physical support to the Afro-American Societies at Amherst, Smith, Mount Holyoke and the Springfield Colleges.

The purpose of this organization is to provide a cultural and political environment within which Black students can develop an understanding of the necessity of social change, and begin to cope with the realities here and in the Black community.

Last year the Afro-American Society sponsored such activities as: 1. a rally insupport of the National Anti-Imperialist Conference that sponsored referendums of support for African Liberation Struggles, 2. Co-sponsored the Winter Carni with Webster Lewis and the National Mime Company, 4. the purchasing of art from the works of Valerie Maynard, 5. a political seminar with students from Staten Island Community College, 6. the Black Musicians Conference, 7. the co-sponsoring of the Roy Ayers and Creative Source concerts for homecoming week.

With the hope that we might create a more unified feeling amongst the Black population of the university we have tentatively planned such activities as: 1. area-sponsored Dinners, 2. art shows, 3. a phone-in center, 4. a Black phone book, 5. films, and 6. cultural and political trips. Our first event will be a Black community dinner sponsored by the Afro-American Society on February 16, 1975 at which time we will hold a large community meeting open to all concerned Black students interested in becoming active members of the Afro-American Society.

Remember this is your organization and in order for it to best serve you we need your active support and participation.

George Phillips

Students must support march against racism

Today in Boston, a racist school boycott, weekly mass demonstrations against "forced bussing", and racist taunts and violence directed at Black students are the cornerstones of a movement which seeks to roll back and defeat desegregation of this city's schools.

What is at stake in Boston are gains won through years of struggle by the civil rights movement of the 1960's. The events in Boston are of national significance.

The civil rights movement that defeated Jim Crow in the south was aided by students all over the United States. A national demonstration against racism has now been called for Dec. 14th by Senator-elect William Owens and a broad range of civil rights, union and other community leaders. A local demonstration to help build it has been called for November 30th. As students we have an obligation to help build this national action. Our actions can be a substantial contribution to the success of the December 14th national mobilization.

A national student Teach-in should be held on Dec. 13 to help build the Dec. 14 national demonstration. Such a teach-in can dramatically explain why we march and help to mobilize the Boston community to participate in the demonstration. By featuring national and local civil rights, union, student and other figures, it can help get publicity and focus attention on the Dec. 14th march and rally. It can help to unmask the real aims of the so-called antibusing movement and it can play a significant role in convincing the honest and decent forces in this area that they can and must stand up against the racist offensive.

The student movement must rekindle its support to the struggle for equal rights for Black people. The racist offensive is a challenge to us. Come to the National Teach-In Against Racism on December 13; ALL OUT FOR THE DECEMBER NATIONAL MARCH AGAINST RACISM to show the world that the bigots do not own the streets of Boston.

Tanzanian Minister on lecture tour

Derek Bryceson, a member of Parliament of Tanzania and Director of National Parks, will speak on "The Serengeti" on December 5 in Gamble Auditorium at Mount Holyoke College at 8:00 p.m.

Mr. Bryceson is presently on a lecture tour of the United States, sponsored by the L.S.B. Leakey Foundation offering illustrated lectures focusing on Tanzania's magnificent animal resources as well as the challenging economic and political aspects of life in a newly independent African nation.

Born in Hankow, China, Mr. Bryceson was educated at Cambridge and later served as a pilot in Britain's Royal Air Force. In 1947 he went to East Africa where he farmed for several years. His nomination, in 1957, as Assistant Minister to the Ministry of Social Services of Tanzania, was but a prelude to the years of public service that followed. In successive years, he has served in the Ministries of Mines and Commerce, Health and Labour, Agriculture, and Health, and in the elections of 1960, 1965 and 1970 was elected as a Member of Parliament for Dar es Salaam. His career climaxed in 1972 when he was appointed to his present post as Director of National Parks in Tanzania.

His discussion on "The Serengeti" will provide a description of the game, the habitat and the animal migrations in the Serengeti Plain and the establishment of the Park System, the ecological situation, and the relationship of agriculture and grazing in Tanzania.

Mr. Bryceson has recently inaugurated a ranger-training program which has a three-fold purpose: to help protect endangered species, to instruct native rangers in habitat management, and to encourage the collection and understanding of information about animal behaviour. What is more, under his leadership, Tanzania has now banned all forms of hunting. The public is invited to attend the lecture.

INDEX editor announces senior portrait bid awarded

The INDEX announced last week that Purdy Studios of Boston has been awarded the senior portrait bid for the 1975 edition of the yearbook.

According to John Neister, editor-in-chief of this year's book, the entire staff is very impressed with the quality and co-operation that has been exhibited by Purdy thus far. Equally impressing is the reputation that Mr. Norman Benrimo, the photographer who will shoot all of the portraits here at UMass, has gained for his work at other colleges such as the University of New Hampshire.

Kermit Plinton, this year's business manager, pointed out that, as last year's senior section editor, he received many complaints about the way the senior portrait photographers from Chicago treated the seniors and their proofs. "This should definitely not happen with Purdy Studios. Their quality and proof mailing system is infinitely better than the last company, so everyone is guaranteed satisfaction."

Mary Skowera, the 1975 senior section editor, is asking seniors to submit a candid, black and white glossy photo, since "the idea and layout seemed to be very popular in last year's book." She is also asking seniors to submit their favorite quote that is "hopefully original and unique" to be added to the section for the 1975 book.

Sittings for Senior Portraits begin this week for January 1975 graduates and will run through the middle of next week. Several night sittings will be held for those students that are student teaching off campus during the day. Appointments can be made outside the Index office on the balcony of the Student Union (Room 409) or by calling 545-2874 in the afternoons.

Winterbreak flight to Rio planned by UMass-NECLAS

UMass and the New England Council of Latin American Studies (UMass-NECLAS) is organizing a charter flight to Rio de Janeiro, Brazil for its members during the Winter break.

This flight leaves December 31 from New York to Rio and returns on January 21. Price of the flight is $330.00 plus a registration fee of $10.00.

Optional features are hotel accommodations in Copacabana and a three-credit course offered through the History Department on Brazilian Civilization and taught in English by Brazilian scholars. This is the second year this charter is being offered. Last year's flight sent 142 people who enjoyed a rich experience during the high summer season in Brazil.

New two year advisory program will provide aquatic information

A two year program called Aquaculture Engineering Advisory Services has been initiated by the Aquaculture Engineering Laboratory, according to Professor John Zahradnik, project leader for UMass.

The program is supported by the National Sea Grant Program, U. S. Dept. of Commerce. The advisory services include technical and scientific aquatic information, bio-engineering systems, educational programs and Youth Sea Farm Institutes similar to 4-H Clubs.

The services are expected to aid shell fishermen, related industries, municipalities and other, organizations.

The program was undertaken by the laboratory in cooperation with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Professor John Huguenin has been assigned to the services headquartered in Wareham.

New to UMass, he was affiliated with Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute where he was an engineer in the biology department. He was responsible for managing the planning, design, construction and operation of the aquaculture research complex at Woods Hole.

His experience includes culturing shellfish, shrimp, lobster, seaweeds and salmonid fish.

Human sexuality weekend workshops scheduled by Everywoman's Center

Registrations are still being accepted for the Human Sexuality Weekend which will be held on December 7th and 8th. This is one of the several workshops offered through the Days and Weekends Program which is sponsored by Everywoman's Center.

This workshop is designed to help women explore the myths, social pressures and previous experiences which have influenced our sexual selves. Work will be toward increased self-awareness, clarification of individual values and increased appreciation for sexuality. Organizers say they will share, support and explore sexuality, masturbation methods, patterns, fantasies and delights.

For further information call Everywoman's Center 545-0883 or come by, Goodell Hall, Room 598.

Bicycle paths being considered

Senator William M. Bulger (D-Bos) announced recently that he is studying a new program to construct bicycle paths throughout Massachusetts.

The proposal if implemented, could provide a strong new incentive to expanding traditional uses of bicycles and to encourage their use in urban areas as an alternative to commuting by automobile.

Bulger stated, "The bicycle can be a tremendous way to get to work as well as great recreation for families. The problem is that bicycles are not compatible with cars. Anyone who has ridden around Boston knows how dangerous it can be to ride on city streets."

The program would establish a Bicycle Path Fund to be used exclusively for constructing paths. A city or town would be able to receive up to 80 per cent reimbursement for the cost of building bike paths that have received prior approval from the Commissioner of Public Safety.

A variety of funding approaches are being looked at including a small charge on bicycles costing over $100, increasing bicycle registration fees, and increasing fees on other recreational vehicles such as snowmobiles and trailbikes. Approval for reimbursement would be given only if there were enough money in the fund at the time. The money would then be set aside on a project by project basis, so that it would be impossible to overdraw on the account.

"We are anxious to have input from interested people," Bulger said. "Europeans have extensively used bicycles for a long time showing that it can be done safely and inexpensively. I think that imaginative programs like this could be a stimulus for saving energy while having fun."

Peace Corps and VISTA reps here

Peace Corps and VISTA representatives will be back at UMass on December 3-5 from 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m. at the Campus Center Concourse. Seniors and graduate students can sign-up for interviews at Berkshire House. Representatives are speaking to interested students about what alternatives are open to them upon graduation.

Mary-Martha Beaton, a recruiter from the Boston office states, "Our October visit was a tremendous success. We spoke to over 250 students about programs available to them and helped 43 students complete applications."

Mary-Martha, a Peace Corps volunteer who served two separate terms in Thailand and Morocco says, "It's important to complete an application early. There is no obligation involved and it does give students another alternative to consider when they graduate. If invited to a program, an individual can either accept, decline or postpone an invitation. The main problem is that it takes 3 months to process an application and as long as 6 months for placement."

There is no formal interview for Peace Corps or VISTA. Everything is based on what a person says on his application.

Sue Alley, a former VISTA volunteer and alumni of UMass asserts that UMass students have a strong commitment and interest in volunteer programs. Peace Corps and VISTA are two programs which allow students to expand on these interests and share their skills with others.

Peace Corps is a two year program in 61 undeveloped countries in Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Pacific. VISTA is a one year program in the United States. Both programs furnish substance living allowances, health benefits, transportation and vacation time.

Migrant worker cause draws support from many

By CARL LUKENS
Staff Reporter

Over 300 people from varied areas and walks of life participated in a demonstration of support for the migrant worker cause in Chelsea last Tuesday, strategically taking place two days before Thanksgiving. It was the first time a group of people supporting the grape and lettuce boycott gained access to the New England Produce Center, Chelsea Market, without being arrested, as was the case four years ago.

The demonstration was an attempt to discourage the buying of grapes on the wholesale level according to march organizers. This march, the periodic picketing of the Market, and other actions like them elsewhere, such as the picketing of the Big Y supermarkets a week after they broke their 3-week old commitment and began selling scab grapes, have apparently been successful.

The marchers were told by Mick Jones, the coordinator of the New England Boycott at the end of the demonstration that "80 per cent of the grapes sent East by the grape growers were on consignment," meaning the growers were selling the grapes for whatever they could get.

news analysis

Other signs of success for the farm workers were stated in a AFL-CIO United Farm Workers phamphlet: USDA unload figures show that grape shipments to the East are down 45 per cent-50 per cent from last year. USDA also reports that there are more grapes in cold storage than in 1969, when the boycott was first won. At present, there are 8 million boxes of grapes in storage. Last year at this time there were only 4 million, in 1969, 5 million.

The demonstrators, despite the wind, slush, cold and snow, assembled at Everett Station in Chelsea at approximately 6 a.m., at which time protest placards and signs were passed out. The group of marchers were aligned in a column approximately 5 abreast, and led along the route and in different chants by marshals, most of whom were AFL-CIO members.

The group of marchers included clergy, the Elderly, union people and people of other causes, students, workers, and even a small family — people from varied walks of life.

The March then proceeded for about 6 city blocks to the New England Produce Center, where they encountered little opposition to their entrance. After marching along the loading docks of the Center and avoiding the many trucks and fewer cars coming and going, the demonstraters assembled outside in 3 rotating rings of more than 100 each. They picketed the entrance to the Produce Center without physically inhibiting the flow of vehicles in and out of the entrance.

The police did not come in any strength until after the marchers had been inside the market, when they placed themselves between the 3 groups of picketers and the entrance to the Market.

The Marchers received varied reactions from the truck drivers and the loading dock workers to their march around the Center. Some workers expressed either amusement, indifference, or less often disturbance, but most seemed to respect the sizeable and strong group that almost continuously chanted and marched, despite the wind and cold.

Chants such as the following could be heard from numb lips: "AFL-CIO says scab grapes have got to go," "We shall not be moved, we shall not be moved, just like a tree standing by the water, we shall not be moved," "Don't buy lettuce, don't buy grapes, don't buy wine that Gallo makes," and "1-2-3-4, don't buy grapes anymore, 5-6-7-8, get Gallo to negotiate, 9-10-11-12, get the grapes off the shelves."

During the demonstration, some of the representatives from other causes passed out literature on their respective causes.

"Probably the most successful and beneficial aspect of the march was the prevalence in the air of a sense of brotherhood and optimism held by the marchers for one another," said one marcher from UMass, wishing to remain nameless, adding, "I got caught up in the whole thing".

The student went on to say that he "left the demonstration with respect for and admiration of the friendly people" with whom he marched.

When asked about the reactions of the workers on the loading docks, the student replied, "I think some of them realize that they have a common cause--that of the working class".

Nature center brings people closer to their environment

The Long Plain Nature Center is a small non-profit organization whose main purpose is to bring people into a more personal relationship with their environment. This is accomplished by bringing together people who already know something about the natural environment with those who want to learn more.

One of the projects this year is to bring interesting people into the Amherst elementary schools to broaden their natural science curriculum. They say they are especially interested in live animals or small exhibits which can be brought into the classrooms to show the kids.

Anyone who feels they have a special interest in some aspect of natural science and would like to share it with others in this way, should call Jackie Speeter (at 665-3463) or Gordon Schimmel (at 545-3480).

Letters to the editor

Ed Cohen - half truth artist

To the Editor:

Ed Cohen's commentary on "Peace in the Middle East" is a skillful collection of half truths about Israeli history and defamations of Israeli society followed by a sanitized statement of support for the PLO and other terrorist groups. He concludes with the earnest hope that Jews will discard Zionism (a term Cohen never defines) and join Palestinian Arabs and surrounding nations in an affirmation of common Semitism. Lest we construe this vision to be racist, we are assured that "each should help the other to advance against exploitation."

No doubt Cohen's motivations are noble. Apparently they were sufficiently noble for him to feel justified in magnifying Israeli social problems and insensitivities while ignoring those of Israel's adversaries. Consider the historical record:

Cohen mentions the 1917 Balfour Declaration promising the creation of a Jewish Homeland in Palestine as a unilateral blow against Palestinian nationalism. He neglects to mention Britain's subsequent creation of the Arab state of Transjordan five years later, a state containing 80 per cent of the land in the Palestinian Mandate. While he mentions British restrictions on Jewish immigration to Palestine, he does not mention that Arab immigration was completely unrestricted in this period and that the non-Jewish population of the remaining portion of Palestine doubled between 1922 and 1947.

Cohen's article contains remarkable examples of understatement. He tells us that "The Jewish population continued to grow, and as it did, Arab objection grew proportionately."

In 1920, 5 Jews were killed and 200 wounded in a pogrom in Jerusalem. In 1921, 47 Jews were killed in similar riots. In 1929, 133 Jews were killed and 339 injured in Safed and Hebron. The "Zionist" victims of these pogroms were orthodox Jews whose communities dated back to the 16th Century and before.

Britain reacted to these events by restricting Jewish immigration. With the dawning of Nazism in Europe, immigration was further reduced.

The article proceeds to leapfrog over the Second World War, the refusal of the Western Powers to accept Jewish refugees, the annihilation of European Jewry, and the refugisation of the remnant that survived. Since Cohen is intent on establishing the guilt of "Zionists" for the enmity between Jew and Arab, he chooses not to mention the role the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem played in collaboration with the Nazis, culminating in his address to a 1943 rally at Nuremburg. Moreover, in his subsequent choice of population statistics for the partition, he chooses to ignore the fact that 100,000 Jerusalem Jews (out of a total citizenry of 165,000) were trapped and placed under seige in an "internationalized" Jerusalem. Nor is mention made of hundreds of thousands of Jews kept in refugee camps in Europe and Cyprus for three years because the British would not let them enter Palestine. No mention is made of the genocidal rhetoric of the Arab leadership at that time and the effect it had on Jews with fresh memories of genocide from three years before. On May 15, 1947, the Secretary General of the Arab League made the infamous statement that "This will be a war of extermination and a momentous massacre which will be spoken of like the Mongolian massacres and the Crusades." Surely such a statement by a member of the anti-Zionist leadership shows at least as much insensitivity as Cohen's quotation from Chaim Weizmann.

Cohen tells us of 750,000 Palestinian refugees. He does not tell us of the evacuation of 700,000 Jews from the Arab world to Israel in the face of pogroms in Libya, Iraq, and Egypt. We read instead a vague allusion to ""'Oriental Jews', Jewish people from Africa and Asia." His purpose in mentioning these Jews at all is to refer to their difficulty in entering Israeli life; he does not deem it fit to mention that Iraqi, Syrian, Egyptian, and Yemeni Jews had their property confiscated upon leaving those countries, that upon entering Israel they were housed in refugee camps, that those camps ceased to exist twelve years ago because of a tremendous national effort towards assimilation.

Further allegations are made regarding Israel's treatment of its Arab citizens and of Arabs in the occupied territories. We are told that Israeli Arabs must carry identification papers at all times. We are not told that all Israeli citizens are required by law to carry identification, as is the practice in many countries. No mention is made of the fact that Israeli citizens, Arabs and Jews, participate in a democratic government in which minority and religious rights are constitutionally guaranteed. Israeli society is far from perfect; however Cohen presents his case against Israeli society only to deny the right of that society to exist. There exist genuinely oppressive states in the Arab World, feudal monarchies and military dictatorships, with enormous social problems. Their right to exist is not an issue, nor is the persecution of Jews still remaining in Iraq and Syria even alluded to in Cohen's article.

Cohen's talent for understatement reaches new levels when he tells us that "...the Palestinian Liberation Organization and various Palestinian movements...have succeeded in keeping the Palestinian people visible and the Palestinian question alive...".

Palestinian terrorist groups have killed 52 and wounded over 100 people at Kiryat Shmona, Ma'alot, Nahariya, and Shamir. The "Zionists" murdered were as often as not women and children. They include Israeli Arabs as well as Jews. This is visibility.

On July 23, 1968, the PLO hijacked an E1A1 plane to Algiers. Since then 38 civilian planes have been attacked or hijacked by terrorists. At Lod airport (May 30, 1972) 26 passengers — mostly tourists from Puerto Rico — were slaughtered and 80 more injured; in Athens (August 5, 1973) 5 people were killed and 54 wounded; in Rome (December 17, 1973) 31 were killed and 30 wounded. The Palestinian Front For the Liberation of Palestine, a rival to the PLO, claimed responsibility for the 1970 explosion of a Swissair jetliner that took 47 lives.

Terrorists have also hijacked a train carrying Russian Jewish refugees, grenaded an Arab market in Gaza (2 dead, 42 injured), the Tel Aviv bus station (12 dead, 50 injured), the Cave of Machpelah in which Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are buried (48 injured) and they have blown up a school bus in Eilat (2 dead, 28 injured).

Israeli responses to this terror against Israeli civilians have been retaliation via aerial bombing of guerrilla bases and refugee camps. These responses have been ineffective, senseless, bloody, and cruel. They have also been condemned as such by the United Nations and much of Jewish world opinion. Palestinian terrorism has not been condemned in the UN or, to my knowledge, by any Arab government except Jordan. Last week such terrorism was legitimized and praised by the UN.

Which brings us to the last point Cohen raises. "The Israelis, Palestinians, and the rest of the Arab world must try to overlook past animosities and work toward a future of peace in the Middle East." It is still possible to envision a Palestine in which Israel is at peace with her neighbors, including a Palestinian Arab state, a Palestine in which the endeavor of building societies of compassion becomes the focus of national energies now devoted to national survival. I cannot believe, however, that this end is served by telling half of a history, as Ed Cohen has done, nor is it served by legitimizing terror and murder by the world community.

Dorm a dump, food repetitive

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter in regard to the housing policy here at UMass. I feel that it is both unfair and unconstitutional that we should be forced to live somewhere because of poor judgement on the part of the university.

It is my understanding from talking to many people that when Southwest was built, huge loans had to be taken out. Along with huge loans come huge payments. These payments cannot be made unless the dorms are kept full. This is the reason for the stringent regulations and the very infrequent exemptions.

I have lived on the same floor for two years now. There are stains on the rugs, writing on the walls and broken windows in the lounge that have been there as long as I can remember, and who knows how long before that. The grafitti on the bathroom walls, long outlasts the people that wrote it. And by the end of the week, the trash room on the floor smells worse than the town dump. Not to mention the conditions on weekends. The bathrooms become disgusting and the blacked out elevators are even worse.

Unfortunately, along with living in the dorms we are forced to eat dining commons food. It is not uncommon to eat chicken two or three nights a week and see the same vegetable two or three days in a row. By halfway through the semester, most students dread meals rather than look forward to them.

When you add it all up, it comes out to this: we are forced to live in dirty, poorly maintained, cramped quarters with no privacy and forced to eat lousy food. I know that I could live much better than I am now for the amount of money that I am forced to pay. I think that it is about time that the University did something about it. It is up to the students to put the pressure on them.

Give to Globe Santa

To the Editor:

It's almost that time of year again.:.friends. Time to start saving money for gifts, holiday cards, decorations and so forth. Soon it will be the season of high spirits, "peace and goodwill towards man." Think of how fortunate you are to share and enjoy the holiday spirit. Well, a lot of families are not as fortunate as yours and mine. During the holiday season, some of these families will not be receiving gifts, eating big dinners and getting new clothes.

Let's help out these families, especially the children. Starting on December 2, we will be having a fund-raising drive for the "Boston Globe Santa" in the campus center. The "Boston Globe Santa" raises money for needy families every year at this time. So I ask you from the bottom of my heart to think about this and help us out if you possibly can. Any contributions will be greatly appreciated. Thank you.

The Icelandic Connection

The White House disclosed today the signing of a new Arms Limitation Pact with the Peoples Republic of Iceland. Press Secretary Ron Nessen elaborated on the details of the plan at a News Conference earlier this morning.

Q: "Mr. Nessen, does the Arms Limitation Pact signed last week with the Soviet Union have anything to do with this new one?"

Nessen: "Why yes it does have some bearings as to the agreement reached by Ford and Brezhnev in an exclusive sanitarium outside of Vladivostok last week. Some people discounted the pact saying it was signed by a bunch of crazies in Siberia, but will thats what they might end up!"

Q: "What about the details of the agreements — how are they alike?"

Nessen: "They are alike in several ways. In this pact with Iceland, we have agreed to set a ceiling on all our nuclear weapons. Since we have a clear superiority on all fronts over the Icelandese, the terms of the agreement allow them to catch up to us in these areas. Once they have achieved parity — Thats It."

Q: "Do you mean to maintain that the road is open for Iceland to build its own nuclear devices and warheads and intercontinental ballistic missiles to deliver them?"

Nessen: "Not only Iceland but Greenland if they want. Its only fair. After all we ARE ahead and shouldn't they be allowed to reach parity. Our security in the vital North Sea is at stake!"

Q: "How will they do it? The Peoples Republic of Iceland or even Greenland lack the facilities to launch such a massive new program of arms production."

Nessen: "Ah! Thats where the second part of our agreement comes in. Much thanks is owed to the patriotic qualities of some of our big companies like Boeing, Lockheed, Dupont and ITT who have stepped in and volunteered to supply Iceland with all of the essentials...all the way from napalm to Trident submarines. Its wonderful what these loyal corporations will do for American Foreign Policy."

Q: "But these companies will be supplying a nation who could conceivably use these weapons against us!"

Nessen: "A mere technicality. The important thing is to live up to our agreement with the Icemen in good faith. That's whats made America strong.

Q: "Are there any other terms that we should know about, or haven't you already done enough."

Nessen: "Why yes, as a matter of fact there are. Since the spirit of these agreements with Russia and Iceland is to reach and maintain a common ceiling of weapons beyond which no one will venture, it has come to our attention that Iceland has one superiority over us.."

Q: "Whats that?"

Nessen: "They have more handguns and tommyguns than we do. And so, in order to reach that parity that we must to achieve world peace, a handgun will be issued and mailed to every man, woman and child in America. That loyal and patriotic organization, the National Rifle Association has volunteered to oversee the distribution to make sure that everybody gets a rod.

Q: "What will turning America, Iceland, Russia and Greenland into armed camps accomplish."

Nessen: "It's simple. As long as everybody builds up to the maximum ceiling of arms there are in the world, and then no more, world peace can surely be kept and nurtured. After all, what sane and logical man or woman would blow his neighbors head off, when he or she knows that his neighbor could easily do the same? It all makes so much perfect sense."

Thanksgiving in retrospect

Sometimes, it's hard to feel thankful at Thanksgiving, but maybe a sense of perspective will help to spark a bit of that holiday spirit. After all, being thankful can be a relative thing.

For example, many of us are not exactly thrilled with President Ford. But then, we don't have Nixon to kick around anymore. That may not be much, but it is something.

For those that fasted November 21, perhaps that one day of self imposed hunger made that turkey dinner all the more enjoyable. It wasn't all that hard to go one day without food. One thing that made it easy was the fact that food was obtainable, and that the hunger was a matter of choice. For myself, at 12:25, I was able to eat in the campus center coffee shop and enjoy it as never before. Unfortunately, the real world hungry aren't half so lucky. When I think about them, I begin to feel thankful.

A cynical friend of mine commented that Americans wasted enough food on Thanksgiving to have fed most of the world's starving. I question the statistics about that, but it does seem that Americans really waste an incredible amount of food. The Boston Globe series about Tuscon trash and the percentage of edible food thrown out is enough to make one wonder whatever happened to the value of thrift.

On a very small scale, we on campus students can feel thankful that for this little vacation we woke up in a room outside of a dormitory. Four days away from roommates, loud stereos, lousy elevators, and from a stair case that has shit in it. A whole weekend without facing bathrooms that make one retch! Then I imagine what it would be like to be a janitor in one of these dorms and I feel really thankful.

For all of us at UMass, Thanksgiving is the beginning of the end to the Fall semester. Midterms are over, and finals about to begin. Those major papers are due with exhausting frequency these days, along with the lengthy lists of books to be read. The number of days left to procrastinate with are becoming few. For some of us, Thanksgiving is a looked forward to time to catch up with all that work. For others, it is a time to forget what it means to be a college student, and get some badly needed rest.

Being a student is in itself something to be thankful for. At least for the time being, all of us are not forced to work full time as secretaries, waitresses, construction workers, or assembly-line workers. Although with the economy going the way it is, we may not be so lucky when we graduate.

If it seems like I'm looking for things to be thankful for, I am. The reason is that after these few days of being thankful, we all have to face those things that I've been comparing our blessings to. I hope everyone had a happy whatever.

The blob devours the S.U.B.

By THOMAS BARRESI

The collapse of the Student Union Building on Thursday (November 21, 1975) was a terrible shock to us all. Who would have thought that a huge fault would develop in the center of our own UMass campus and threaten to draw us all into its slime. The causes of this phenomenon have, until now, been withheld.

It has been reported by Professor Robert Would that the huge fissure where the S.U.B. once stood is now filled with a gooey colloidal substance mixed with various solids causing the disintegration and decomposition of the surrounding land masses. This colloid (apathic sulphate) seems to be in a huge pool at the former site of the S.U.B. and is seeping below the earth's surface, causing the rest of the campus to flow towards, and eventually into, this fault. This astounding phenomenon threatens to suck almost the entire campus into a pool of goop. The only part of the campus that can possibly remain intact is Fort Whitmore. This is due to its solid foundational structure as well as its geologically strategic location; it is built upon a mountain of bullshit, which is resistant to the colloid.

The organic substance in question, known as spiritus initiatum, is consumed in large quantities by FELIX, especially during September and January. The process by which it is extracted involves the introduction of a catalyst known as represton, which produces a destructive by-product, apathic sulphate. Up until now, the extraction process had been conducted in secrecy with no indication of the disaster to come.

The only possible way to counteract apathic sulphate is with a foreign agent called activisma concenite. The use of this compound would, however, chemically bond with spiritus initiatum, forming a new compound, democrappy concernum, to which FELIX is violently allergic. Since the administration at Fort Whitmore is run by FELIX, it is logical to assume that no action to neutralize the incipient by-product will be taken. FELIX lives by ingesting spiritus initiatum and would shrivel up and short-circuit without this staple, which would create havoc within the administration.

Different theories concerning how to solve this problem have been proposed. The S.G.A. (Student Gackers Association) is in favor of attempting arbitration with FELIX. A conference has been scheduled for December 10, 1975. The greatest criticism of the S.G.A.'s method is that since FELIX was programmed to the new B.S. programming system, a highly advanced software package emphasizing inconsideration, he has had an enormous appetite. For this reason, there seems to be little hope for this method.

Another organization, R.S.B. (Rebirth of Student Balls), is in the process of mobilizing a militia. They, quite suitably, are planning to storm Fort Whitmore. Upon occupation, they plan to immediately decapitate King FELIX (And perhaps his Queen Bromery too; we wouldn't have to eat d.c. cake anymore!), and then set up an improvisational dictatorship. This plan seems to be as futile as the former. It is doubtful that any volunteers, let alone weapons, could be effectively assembled and trained before the entire campus is devoured. And, of course, it is common knowledge that Fort Whitmore is guarded by an I.C.B.M. system.

The S.O.P. (Sucker's Orgasm Project) is likely to have the best possible solution. Their primary concern would be to form a student union, and to arouse peoples' interest to the danger. After attaining campus-wide support, which is the fatal weak point of the solution, they would rally and be sure that appropriate action would be taken.

I'd like to emphasize the fact that this situation is a real threat to us all. There is no warning when this dreaded hole will strike again and devour another UMie. It doesn't matter what plan is used; each one of us should get all our shit together! If each of us goes out and gets some activisma concenite together and throws it into the fault, we could keep the ass-holes under control.

University of Massachusetts Amherst Final Examination Schedule December 1974

I. The two-hour examination periods are identified by code numbers according to the following chart:

	FRI DEC 13	SAT DEC 14	MON DEC 16	TUE DEC 17	WED DEC 18	THU DEC 19
8:00 a.m.	1	5	9	13	17	21

COURSE SECTION PD.

ACCTG
120 2 - implies that all sections of ACCTG 120 will be examined FRI DEC 13 10:30 a.m.

ANTH
104 1A 1 - implies that ANTH 104, section 1A will be examined FRI DEC 13 8:00 a.m.
2B 2 - implies that ANTH 104, section 2B will be examined FRI DEC 13 10:30 a.m.

GB FIN
210 2 3 - implies that only section 2 of GB FIN 210 will have an exam, and it will be FRI DEC 13 1:30 p.m.

NOTE: WHEN SECTION NUMBERS WITHIN A COURSE ARE LISTED, ASSUME THAT ANY UNLISTED SECTION IS NOT SCHEDULED FOR AN EXAM.

II. See your instructor for information on the place of examination.

He or she will NOT have this information before November 27.

III. The official academic calendar for 1974-1975 provides for examination periods through Saturday, December 21. The schedule on the next pages does not involve formally scheduled examinations beyond period 23, THU DEC 19 1:30 p.m. - Friday and Saturday, December 20 and 21 are available for make-up examinations if other alternatives fail.

IV. CONFLICTS or MORE THAN TWO EXAMINATIONS IN ONE DAY
Students who have conflicts in their examination schedule (as published herein) or who have more than two examinations scheduled for one calendar day may report to the Schedule Office (168 Whitmore) for resolution of these problems.

THE SCHEDULE OFFICE WILL NOT ASSIST IN RESOLVING PROBLEMS UNLESS THEY ARE REPORTED BEFORE DECEMBER 8, 1974.

Winter warm-up event first of annual series

Wednesday, December 4, the Campus Center Concourse will be alive and bustling with the first annual "Winter Warm Up". Sponsored by the newly formed Outdoor Interest Group, the activities will include films and slide shows related to conservation and opportunities in the outdoors.

The various films will encompass winter touring in the wilds of Canada by John Greene, expedition slides from Hampshire College, and Northwestern mountaineering films by members at the University of Oregon.

Educational seminars will be held for those interested in learning about techniques in winter hiking, ski waxing (by E.M.S.), winter survival skills, and more.

Information concerning the times and places for the workshops will be available at various booths on the concourse level. Speakers and course instructors will be available for conversation in outdoor activities and ecological topics.

The Winter Warm Up includes the first day of registration for Winterim. Thereafter, one may register until Dec. 11, through Peter Temple in the Student Activities Office.

This year, over intercession, organizers say Winterim will fill the educational gap with seminars and colloquia in environmental skills and applications. Courses will vary in subject matter from Outdoor Education to Problems in Environmental Administration.

If successful, this idea may be developed into an extended six credit course next semester, organizers say, besides these seminars offered through Winterim, other departments will sponsor their own classes ranging from Problems in the Environment to Ski-Race Officiating.

All of these seminars will offer between one and three credits, and participation is greatly encouraged for those remaining in the Five-College area during January.

Winterim and the December 4 Winter Warm Up are but two catalysts working towards the establishment of the UMass Outdoor Program, organizers say.

Alcoholism discussion on WMUA

Immediately following tonight's 10 p.m. News, WMUA (91.1FM) will broadcast a discussion on the rising incidence of alcoholism among young people.

Tonight's program is being presented as a special feature on "Focus," WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

Mosakowski's guests for the live, 60-minute forum will include staff and volunteers from "Room To Move," the University's drug counseling center.

Interested listeners are invited to call in questions during tonight's live broadcast.

WMUA

Here's what WMUA, 91.1 FM, will broadcast today:

The disc jockeys are Marc Bauman from 6-10, Scott Bacherman from 10-2, Charles Mann hosts the Drum from 2-6, Ken Irwin from 11-2 in the morning, and Jude Kaitz takes the snowy cold shift from 2-6 tomorrow.

WMUA Specialties:

8:30 a.m., High Tides, Jeff Jawer explains what's happening astrologically.

6:20 - 7:00 p.m., Off The Hook, Eilish Broderick hosts a show which invites listeners to call in.

7:00-7:15 p.m., Quarter Banana, 15 minutes of poetry.

10:15 - 11:15 p.m., Focus, Tonight zeroing in on another subject of interest.

WMUA News can be heard at 7, 8 and 9 a.m., and at 2, 6 and 10 p.m.

From 7:15-10:00 p.m., Vinny Peruzzi hosts Musical Flashbacks; this year in review will be 1972. This is the second to last episode of the semester long series. Listen for the best in music of '72, as well as the news and sports of that year. The last half hour will be the top ten hits.

The program is for people in the University community who have collective interests in the outdoors and its innumerable educational and recreational activities.

To be incorporated are those physical, emotional, and mental learning experiences which are seldom found within the boundaries of a classroom presentation, according to organizers. Curricular and extracurricular activities will be oriented to the human need of being with nature and the importance of the individual role in the decision making process of his experience.

The "Common Adventurer" concept is what the Outdoor Program is all about. It is for those people who choose to interact with a particular wilderness environment, and to assume full responsibility for their own actions in dealing with that environment.

Another goal of the Outdoor Program is to become a resource center for information on all aspects of outdoor activities, organizers say. In addition to initiating its own activities, the Program would be a central source for information on existing academic and recreational outdoor activities which are scattered throughout the Five-College area.

Anyone who would like further information, or who is interested in helping with this program, should contact Peter Temple at 545-2351, in the Student Activities Office, Student Union.

Gestalt art workshop set for next weekend

The New England Center presents a workshop in Gestalt art during the weekend of December 6-8 to be led by Pellar Marion.

Participants will learn how to relate what one does in art into one's behavioral style and then how to relate these skills to mental health and educational settings. For more information call the New England Center, 549-0886.

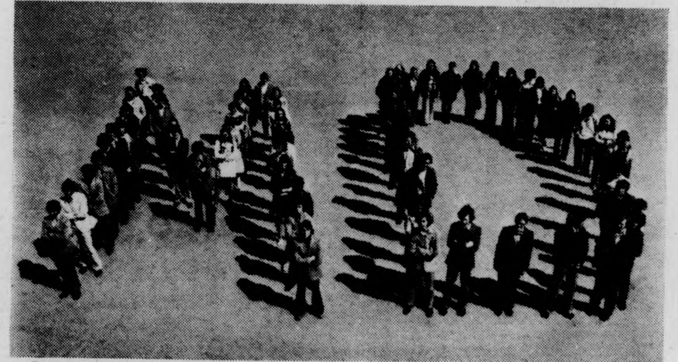
Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program

If you're one of tomorrow's physicians, there are some things you should know today.



For instance. You should know about the opportunities offered by Armed Forces Health Care. As an officer in the service of your choice you'll work in modern facilities. With up-to-date equipment. And modern, up-to-date professionals in every area of Health Care.

For example. You should know that Armed Forces Health Care offers opportunities for initial training and advanced study in practically every specialty. Not to mention the opportunity to practice it.

You should know, too, that we make it possible for you to pursue a post-residency fellowship at either military or civilian institutions.

And if all this strikes a spark, then you should certainly know about our scholarship program.

If you qualify, the tuition for your medical education will be covered fully while you participate in the program. And during that time you'll receive a good monthly stipend.

Just one more thing...we think if you know all the facts, today, you may want to be one of us tomorrow.

Find out. Send in the coupon and get the facts...today.

There are limited openings for academic year 1975-1976.

Winter baseball meetings open

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Trades and expansion were the main topics of discussion as the major league clubowners gathered here Sunday for the annual week-long winter baseball meetings.

With many clubs pairing their rosters three and four players below the required 40-man limit prior to the meetings, a flurry of big trades was anticipated, with superstars Reggie Jackson, Tony Perez and Dick Allen all figuring prominently in the preliminary bartering.

Oakland A's owner Charles O. Finley reportedly has made it known that Jackson, his rightfield superstar, is available for the right offer. The Baltimore Orioles, rich in pitching but noticeably devoid of quality sluggers, have shown the most interest in Jackson — but have been reluctant to yield the pitching Finley is asking in return.

Perez, the 32-year-old slugging Cincinnati first baseman, is a more likely swap figure. The Reds, seeking a front line pitcher and a third baseman, are ready to surrender Perez. The Red Sox and Orioles in the American League are the early bidders.

Allen, the moody White Sox first baseman who only two years ago was the American League's most valuable player, has apparently ended his brief "retirement" of last September, but the Chisox are not all that eager to have him back. Presumably, if a front line pitcher were offered, Chicago General Manager Roland Hemond will send baseball's highest paid player packing again for the fourth time in his career.

Amid all the trade talk, the owners will also be entertaining bids from a half dozen or so groups seeking expansion franchises. The lords of baseball have tentatively agreed to expand again in the near future and Toronto, Denver, Washington, Seattle and the host city all have representatives here for that purpose.

Collegian
sports

One roadblock to any expansion plans, however, could be the continuing attendance problems facing the Minnesota Twins and San Francisco Giants. Twins' owner Calvin Griffith is losing his battle to have a new ballpark constructed in the twin cities while Giants' owner Horace Stoneham, beleaguered by the attendance drain caused by the Cross-Bay A's, has openly been eyeing New Orleans, among other cities, for a possible shift.

The major league draft was the first big order of business scheduled for Monday.

Sports Roundup

Cashman out for 6-8 weeks

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Bruins scrappy winger, Wayne Cashman, will be sidelined for six weeks after undergoing surgery for a ruptured disk at Massachusetts General Hospital, according to team spokesmen.

Cashman was operated upon Saturday after a week of examinations.

"As far as we know right now, the operation was a success," said Dr. James I. Huddleston, who performed the surgery. "A disk in Wayne's back has ruptured and a piece had broken off and was pressing up against a nerve, causing severe pain. We were fortunate to find the piece right away and so everything went well."

Cashman, barring complications, was expected to begin skating in three to four weeks.

UConn out in NCAA soccer

ONEONTA, N.Y. (UPI) — The Hartwick College Warriors advanced to the semi-final round of the NCAA division one soccer tournament Sunday by beating the University of Connecticut, 2-0.

The semi-finals and championship matches will be played in St. Louis, beginning on Dec. 7.

Early in the game, pressure by UConn's aggressive offense forced a foul by Hartwick in the home team's penalty area. However, the Huskies star forward, Frantz Innocent, missed with the penalty kick and Connecticut's best scoring opportunity of the game went by the boards.

Hartwick followed with two quick scores, as Jeff Tipping headed a direct kick of Duncan McDonald past the Huskie goal keeper at the 28:28 mark of the first half. Less than five minutes later, Art Napolitano tipped a Ron Hardy corner kick between the posts to give the Warriors a two-goal margin.

Hartwick outshot UConn 15-13, although UConn had more corner kicks.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, DECEMBER 2 — Born today, you cannot know happiness unless you also know good relationships with other people. You are not perfect; you do not know perfect people — but you are wise enough to set yourself a few rules to offset these imperfections. You never let the sun go down on your anger, to begin with; you make it a habit to count to 10 before reacting outwardly to anything which touches your emotions in an adverse fashion; you never stand on ceremony when apologies are in order, but are willing to initiate proceedings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Make the transition from one project to another as easy as possible. Don't rush into the future without being prepared. Take your time!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A day when effective work habits really pay off. Benefits from projects recently completed begin now to appear on every level of your life.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You should be able to reach the point where light shows at the end of the tunnel. Don't be alarmed should expected successes take longer than you'd hoped.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Divide your time between work and play and you should be able to accomplish all that you wish today. Don't depend upon a co-worker to speak for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You must exert your independence today if you are to progress as planned. Rely on your own judgment. Don't be set off your stride by family arguments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Recent changes in your life have a single, underlying cause. Discover that cause and you can have things straightened out in no time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your present position has both advantages and disadvantages; it's up to you to weigh both and to make your decision regarding change accordingly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — There are definite problems inherent in the project you are presently engaged in. Don't allow your enthusiasm to blind you to that fact.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Although you must do what is required of you this morning, you would do well to do nothing further. Wait for instructions from one in authority.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Community enterprises may demand your attention today. Don't expect others to take on those responsibilities which will suffer should you fail them.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Treat co-workers as individuals. If you insist on lumping them in a heap, you cannot expect to gain from them separate reactions and responses.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Personal relationships on the employment scene improve markedly today. Make it your business to find out where you stand in the opinion of higher-ups.

N.C. State, UCLA win big

College Loop roundup

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

Tennessee Tech had the "pleasure" of opening Indiana's basketball season and got caught with its points down.

"This was a case of bad scheduling," said Tennessee Tech Coach Connie Inman after his Golden Eagles were embarrassed 113-60 Saturday by Indiana, the nation's third-ranked team.

The Hoosiers used everyone except Coach Bobby Knight as they got their 1974-75 season off to a flying start.

North Carolina State, the nation's No. 1 team, also got off winging with a 98-81 victory over East Carolina.

Elsewhere among the Top Ten, No. 2 UCLA trimmed DePaul 79-64; fourth-ranked Maryland routed Richmond 106-81 and No. 6 Kansas whipped Northeast Missouri State 65-50.

Among the best of the ranked teams, 11th-rated North Carolina defeated Biscayne 101-74; No. 12 Notre Dame trimmed Valparaiso 91-80; 13th-ranked Purdue stopped Indiana State 98-80; 15th-ranked Memphis State smashed Montclair State 96-60; No. 16 Kentucky turned back Northwestern 97-70; No. 17 Michigan tripped Toledo 78-64 and 18th-ranked Minnesota crushed North Dukota State 80-47.

Scott May scored 22 points and Steve Green added 20 to lead Indiana past Tennessee Tech. The underpriveleged Golden Eagles were never in the game as the Hoosiers scored the first 12 points and had a 20-point advantage within the first seven minutes.

David Thompson, last year's Player of the Year, scored 33 points to lead North Carolina State over East Carolina. Thompson scored many points on his patented "alley-oop" layups, soaring over the basket after taking high lobs from teammates.

UCLA broke open a close game with two minutes left in the first half and coasted over DePaul. Forwards Richard Washington and Dave Meyers scored 20 and 18 points respectively to lead the Bruin's second triumph of the season.

John Lucas scored 17 points in the first half before leaving the game with a broken collarbone as Maryland beat Richmond.

Kansas held Northeast Missouri State without a field goal for 11 minutes later in the second half and beat the Bulldogs behind a balanced scoring attack led by Rick Suttle's 14 points. Dan DeMartin had a game-high 15 for the losers.

Basketball breakfast Thursday

The first ever basketball breakfast will be held Thursday, Dec. 5 at 7:45 a.m. in the Kopper Kettle restaurant. "The breakfast," says the UMass Marketing and Promotion department, "is to bring together student fans, faculty, staff, and the 1974-75 Minutemen team.

Coach Jack Leaman and his entire club will be on hand to discuss what looks like one of the most promising teams in the University's basketball history. The basketball breakfast will be an opportunity to meet the people involved in basketball as well as to learn something about logistics, administrative aspects and relationships involved in a quality program such as scheduling, recruiting and financing.

The cost of the breakfast is 99 cents and the promotion office asks that you contact Wally Novak at 5-0398 by Tuesday, Dec. 3 so that they may approximate attendance.

The Canon F-1.
Images are what it's all about.

Photographic equipment can be a trap. Sometimes, you can get so involved with it that you lose sight of your real purpose—making photographs.

The Canon F-1 can help you forget about equipment and concentrate on images. It was designed, and functions, as an extension of your photographic vision. It's responsive in a way that you must experience to appreciate.

And since it was conceived as a system camera, every part works together with effortless smoothness, from the more than 40 Canon FD and FL lenses to the over 200 accessories.

The heart of the camera is it's central spot metering system. With it you can use anyone's exposure system, no matter how critical, since it only measures the central 12% of the finder area—regardless of the focal length used.

So if you're spending too much time lately worrying about your equipment, it's time you stopped, and took a good look at the Canon F-1 system, and Canon's other fine cameras—the automatic, electronic EF, the full-feature FTb, and the TLb. If you're interested in images, Canon's your camera.

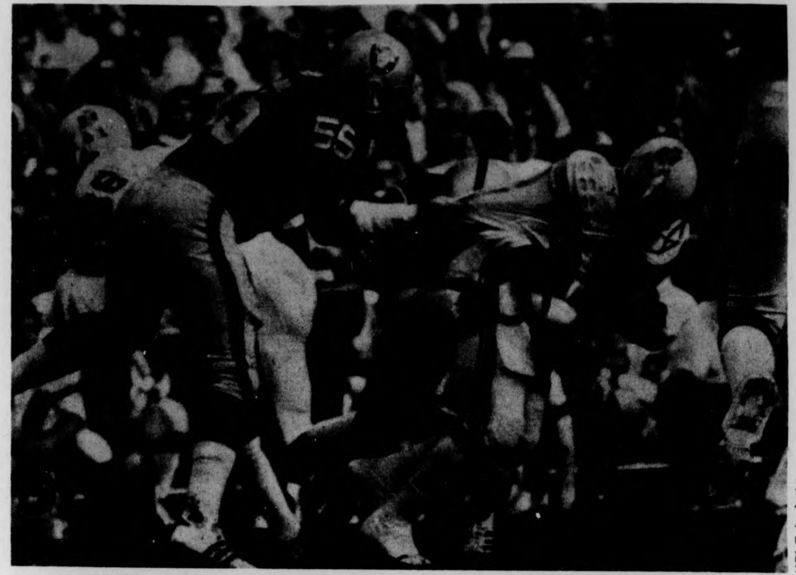
Pats locked in Stable-r, 41-26



Let me go! Patriots Mack Herron is caught by his jersey in the grasp of Oakland linebacker Dan Conners during first quarter action Sunday in the Patriots' 41-26 loss to the Raiders. The loss gives the Pats only a miniscule chance of making the playoffs.

Mathematics the only thing on Pats' side

By ERIC PREWITT
Associated Press Writer

OAKLAND (AP) — Ken Stabler threw four touchdown passes, opening with a 67-yard completion to Cliff Branch, to lead the Oakland Raiders to a 41-26 National Football League victory over the New England Patriots yesterday.

Branch, the former football and track star from Colorado, also caught a 19-yard touchdown pass from Stabler in the third quarter. He finished the day with season receptions totaling 1,032 yards for 11 touchdowns, both NFL-leading marks.

Stabler completed 16 of 21 attempts, with his other touchdown passes coming in the second period on tosses of 12 yards to Fred Biletnikoff and five yards to Bob Moore.

The Patriots, whose chances of making the playoffs virtually vanished with the loss which made them 7-5, trailed 20-19 early in the third quarter after quarterback Jim Plunkett threw a 59-yard touchdown pass to Randy Vataha. But they failed to tie the score as John Smith's extra point attempt was blocked.

The Raiders, with a 10-2 record which is best in the NFL, then pulled away on Stabler's fourth touchdown pass and a 22-yard touchdown run by Skip Thomas on an interception return early in the fourth period. Plunkett threw his second touchdown pass, to Al Marshall, as the Pats cut the margin to 34-26, but the Raiders drove for a final touchdown with reserve quarterback Larry Lawrence running the offense.

The Patriots took the opening kickoff and moved 55 yards before settling for a 22-yard field goal by Smith. But Oakland struck back quickly, Stabler throwing for a touchdown on his first pass of the game, and the Raiders never trailed from that point.

Another Smith field goal made the score 7-6 at the end of one quarter, but Oakland drove 74 yards and went ahead 13-6 on Biletnikoff's touchdown catch. George Blanda missed the extra point attempt, which allowed New England to tie the score a few minutes later on a six-yard touchdown run by John Tarver, completing a 71-yard drive.

Plunkett was sacked and he fumbled late in the second period, Otis Sistrunk recovered at the New England 15-yard line and the Raiders went ahead to stay four plays later on Moore's touchdown.

Marshall's touchdown catch, his first reception as a pro, came on a pass which Oakland defensive back Nemiah Wilson tipped into his hands. But Wilson got even shortly after, intercepting a Plunkett pass that bounced off the hands of New England's Bob Adams. Wilson returned the interception 34 yards to the New England 44, where the Raiders started their final touchdown drive.

Bills nip Colts 6-0

BUFFALO, N.Y. [AP] — John Leypoldt booted two field goals that stood up for Buffalo as the Bills turned back the stubborn Baltimore Colts 6-0 Sunday and strengthened their bid for a berth in the playoffs.

The victory boosted the Bills' season record to 9-3, while the Colts suffered their 10th setback in 12 games.

The contest was a battle between defensive units.

Buffalo's O.J. Simpson battled for 67 yards and passed the 1,000-yard mark for the third successive year. He ended the game with 1,004 yards.

Both of Leypoldt's field goals came in the second period, one from 29 yards and the other from 31 yards.

The first field goal was set up by David Lee's 15-yard punt, which gave the Bills the ball on the Colts' 24. The Bills got to Baltimore's 6-yard line in six plays before Coach Lou Saban sent in Leypoldt, who made it 3-0 at 7:36.

Another six-play sequence by the Bills later in the period was halted by the Colts on their 13, and again Leypoldt came through, this time with 1:53 remaining in the quarter.

The nearest Baltimore came to scoring was in the final period when quarterback Bert Jones marched the Colts from their own 42 to Buffalo's four. Jones missed on a third-down pass there and the Bills stopped Lydell Mitchell at the two and took over the ball.

Missouri title won by Chiefs over Cards

ST. LOUIS [AP] — Mike Sensabaugh and Willie Lanier picked off second-half passes by an erratic Jim Hart and rallied the Kansas City Chiefs to a 17-13 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals Sunday.

The interception by the Chiefs defenders, both setting up touchdowns, thwarted a bid by the Cardinals to wrap up their first NFL division championship since 1948.

Despite the setback in swirling snow flurries, the Cardinals gained at least a wild-card playoff berth by virtue of the Philadelphia Eagles' 36-14 victory over Green Bay.

St. Louis' record in the National Conference Eastern Division dipped 9-3 as Kansas City, an 11-point underdog improved its record to 5-7 in the American Conference West.

Preceding the interceptions, only the punting of Jerrel Wilson and aroused defensive line had kept Kansas City in hailing distance of the Cards.

St. Louis drove 65-yards to score on its second possession but Jim Baaken missed the extra point attempt.

The Cards' offense then bogged down early in the second quarter but Kansas City showed little spark until Sensibaugh intercepted a Hart pass early in the third quarter and returned it to the St. Louis 32-yard line.

The Chiefs moved to the 11 on a Len Dawson-Larry Brunson pass and scored three plays later on Dawson's four-yard pass to Jeff Kinney. Jan Stenerud's conversion put the Chiefs ahead 7-6.

Then Lanier swiped a Hart pass deep in St. Louis territory at the outset of the final period, and Wendell Hayes slammed in for a touchdown from the one as Kansas City went ahead 14-6.

Stenerud made it 17-6 with a 22-yard field goal.

Hart swept the Cardinals to a final touchdown with 2:49 to go.

Oilers resurge 13-10

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Skip Butler kicked a 34-yard field goal with 2:32 left in the game to give the resurgent Houston Oilers a 13-10 victory over the Pittsburgh Steelers Sunday.

The victory, earned in a steady freezing rain, was the fifth in the last six games for the Oilers, boosting their record to 6-6.

Pittsburgh fell to 8-3-1 and had its AFC Central Division lead trimmed to one game over the Cincinnati Bengals.

Drop Hall of Fame finale to UNCC, 87-59

UMass splits opening pair

By STEVE DeCOSTA
Sports Staff

Before the basketball season began, UMass coach Jack Leaman was worried about his defense.

Now that the season is officially underway, Leaman is still worried about the defense. And if he isn't worried about his offense, it's not for lack of reason.

In all fairness, the Minutemen did look like a solid team in knocking off Dartmouth 86-59 in the season opener Friday night, but all the solid impressions they had created were quickly brushed aside as a quick defensive University of North Carolina at Charlotte squad dominated the Hall of Fame Tournament championship match-up, 87-59.

"We just had a bad game," said Leaman following the defeat. "Nobody played well, but maybe it's good that we got it out of our system early."

Leaman was almost right. John Murphy was the shining Minuteman light, hitting on 13 of 19 shots en route to a 30 point, 12 rebound performance.

But beyond Murphy, there was only disappointment. No one else reached double figures, with Jim Town coming closest with nine points.

The Minutemen were done in by a quick pressing team defense, and an almost unbelievable shooting performance by senior guard George Jackson.

The Forty-Niners employed a man-to-man press for the entire game and it unnerved the Minutemen to the point where they turned the ball over 29 times.

"Their defense bothered us a great deal," Leaman said. "It forced us out of our defense and made us play their game."

The 6'1 Jackson was nearly a story in himself, hitting 13 of 22 from the floor and a perfect 5 for 5 from the line for 31 back-breaking points. Jackson ran rings around the UMass defense, consistently getting open for jumpers from the 15-foot range.

John Heath poured in 18 Forty-Niner points, even though playing only slightly more than half the contest. Cedric Maxwell, a dominant force at center, added 15 and freshman Lew Massey chipped in with 10 points in only 15 minutes.

The same began as a shooting match between Jackson and Murphy, with little to choose between the two. Jackson hit four straight hoops to put UNCC up 10-4, but Murphy came right back to knot the count and Town hit a three-pointer to put UMass on top. As it turned out, it would be the only time the Minutemen led all night, as Jackson came right back with three more quick hoops and the Forty-Niners were never really challenged as they ran up a 39-27 halftime buldge.

UMass looked better in beating Dartmouth in their opener, but the Big Green are not the type of team that will strike fear in the hearts of many opponents. Dartmouth may even win a game this season. In overtime. Against a school for the blind.

Murphy was again the big UMass gun, as he found the nets for 21 points. This time, however, he had a lot of help, as Greg Duarte flipped in 13, Town chipped in 11, and Bill Endicott and freshman Alex Eldridge both added 10.

Town scored six of the first twelve UMass points as the squads traded hoops for the opening three minutes, but then Murphy, Eldridge and Duarte tossed in twelve unanswered markers and the Big Green could manage to get no closer than 10 the rest of the way.

Adam Sutton was a one-man gang for Dartmouth with a game-high 24 points.

TICKLING THE TWINE — Centenary College of Shreveport, Louisiana knocked off Dartmouth 98-62 in Saturday's consolation game.

Jackson was named the tournament's most valuable player and was joined on the all-tournament team by teammate Maxwell, Minuteman Murphy, and Robert Parrish and Leon "Black Magic" Johnson of Centenary.

Eldridge made the defensive play of the tournament, turning his back to a Dartmouth inbounds pass, but whirling as if on cue to pick it off and go in uncontested for the layup.

Next opponent for the Minutemen is Harvard in Cambridge this Thursday. The Crimson gave UMass a tough time in the Cage last year, and this time it won't be Tom Sanders' coaching debut. Harvard has a good one in Lou Silver, who's been named to the All-Ivy team in the last two seasons.

The Minutemen make their home debut Saturday night against a much-improved URI squad. The Rams knocked off Barrington 98-83 in their opener on Saturday.

Matmen split triangle meet

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Sports Staff

Saturday's triangular wrestling match with Yale and the University of Connecticut proved two things: 1) Yale has the horses to repeat as Ivy League Champs and improve their standing in the EIWA, and 2) UMass has a better chance at retaining their New England Championship than their match with Boston University showed.

The Minutemen split the weekend tri-meet at Yale by thrashing UConn 40-9 and dropping a close one to the Bulldogs, 21-25. Four Minuteman wrestlers finished 2-0 on the day. Peter Sachon (118) and Dennis Fenton (heavyweight) pinned both of their opponents in aggregate times of 5:21 and 2:53 respectively. That dynamic duo from Lowell, Mass., Russell Chateauneuf and Tim Fallon, won both of their bouts over stiff opposition at 134 and 142, respectively. The Yale bout saw co-captain Cliff Blom return to action after a three week absence due to a knee injury. Blom gave up twenty pounds to wrestle at 177 because "I had to see if my knee would be good enough to get ready for Rhode Island (this Wednesday) and the rest of the semester."

The UConn match was kind of an exercise in the application of cradles as a means to pinning. UMass won bouts at 118, 134, 142, 158, 167, 190, and heavyweight while dropping a decision at 126, collecting a forfeit at 150, and getting pinned at 177. Kevin Griffin accepted the forfeit from UConn's Scott Casper who was out with an impacted wisdom tooth. Bob Spaulding was leading at 177 against the Huskie's George Murray until Murray caught him on his back. Greg Tallon was decisioned 7-5 at 126 by Dave Penchoff of UConn. Collecting pins for UMass against UConn were Sachon, Fallon, Steve Jabaut at 158, and Fenton. Tom O'Connell picked up a superior (over 10 points) decision while the rest of UMass' team points were a result of wins from Chateauneuf and Tom Smith at 167.

The Yale match had UMass in the lead 12-3 until the Minutemen hit the Eli middle weights. Yale opened up with both barrels at 150, 158, and 167 as they grabbed two pins and a superior decision. Kevin Griffin briefly met Yale's very talented Jim Bennett who Harvard dragged Griffin to the mat and pinned him at 1:03 of the first period. Steve Jabaut ran into the Bulldog takedown machine in Yale's Marty Schwartz who collected a 21-8 superior for his team, by virtue of six takedowns. Tom Smith was just not ready for Yale's team captain, Jamie McEwan, and fell victim to a cradle in the second period of the 167 pound bout.

Cliff Blom decided the only way to make up for the weight advantage he was giving was to be all over his man from the first whistle. He succeeded nicely as he picked up a 5-1 win for UMass. Tom O'Connell was a lot less fortunate as he met a very mean Neal Brendel, Yale's quarter finalist in the 1974 NCAA's. "Irish" Tom put up a good struggle but saw the lights in the second period of the match.

Heavyweight Dennis Fenton scored the final points for UMass as he pinned Yale's Jim Simpson in 1:30. Denny went out, picked up the kid's leg, set him down, turned him over and called it a day.

PIN POINTS Frosh Tim Fallon beat an Iowa state runner-up with a year's college experience when he beat Yale's Roger Morrow....Chances are Cliff Blom will be back in at 158 and Steve Jabaut at 150 when Rhode Island comes to town on Wednesday....Speaking of URI, they open their season tonight at BU as they hope to take the number one ranking in New England with them on their Western tour....Wins over BU, UMass, and Springfield would assure them of a better reception when they hit Michigan State.

Opposes gas tax increase

Ford; curbing recession a high priority

By HELEN THOMAS

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford said last night that unless there is another Arab oil embargo, the United States should experience no gasoline shortages this winter.

In answer to a question at his news conference, Ford also said "I don't see any prospects of gasoline going to $1 a gallon." Ford said the nation's motorists were using less gas than experts had predicted, and "the net result is that we have more gasoline in storage today than we had a year ago."

This is not enough to carry the country through an oil embargo, "but we are in a better position than we were a year ago," he said.

"We don't anticipate at this point under any foreseeable circumstances" either gas rationing or shortages, he said.

Nevertheless, he said, "we must keep the pressure on" to conserve fuel.

see related story on page 6

Ford, in a nationally broadcast news conference, offered no new proposals for action either to boost production, slow rising prices, or head off predicted increases in unemployment. His prepared remarks were similar to those accompanying his economic statement to Congress late last month.

He called for "special and immediate attention by this Congress" on four major areas, — to cut federal spending, expand assistance for the unemployed, pass the trade reform bill, and approve a tax reform measure cleared by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Bromery requests audit of school of ed budget

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery yesterday asked the University Treasurer in President Robert C. Wood's Boston office to conduct a complete audit of School of Education finances.

University spokesman Peter Gluckler said discussions on the exact details of the audit are being discussed between Bromery and University Treasurer, Kenneth W. Johnson.

Under University regulations, requests for such an audit must be formally made to President Wood's office, so the audit will not be started until Wood gives his approval.

In a memo to Associate Provost, David C. Bischoff last Wednesday, Earl Seidman, Acting Dean of the School of Ed., requested the University Administration to conduct the audit, following disclosure of charges of misuse of funds made by Assistant Dean of the School of Ed, Robert Suzuki.

University officials refuse to disclose specifics on the funds in question except to say they are not state funds.

Seidman said he asked for the audit because "we must be allowed to deal with facts, not rumors, and professional inquiry not innuendo."

Last Tuesday, Bromery appointed David Bischoff to conduct a "complete review of the allegations made by Suzuki."

The audit, according to Bischoff is part of that review. "The investigators from the Treasurer's office will start with the charges and investigate them completely. If it seems wise to go further they will," he said.

He stated that his role now was to wait and see what the auditors come up with before continuing with his part of the investigation.

When asked how many years back the auditors will go, he said, "as far as they have to."

The audit is the result of charges made by Robert Suzuki, coordinator of the administration of funds in the School of Ed, that certain individuals had misused School of Ed grant money. Submitted three weeks ago to Earl Seidman, his charges were posed in a list of five questions concerning funding policy.

Suzuki on the advice of his lawyer, David Burres of Amherst, has refrained comment on aay aspect of the case.

Three weeks ago, before submitting his questions to Seidman, Suzuki submitted his resignation saying he wanted to return to teaching.

In his capacity as Assistant Dean of the School of Ed, Suzuki makes an annual salary of $22,864.92. Assistant Dean of Undergraduate Programs, Richard J. Clarke's annual salary is $26,652.60, and Assistant Dean Norms Jean Anderson has a salary of $27,797.12 a year. All are Assistant Deans in the School of Ed.

Confidential requests go through Boston

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

The University administration yesterday said all student requests for confidential personal files made under a recently enacted law will now have to go through the President's office in Boston.

The ruling has the immediate effect of restricting rather than easing the availability of some records to students on campus, because it requires clearing the request through Boston instead of acting on it immediately.

Ralph D. Jones, university registrar for the Amherst campus, said the policy "doesn't change the operating procedure we have set up." He said only certain documents contained in students original admissions folder are the ones affected.

"Everything else is non-confidential and there is no change in the policy that we've had here for years," Jones said yesterday, adding that financial aid and health records are more sensitive.

Richard A. Dent, director of Financial Aid, said the Educational Testing Services' "parents' confidential statement" is affected by the Buckley amendment or the administrative policy.

He said the statement contains a checkoff where parents may indicate whether or not they wish their son or daughter to look at the statement. Dent said the office has about 4,000 statements on file.

"The statement is not the property of the student, it is the property of the parent," Dent said, adding that Financial Aid officials will discuss the policy Thursday.

Dr. Barry C. Averill, director of University Health Services on campus, said the infirmary has a routine policy of making health records available to the student involved. "All the discussions we've had so far have no significant effect on our policies," Averill said, adding that a student

Dunk-a-thon Day 1 collection a success

Campus Center travelers poured $63.74 worth of water dunks over the heads of Collegian personalities yesterday in day one of the week long "Help the Hungry" campaign.

The dunk-a-thon will conclude today with such personalities as Rick Savini, SGA president; Mark Tripuka, UMass football quarterback; and Collegian Sports Editor Dave Eibel taking 30-minute turns under the bucket.

The commuters' table, set up next to the dunk area, collected more than $110 for the campaign. That table will be set up for the last time today, by the dunk area again.

Campaign organizers are asking all commuters to make their one dollar donations there.

The dormitory collection effort will conclude Friday. The money will be be counted over the weekend and a check will be sent to Oxfam-America, in Boston, on Monday.

Collegian News Editor Mike Kneeland, the campaign's organizer, said he was "very pleased" with the campaign today.

"I'm sure we're going to raise a lot of money," he said. "The backbone of our campaign lies with the dormitory donations and most of our representatives are doing a good job...even with papers to do and finals to start worrying about."

Kneeland said he was disappointed that no one volunteered to head collection efforts in about seven dormitories.

(A complete listing of all representatives appears on page six.)

Those dorms could have turned in a lot of money if someone there would be willing to take the time, he said last night.

He added, however, that those interested in volunteering could still do so by calling the Collegian.

Confidential requests...

wishing to view his records may do so in the presence of the doctor involved, in order to have questions answered.

But, Averill said, "in the area of mental health we have had a policy of not having the student look at the records because it may not always be in the best interests of the student in a therapeutic situation."

Averill said some mental health records contain hypothesis about a student's mental condition which is being tested therapeutically by a physician.

He said a student who insists on seeing his records will be asked to put the request in writing and the request will be handled under the new policy announced yesterday.

In an interview on November 18 — the day the Family Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 took effect — Registrar Jones said UMass would comply. But he cautioned that his office would consider previously confidential material like guidance counsellor's recommendations to be the property of the sender.

At the time, Jones said only the original admissions folder — one of three files kept on campus students — has regularly contained confidential material from guidance counsellors.

He said an academic record card (transcript), and counselling folder are non-confidential.

Yesterday's announcement raises the possibility that students will be temporarily denied access to records that have previously been open while the request is submitted to the President's office.

The policy released read:

"A student wishing to inspect his or her records should submit a written request to the custodian of the records in the particular school or office where such records are kept.

"The student should also send a copy of the request to the Secretary of the University, Office of the President, One Washington Mall, Boston, Mass. 02108. Upon receipt of the copy of the request, the Secretary of the University will render a decision concerning the request.

"This policy is in regard to the new Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974, PL 93-380."

University News Bureau spokesman Peter Gluckler said the policy was contained in a memo from campus attorney Sidney B. Myers to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery and Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage.

WMUA has a new station manager, Marc Berman. It may have a new studio soon, too.

WMUA elects Station Manager

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

WMUA has elected a new Station Manager. In a special election held last Wednesday night Marc Berman was chosen to replace Jack Harper as station manager.

Harper, who was elected at a special election last December, then re-elected in March, will be unable to finish his term as manager.

Berman was elected by 24 of 34 station members present at the meeting. The meeting was an open-format and discussion. According to Scott Bacherman, Production Manager of WMUA "Marc will be more involved in programming and working more in production than any previous Station Manager."

Berman has had a great deal of experience with college radio before coming to UMass. He has also had professional experience in radio in Wyoming and New Hampshire. Last summer Berman and Bacherman taped a documentary in Washington D.C. concerning the resignation of President Nixon.

"In the past, the responsibilities of the Station Manager have been undefined; they need to be clarified so that the station can operate more smoothly," Bacherman said.

Another consideration of the station now concerns moving WMUA to a larger and more central area. Right now the station is pressed for space and is seeking a new on-campus location.

Cosmonauts rehearse for summer docking

By GERARD LOUGHRAN

MOSCOW (UPI(- The Soviet Union sent two veteran cosmonauts into orbit Monday aboard the Soyuz 16 spaceship in a dress rehearsal for next July's docking with an American Apollo vehicle.

U.S. ground stations tracked the flight and American and Soviet space officials were in telephone contact about it.

Flight commander Anatoly Filipehenko said the space voyage would last several days and its main object was to test the docking gear.

He said the spaceship was identical to that to be used in July and would fly the same orbits, testing all procedures for the joint project.

"In principle, there may be discussions with Houston," Filipchenko, 46 and the father of two boys, said in an interview with Tass news agency before blast-off. But the discussions will be indirect because Soyuz does not carry the very High Frequency equipment needed to talk to the Houston space center from orbit.

Nine American tracking stations followed the flight. Soviet space officials kept their American counterparts informed of the progress of the mission and promised to give the National Aeronautics and Space Administration precise directions to track the Soyuz between its 41st and 56th orbits on Wednesday.

Yale professor drowns in Leverett

LEVERETT — A Yale University professor and his 2-year-old daughter drowned here Sunday afternoon after falling through thin ice on a pond which had supported other skaters all afternoon.

The body of Yale English professor Thomas F. Weiskel, 29, was recovered about eleven yesterday morning by SCUBA divers from the UMass police dept., Captain Robert Joyce said. A search for the body had been suspended late Sunday night after authorities found the body of Weiskel's daughter, Shelburne, about 8:15 p.m., state police said.

Weiskel was the husband of Ms. Portia Weiskel, a member of the Montague Nuclear Concerns Group and a trustee of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution.

Ms. Weiskel, whose parents live in Belmont and who attended Radcliffe College, has been a major spokesperson for opponents of a proposed $1.3 billion twin nuclear power plant that Northeast Utilities Service Co. of Hartford wants to build in Montague, one town west of here.

Weiskel and his daughter had been skating, according to police reports.

State police in Northampton, who coordinated the search for the two bodies, said a neighbor skating on the lake in the center of town sighted a sled floating on water about 200 yards from shore.

The neighbor notified police at 5:45 p.m. Sunday and authorities from the state police barracks, Leverett and Shutesbury arrived by 6. Underwater Recovery Teams from the UMass police dept. and Brattleboro were then asked to search for the father's body.

Weiskel was born in Hackensack, N.J., earned his B.A. at Amherst College in 1967 and his PhD. at Yale in 1970. He had taught at Yale since 1970, specializing in romantic literature.

Professor A. Dwight Culler, chairman of the Yale English Department said of Weiskel: "He was the kind of teacher who had a decisive impact on the lives of his students far beyond the subject matter he was teaching. I've had letters from students who took his course freshman year and went back year after year to consult and work with him."

His book, "The Romantic Sublime" has already been submitted for publication, according to Culler: "It's going to be one of the finest books to come from the Yale English Department," he said.

He has commuted three days a week from Leverett for classes, staying in New Haven at times, neighbors reported. The Weiskels, of whom Shelburne was a first child, live on Old Montague Road in the center of town. The road overlooks Leverett Pond, the scene of the drowning.

Memorial services will be Thursday morning at 10 at the Friends Meeting House on route 63 in Leverett. Burial will be private. Calling hours will be at the Douglass Funeral Home, 87 N. Pleasant St., Amherst.

The family requests that memorial gifts be made to Food for the Hungry at Yale University in care of Rev. William Sloan Coffin.

Police radio stolen at Grayson

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

The UMass Department of Public Safety has requested the return of a portable radio stolen from Grayson dormitory, last Tuesday.

According to Captain Robert Joyce of the department, the radio, used by security guards in the dorms on campus, is worth about $1300.

"We aren't interested in prosecuting anyone, but we need the radio. Communication in the security field can be a life and death situation." said Joyce.

Joyce cited a similar incident that occurred at the Amherst Fire Department, at the beginning of the semester.

Saul Chafin, assistant director of the UMass Police Department, stressed the idea that these radios are used for the protection, welfare, and safety of the students and staff on campus.

Any information concerning the whereabouts of the radio would be appreciated by the department.

Collegian Staffers

If you never come to another Collegian meeting come to the staff meeting Thursday. This is your only chance to cast votes for editors who will serve for the next year.

7 p.m. CC 168-172

Tomorrow, a complete staff list will appear on page three. If your name is not on it, see your editor. Otherwise you may not be allowed to vote Thursday.

AGENDA:

1) election of new editors — nominations received Dec. 1 to be listed tomorrow. Floor nominations accepted.

2) Discussion of proposed new constitution — sets up Life-Style editor, gives managing editor autonomy from editor-in-chief who would be called "publishing board chairman." Proposed vote on constitution.

3) Analysis of PULSE survey

If you cannot make the meeting, absentee ballots for the editors' election are available from Jerry Lazar.

Town votes for elections in session

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

With the prime interest of students in mind the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night set the dates for next year's town elections.

Notices that are required by law to be published, filing dates for nomination papers, town caucus and the day of the election will all fall while Amherst College, Hampshire College and UMass students will be in Amherst.

The Board passed a policy statement in 1972 declaring that all election affairs will be held when all the colleges are in session.

At that time Eric Walgreen challenged the constitutionality of holding the town caucus during intersession when the majority of students were away and could not vote. Walgreen was running for Selectman and was defeated in the caucus.

The courts have ruled in favor of the town, but Walgreen has appealed the case to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Town elections are non-partisan and officers to be elected are Town Meeting Members, Town Moderator, two Selectmen, two Jones Library Trustees and one Housing Authority member.

In order to register you have to be 19, a resident of Massachusetts and lived in Amherst for at least six months.

The last day to register before the election is March 19 and the election will be held on April 8.

In other action the Board granted one day liquor licenses to John Quincy Adams Middle House for December 6, John Kennedy Lower House for December 7, Calvin Coolidge Tower for December 6 and the Southwest Cultural and Program Committee for December 11.

In addition, Town Manager Allen Torrey reported to the Board that Mr. Gerald Grady, the University liaison person, has set up a meeting with the Director of the Institute for Man and His Environment for December 5. This was done at the Board's request so that various University skills and personnel could be utilized in reviewing a report on solid waste disposal.

Torrey also passed down an administrative order to all town Boards, commissions and Committee Chairmen concerning the availability of public records, assuring that all town employees comply with a new law which took effect on July 1.

This law, Chapter 1050, defines a public record and set down specific rules concerning their availability.

A "reasonable fee" and a "search fee" were established. The first copy of a public record is .50 and a certified copy will be $1.00. A charge of $5.00 will be levied for each search hour spent locating a public record.

The law is basically a further extension of the Open Meeting Law guaranteeing to the public the right of access to records and documents of State and Local government.

Sirica reaffirms Christmas deadline

Ehrlichman asks trial delay until Nixon fit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defendant John D. Ehrlichman asked yesterday that the Watergate cover-up trial be suspended over the Christmas holidays until Richard M. Nixon is well enough to testify. But Judge John J. Sirica declared, "We're going to finish this case by Christmas."

Sirica earlier promised to hear arguments on the question tomorrow, but at the end of the long day, the 44th of the trial, he announced his intention to finish by Christmas.

Ehrlichman's lawyer, Willaim S. Frates, said it was a "common sense" proposal to recess the trial and let the jury go home until Nixon is well enough to give testimony for the defense.

Three court-appointed doctors who examined Nixon at his San Clemente, Calif., home reported on Friday that he is too ill to come to Washington to testify and that he would not even be able to give a deposition until Jan. 6.

Ehrlichman has not yet taken the stand in his own defense.

Former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman acknowledged under cross examination Monday by Assistant Watergate Prosecutor Richard Ben-Veniste, that he had not told the federal grand jury about the White House taping system.

"I was under orders of the President of the United States that it not be disclosed," Haldeman said. "It was not a matter of my hopes; it was my instructions."

Ben-Veniste said that Haldeman no longer was a presidential assistant on May 5, 1973, when he withheld the information from the grand jury.

"I was not employed by the President," Haleman said, "but I still considered myself subject to the orders given to me during the term of my service to the President."

Haldeman testified he had "no recollection" of telling his former aide Gordon C. Strachan after the break-in to make sure their files were clean of any material relating to the Watergate burglary. Haldeman also testified that he believed he did not learn of the destruction of any documents until Strachan testified about having done so at the Senate Watergate hearings in the summer of 1973.

Weather slows voting on coal miners' pact

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (UPI) - Striking coal miners cast secret-ballots yesterday in historic United Mine Wrokers contract vote slowed by a severe snowstorm in the eastern coal fields.

First early returns from five locals in Pennsylvania and West Virginia showed a slim 587-542 margin in favor of the new three-year agreement, providing a 64 per cent increase in wages and fringe benefits.

It was the first time in the history of the UMW the membership vvted on a contract. In the past, the union's leaders made the decision.

Many members of locals reporting early failed to cast vote due in part to the worst snow storm in seven years in the eastern coal fields Sunday. An additional 6 to 12 inches was forecast by nightfall Monday.

Because of the bad weather, UMW president Arnold Miller extended the voting through 8 p.m. EST tomorrow.

"We want to maximize rank and file participation in this, the union's first, ratification vote by allowing every member the opportunity to exercise his democratic option," Miller said.

About half of the 120,000 coal miners, on strike since Nov. 12, live in areas affected by the heavy snow.

More than 600 miners failed to vote in four Pennsylvania locals reporting total returns of 514-512 for acceptance.

Sugar price increases lead climb in family grocery bill

By The Associated Press

Sugar price boosts of more than 50 per cent in a month pushed up the family grocery bill in November, offsetting declines in meat and eggs, an Associated Press marketbasket survey shows.

The increases came amid new government hearings into soaring profits for sugar refiners whose earnings have been boosted by the growing worldwide demand for the sweetener.

Amstar Corp., the nation's largest cane sugar refiner, announced Monday its first reduction in the wholesale price in more than a year and a half. The company cut the wholesale price of grocery sugar by $5.20 per 100 pounds to about $3.47 per five-pound bag.

Because sugar now on grocery shelves was processed several months ago and does not reflect recent wholesale boosts, the $3.47 wholesale price is actually lower than the retail price in most areas.

Supermarkets have urged customers not to buy sugar and some stores are limiting purchases. Many people already are boycotting sugar.

The AP drew up a random list of 15 commonly purchased food and nonfood items, checked the prices on March 1, 1973 at a supermarket in each of 13 cities and has rechecked at the start of every month.

The latest check showed sugar increased in every city except Dallas, where the specified five-pound size was unavailable at the supermarket used for the survey. The monthly increases ranged from 21 per cent in Chicago, where the price went from $2.39 to $2.89, to 55 per cent in Miami, where the cost jumped from $2.13 to $3.31.

Because of sugar, the total marketbasket bill also jumped sharply in every city except Dallas, rising an average of 6 per cent during November. If sugar was removed from the total, however, the average increase was only seven-tenths of a per cent and the bill in 6 of the 12 cities declined.

A comparison of current prices with those at the start of the year showed the marketbasket bill up an average of 20 per cent, with sugar contributing a disproportionately large share of the increase.

Most authorities say food prices over-all will rise in the beginning of next year, partly because of smaller-than-expected crops this year and partly because farmers, who claim they are losing money, are cutting back production.

David Stroud, president of the National Livestock and Meat Board, said in Columbus, Ohio, on Monday that meat prices will go up next year.

The items on the AP checklist were: chopped chuck, center cut pork chops, frozen orange juice concentrate, coffee, paper towels, butter, Grade-A medium white eggs, creamy peanut butter, laundry detergent, fabric softener, tomato sauce, chocolate chip cookies, milk, all-beef frankfurters and granulated sugar.

The cities checked were: Albuquerque, Atlanta, Ga., Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Los Angeles, Miami, New York, Philadelphia, Providence, Salt Lake City and Seattle.

Daylight view of the crash site in Upperville, Va., where 92 people died in a plane crash Sunday. The impact point is at the bottom, while part of the fuselage can be seen at th͏e upper left.

Investigators find flight recorders at crash site

UPPERVILLE, Va. (UPI) - Investigators digging through snow-covered wreckage yesterday found two flight recorders they hope will give clues to what caused a Trans World Airlines jet to crash near here Sunday, killing all 92 persons aboard.

The recorders were found as search teams continued removal of fragmented bodies from the crash site on Mt. Weather, about a mile from a tightly secured facility where government officials would take refuge in time of nuclear attack.

At last report, about 85 bodies had been taken to a makeshift morgue in the little town of Bluemont following resumption of the search at 6:30 a.m. The operations had been suspended at 8:30 Sunday night as an electrical storm passed through the area, followed by two to three inches of snow.

"Hopefully we'll get all the bodies recovered today although the snow has hampered the recovery operation," said Thomas Kunkel, a special FBI agent coordinating the search. "It's very difficult. We are finding bodies today that we overlooked yesterday."

It was the worst air disaster in the United States this year.

The Boeing 727, on an inaugural flight from Indianapolis to Washington by way of Columbus, Ohio, slammed into the mountain on a landing approach to Dulles International Airport where it had been diverted because of severe winds and heavy rains which had closed Washington's National Airport.

Federal investigators said they had found no probable cause for the crash, which occurred about 20 miles from the main runway at Dulles. But Bill Weston of the National Transportation Safety Board told reporters that both the plane's flight recorders were found intact.

Ford airs arms pact at news conference

Ford recalled that he had recommended a 31-point program Oct. 8 to deal with inflation, recession and shortages of energy resources. But he complained much of the program still waited congressional action and said:

"Times are nowhere near desperate to paraphrase President Franklin D. Roosevelt's great rallying cry that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself. Still it is a good thing to remember.

"But I do want to say to my fellow countrymen that our greatest danger today is to fall victim to the more exaggerated alarms that are being generated about the underlying health and strength of our economy.

We are going to take some lumps and bumps, but with the help of Congress and the American people we are perfectly able to cope with our present and forseeable economic problems."

"But action is more helpful than criticism at this stage and every week the Congress delays makes the prospects a little bleaker."

The government, in its most recent reports, said unemployment stood at 6 per cent, inflation had increased 12 per cent during the first 9 months of this year, that the Gross National Product had declined three consecutive quarters, and that industrial production continued to lag.

In his statement, Ford said inflation, recession and the energy situation pose "three serious challenges" to the nation. He called inflation "a deadly long range enemy that cannot be ignored," and said recession is a serious threat that already has hurt many citizens and alarms many more."

He said "hopefully it is a shorter range evil but neither can it be ignored, nor will it be."

As for the fuel situation, he said: "assuring adequate energy will require the best efforts of all Americans to overcome.

Vermont faculty union struggle erupts as cutbacks expected

BURLINGTON, Vt. (UPI) — A union organizing fight, with possibilities of large scale faculty dismissals in the background, has erupted at the University of Vermont.

The American Federation of Teachers (AFT) had been circulating representation petitions since last spring, with little successs, but the university's financial crisis has drastically increased the chances of the faculty voting for collective bargaining.

"In the last two or three weeks, the situation has changed entirely," chemistry Prof. John Kice said yesterday.

"Faculty members feel very, very insecure. We now think they will vote for collective bargaining."

The cause of the insecurity is a meeting of the board of trustees set for Dec. 6 and 7 at which decisions on how to reduce next year's budget by $1.2 million will be made. Everyone agrees that most of the savings will be made by reductions in personnel.

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP), headed by Kice, decided last week to enter the contest, and is now also seeking to represent the faculty.

Both faculty groups have gone to the National Labor Relations Board as part of the fight to win recognition.

The eventual election, which both sides expect, is not expected to come until next spring at the earliest. NLRB rules allow a union to ask for an election when it has signed up 30 per cent of the employes, but in practice unions usually wait until they have majority support.

With rumors flying around campus about who will be laid off, the announcement that a new position of executive assistant vice president was being created angered some faculty.

"We're told the president needs the person," said English Prof. Signey Poger, who heads the AFT organizing drive. "We need some of the people they're going to let go."

Poger said his union would seek to have cutbacks in the administration made when cutbacks in faculty hiring were ordered.

No one knows what criteria the trustees will use when they decide who to dismiss. "There are a great many rumors of people whose tenure may be broken," Poger said.

"The administration has hedged on the question of tenure," Kice said. Some faculty members fear that "people who in one way or another have irritated the administration" will be fired, he said.

University regulations, which the trustees can change, make it difficult to dismiss tenured professors unless whole programs are dropped. The dropping of some programs is considered possible.

The first complaint to the NLRB, filed by the AFT in May, was dismissed recently. It concerned a decision to allow the AAUP to hold meetings on campus while the AFT could not, but the real purpose was to secure a decision that the NLRB had jurisdiction.

Similarly, Kice said his organization's complaints would probably be dropped after it was included in all discussions between the administration and the AFT.

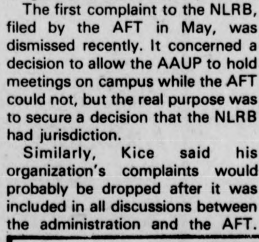
House elects leaders

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Reflecting last month's election trends, House Democrats and Republicans yesterday rejected conservative contenders and instead chose moderate to liberal leaders to head their party policy councils next year.

Rep. Philip Burton, currently chairman of the moderate-liberal Democratic Study Group, beat fellow Californian B.F. Sisk, 162 to 111, for the chairmanship of the Democratic Caucus, the party's policy-making organization for all House Democrats.

On the Republican side, Rep. John B. Anderson of Illinois turned back 85 to 52 a challenge from Rep. Charles Wiggins of California for leadership of the GOP Conference, the Republican policy-making organization.

The actual administrative leadership of the party organizations in the House was unchanged, except for the filling of a vacancy, since Speaker Carl Albert of Oklahoma, Democratic Leader Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill of Massachusetts and Republican Leader John J. Rhodes of Arizona all were unopposed for re-election.



Boston troopers go

BOSTON (AP) — State police confirmed yesterday that 300 troopers are being phased out of duty in South Boston, where they were deployed Oct. 10 at the request of Gov. Francis W. Sargent to enforce desegregation of the schools.

State police Capt. James Oteri said Boston police are taking over the assignment at South Boston High School and its two annexes-the L Street and the Hart-Dean.

By yesterday, the state police contingent at the three schools had shrunk to 120.

Israeli power noted

By United Press International

Israeli President Ephraim Katzir said yesterday he told visiting American and European science writers that Israel's nuclear potential should be a subject of concern for the world. But he said Israel would not be the first to bring atomic weapons to the Middle East.

Reacting to an account published by the newspaper Ma'ariv of Katzir's remarks Sunday, the president's office in Jerusalem said he had been referring "to the general potential in Israel of scientists and general scientific technological experience that objectively could be implemented if Israel so desired."

SOP discusses bond holders in housing issue

investigation of residential life. It concludes there are serious inadequacies in the present policies regarding student housing.

The investigation charges that the primary reason for the "exorbitant" costs of living on campus was "a financing arrangement which amounts to nothing but an elaborate tax-shelter for a small number of super-wealthy individuals and interests."

The S.O.P. says that substantial portion of the rent paid by each student each month goes into the pockets of the top 1 per cent of the nation's wealth-holders. These individuals hold tax-free bonds received in return for making idle monies in their possession available to the state for construction of the dorms.

"These individuals will receive a return of over two times their original investment, entirely tax-free, not counting the return on their reinvestment of all this student money," the report states.

The S.O.P. is also charging the university has been aware that the mandatory residence requirement is illegal since 1970. Also, Michael West, assistant dean of students admitted its illegality at hearings devoted specifically to the constitutionality of the requirement last month.

Both the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert Gage and the Director of Residential Life, Ken Dean, have suggested that student self-governance was precluded by the terms of Chapter 75 of the General Laws of Massachusetts, which established the university.

"However, other than this conclusory assertion that self-governance is illegal, the university did not credibly support this proposiition with specifics," the S.O.P. charges.

As a matter of fact, the opposite appears to be true. While placing ultimate responsibility over trust fund operations with the Board of Trustees, Chapter 75 specifically authorizes them to designate students to receive and disburse funds, according to an investigation conducted by the S.O.P. Moreover, delegation of decision-making authority is nowhere precluded, they say.

Also, Massachusetts federal court interpretations of statutes which are similar to Chapter 75 support the legality of student self-governance, and even suggest that it may be illegal for the Trustees to interfere with student decisions relating to student life.

So the report says, "quite the opposite of the view presented by administrators, the university may presently be operating outside the bounds of the law, by not insuring student self-governance."

In addition they say one major cause of present high rents is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' lack of support for even the maintenance of the residential life system. The mechanism designed to finance construction of dorms is also used to finance their entire operation, they charge. This is termed "self-liquidation", meaning that students pay the whole bill.

"And once the bill is paid, the buildings become the property of the state, and in several cases have been converted to use as academic or administrative buildings, rather than as residence halls," the report charges.

Finally, the report concludes that there is no justification for the creation of the type of residential environment which exists on campus.

"Acknowledging the university's obligation to insure the existence of adequate housing for its students, the question arises why penitentiary-style barracks were created, fostering crowded conditions, lack of privacy, and a generally poor quality of life by all accounts.

"The only answer to this question is one rooted in outdated in loco parentis rationales regarding the need for close administrative supervision of students, forced separation of the sexes, and atomization of the student community, rationales to which even the university administration no longer subscribes.

Ford terms arms accord "a real breakthrough"

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford said Monday night his strategic arms accord with the Soviet Union would allow the two super-powers arsenals of 2,400 nuclear missiles and bombers apiece, and called it "a real breakthrough."

Ford said the agreement, still subject to more detailed negotiations to "convert this agreed framework into a comprehensive accord," would allow the United States and the Soviet Union to put multiple warheads on 1,320 of the missiles in each nation's quota. The agreement would run from 1975 to 1985.

The President announced details of the terms arranged last week at his Vladivostok conference with Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev, and told a news conference the agreement is a sound one that will gain support of the American people.

"This does not permit an agreed buildup, it puts a cap on future buildups," Ford said, "and it actually reduces a part of the buildup at the present time."

However, Ford said he intends to push U.S. strength up to the levels contemplated by the agreement, which covers intercontinental ballistic missiles, submarine-launched missiles, and long-range bombers.

"I intend to stay below that ceiling, that's the agreement," he said. "But we do have an obligation to stay up to that ceiling."

The President said his defense budgets will be designed to keep U.S. strategic forces at or aimed at that ceiling. He also said his administration may, if it deems necessary, act within the accord to increase the explosive power each U.S. missile could deliver against an enemy.

Ford insisted the agreement would limit, not re-open, the arms race, despite the contention of congressional critics that the terms would open the way to a new round of weapons-building on both sides.

Ford also said the Vladivostok agreement does not affect the U.S. system of bases overseas, including carriers.

Also, there is no limitation on the development of weapons programs already being planned or constructed. This applies particularly to the new B-1 bomber and the Trident nuclear submarine.

The President said these new programs, plus the encroachment of inflation probably will drive up U.S. defense costs in spite of the agreement.

A questioner asked whether if the cost range of reaching the ceiling would be about $18 billion. "It's in that ballpark," Ford answered.

One leading critic, Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., said in advance of the President's news conference that he found the MIRV figure astonishingly high.

Jackson has been calling for a mutual phased reduction of strategic arms and said the accord "will make possible the addition of thousands of nuclear warheads."

Ford is bound to run into strong opposition in the Senate to the ambiguity over verification of the agreement. The Senate must confirm any treaty ratifying the agreement.

Asked if the ceilings would eventually produce a financial savings, Ford responded sharply, "very definitely."

Otherwise, he said, there would have been a continued arms race. This would have required the United States to "substantially increase" its weapons expenditures. "Mr. Brezhnev and I agreed that we first had to cap the arms race...we've done that."

Ford also said his negotiations with Brezhnev included discussion of the Middle East situation. He said he and the Soviet leader discovered their differences on the Middle East are not so major as they might appear.

He said they agreed it is important for negotiations between Israel and Arab states to continue.

"We also agreed that at a certain point, a Geneva conference might be the final answer," Ford said. But he said that for the present, he and Brezhnev support "our step by step approach" of continued negotiating efforts.

On the strategic arms accord, Ford said the Vladivostok negotiations were "a long step forward toward peace, on a basis of equality, the only basis on which agreement was possible."

Mortar Board movie today

The Who - What - Where - When - Why and How of Mortar Board, the national senior women's honor society, will be described on film during continuous showings in the Campus Center Concourse, Dec. 4-5-6, from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m.

Showings have been arranged by the local chapter, under direction of Barbara Hansen, president.

The purpose of the showings is to recruit the juniors who will be the Class of '76 of Mortar Board. Current members will be on hand at a Concourse booth to explain responsibilities of membership.

Mortar Board was founded in 1918 as the first and only national honor society for women in the United States. The UMass chapter was chartered in 1955. Total membership nationally is 59,000.

Membership is based on scholarship, leadership and service. A minimum number of members may be inducted annually from each campus chapter. Members must be elected from the top 35 per cent of their class in scholarship and must meet a minimum scholastic average of 3.2.

"We are looking for the best all-around juniors on campus to carry on our slogan, 'To be honored, and to pass it on'," Ms. Hansen says.

Students to examine health services budget

Students will begin a thorough examination of the University Health Services budget in December, according to members of the Student Health Advisory Board.

The Board evaluates the budget annually, and is currently accepting any students who want to participate.

The Board will meet this Thursday and will also discuss the current grievance mechanism for student complaints.

The Board is open to all students who have paid the mandatory health fee. The meeting will be in Room 917 of the Campus Center beginning at 4:30 p.m.

AHEA membership drive

Membership drive of the American Home Economics Association (AHEA) is presently taking place in Skinner Hall and will continue thru December 6.

The AHEA is a professional organization for all persons with declared Home Economics majors. Included in the student membership fee of $5.00 is the Home Economics Journal which is issued monthly.

Invitational coffee hours within the department and a career day with successful home economics graduates are a couple of the projects planned for the Spring semester.

Mrs. Jo Ann Pullen will be the faculty advisor for this RSO group.

People with any questions or ideas may contact Ms. Dianne Snow at 253-9745.

Head of Residence applications available

Information and applications for Head of Residence positions for the 1975-76 academic year are available in the Office of Residential Life, 223 Hills North.

Head of Residence positions are full-time, live-in professional appointments for 42 weeks from approximately mid-August to mid-June at a starting salary of $5,670. Duties include counseling, program development, administration, group work.

The deadline for applications is March 7, 1975. The Office of Residential Life is an Affirmative Action-Equal Opportunity Employer.

RSO public relations assistance available

Spring Semester Public Relations Assistance applications are now available to all interested RSO groups. Groups who need help in informing the public of any aspect of their organization should drop by the Student Senate Communications Committee office located in Room 415 of the Student Union and apply early.

Alternative Career Conference con't.

The last of a series of Alternative Career Conferences will take place on Orchard Hill Residential College this week. On Wednesday Dean Marcus from the School of Engineering will speak on alternatives within his field on both a national and international scale. Thrusday Gerald Zeisel from the School of Business Administration will speak on alternative career opportunities in the field of Accounting. Both forums will be held in Field 434 at 8 p.m. Gerald Zeisel was originally scheduled for today. Please note the change in date.

Balanced transit crucial

HOUSTON (UPI) — A balanced transportation system is a crucial, priority for a mobile society, Sen. Lloyd M. Bentsen, D-Tex., told officials of the nations' cities Monday.

"Not since the 1920s when we became aware of the need for interstate highways and good city streets has this nation confronted such a compelling need for improved mobility," Bentsen said.

"Transportation has become one of the major issues of the 70s, as more and more of us are forced to ask serious questions about how often we travel, what type of transportation will be available and how we will get to work.

"Americans deserve balanced transportation as a national priority."

Bentsen, chairman of the Senate Transportation Subcommittee, made the remarks before the 50th annual convention of the National League of Cities.

The Urban Public Transportation Act of 1974 signed by President Ford last month, he said, offered some long range solutions to the problems facing urban areas.

He said when the bill is implemented — through distribution of $11.8 billion — balance will be achieved by blending all modes of transportation with local government deciding which form best suits its needs.

"When we talk about programs of this magnitude, we tend to think of them in terms of billions of dollars when we should be thinking in terms of people," he said. "This is a common feeling in Washington."

Bentsen said he was undecided about seeking the Democratic presidential nomination.

BNS on the scene: Boston revisited

Boston vs Springfield school desegregation

Note:

Despite the fact that our major newspaper feels that the situation in Boston has come to an end, we know different. We know that the busses transporting black students to South Boston high is still being stoned, students are still being harassed. Tension still reigns supreme in the public school system. Students and teachers complain that the atmosphere is not conducive for studying. All day the agents of oppression can be seen patrolling the corridors or outside the building.

The school committee members and local politicians are now focusing their attention on how to implement Phase two of the desegregation process without bringing the walls of the city down on themselves. The agreement for reduce coverage by the news media removes them enough from public view to wrestle with the problem.

Certain active groups such as the National Mobilization Against Racism have continued the job of keeping the issue alive. Last November 30th, a preliminary rally was held in Boston to draw attention to the large National March and Rally Against Racism, to be held Saturday, December 14th at the Boston Commons. It is intended that this march will show that the vast majority of people stand on the side of human rights and justice and oppose mob violence against all school children."

Today the Black News Service begins part one of a two part series "Boston Revisited."

By Black News Service

The struggle, by Black people, for the right to equal and quality education has been a long, difficult fight. Since the U.S. Supreme Court struck down school desegregation in 1954, local policemen, state guardsmen, and federal troops have had to intervene frequently in situations concerning court ordered integration and 'busing'.

Thru all the brutal, racist practices perpetuated in the south, many people failed to see that segregation prevails in practically every school in northern cities. The repulsive chants of 'nigger, nigger, nigger' were not only heard in Little Rock in 1957, Oxford, Mississippi in 1962, Birmingham in 1963, Selma in 1965, but more recently, these racist slurs have been resounded in northern cities such as Pontiac, Michigan in 1971, Brooklyn, N.Y. in 1973, and, the most recent outburst of this pandemic syndrome, in Boston - 1974.

Considering all the instances of resistance to the implementation of forced integration, many often wonder why this was not the case in the recent desegregation of schools in Springfield, Mass. There has been many conflicting reasons as to why this phenomena did not occur in this moderate size New England city. Let us consider a comparison between Springfield. and the most recent incident of violence in Boston, Massachusetts.

The peaceful desegragation in schools of Springfield, Mass. compared to the disturbance and violence during the attempted desegregation of schools in Boston, Mass. can be attributed to the basic differences in the number and age of the children who were affected by this change, as well as the district and unique composition of the two cities themselves.

In Springfield the only schools which were involved in the forced court order were 20 elementary schools consisting of a total of 6,500 students. Junior High schools in Springfield were integrated prior to the court ordered busing referendum. This process was completed by the closing of Buckingham Junior High School in Winchester Square in 1968.

The high schools which exist in Springfield have been integrated since they opened. This is primarily due to the specialized courses which are found in centrally-located buildings in each school. For instance, if a student knows by the time he reaches senior high school that he will be seeking further education once he had completed that phase of school, he can enroll in one of the high schools in Springfield which offers a pre-college curriculum — or one that gives preparation for the mandatory college board examinations. On the other hand, if a student feels he will be pursuing a business career, or interested in learning a particular skill or trade, he would enroll in the appropriate school specifically designated for this purpose. Other students have the option of attending parochial schools which offer a diverse curriculum.

Boston, which experienced utter chaos and turmoil with the implementation of busing, was forced to integrate not only elementary schools, but all grade levels, including junior and senior high schools which consisted of a total of 200 different schools, and 18,000 students. Before 1971, school officials and committee members opposed any end to the policy of open enrollment of high schools in Boston because it would interfere with white transfer students from Black schools. On June 29, 1971, a member of the Boston school committe, Joseph Lee, described any limit to open enrollment as "imprisoning white kids in Negro schools." Since then, Boston has had in effect, a Controlled Transfer Policy. The Policy does not allow the free choice in attending any high school as in the case of Springfield, but a policy that has in fact reinforced segregation in the schools.

The basis for this policy is the Feider Pattern system, which has been used by the Boston School Committee to increase segregation by manipulating school capacities and attendance zone lines. An article published in Struggle , a community based periodical, discussed a clear example of the conscious segregation by the Feider Pattern in the manipulation of certain schools in the Black community.

It stated that, "Girls High (Roxbury High), English High, and Jerimiah E. Burk High Schools are predominately Black schools. Assigned to these schools in 1970-71 were eight junior high schools, five predominately Black, and three predominately white. The School Committee in the second year, 1971-72, gave the three predominately white junior high schools the right to transfer to mostly white schools such as South Boston High. In place of the three white junior high schools, the school committee placed three predominately Black schools. They did this with the conscious plan of allowing white students to leave mostly Black schools, thereby increasing segregation.

So as we see, the Boston School Committee has had a history of racist policies relating to the education of minority children. There has been and continues to be a deliberate effort on their part to keep Boston schools segregated, and the number of permanent black teachers at a minimum. This is evident in the manipulation of the Feider Pattern system of transferring students from junior to senior high school, as well as hiring, assignment, and reassignment practices towards black teachers. These racist and attitudes are not only instilled by the school committee of Boston, but local politions such as Luoise Hicks, Kevin White, who claimed that the situation was interfering with his possible VP nomination - have been accused of perpetuating and encouraging the racist attitude of the white community. The most prestigeous Democratic politician in the country, Senator Edward Kennedy, told reporters that the white racists "feel strongly about these issues; they are entitled to their views."

The population of Boston is a more politically active than that of Springfield. There has been far more pressure from the Blacks of Boston, including outright challenge of the Racial Imbalance Act. The Black community of Boston has been aware of the Racial Imablance Act since it was incepted in 1964. Some community based organizations such as Freedom House which is located in Roxbury, have been holding classes and disseminating pamphlets and other informative materials concerning the Racial Imbalance Act long before the order actually went into effect.

Such community organizations and various individuals have aided the Bostonians in recognizing innate racist overtones which the act itself perpetrates. For example the act allows a school to remain all white, but makes it illegal for a school to remain all black.

Differences in the age of the children in the two cities accounts for some of the reaction to the busing order. Elementary school children generally are considered virtually incapable of great or organized violence because of their tender years. Older children are capable of inflicting great harm on property and on fellow human beings.

In Springfield, with elementary youngsters, who are less inclined to challenge the established order of parents, teachers, policemen and others, success was reasonably assured. High school aged children (as in Boston) are more aware of the existence of different issues. Parents, teachers, politicians and other authority figures have a greater influence on their actions. Parental resistance and violent reaction to busing in Boston detrimentally influenced the attitudes of the pupils.

In addition to the variation in the age, number, and awareness of the students affected by the busing plan in Boston and Springfield and the cooperation or lack of cooperation of school department, public officials, and parents, the most important difference in the reactions of the two cities to desegregation of schools stems directly from the unique and distinct differences in the general residential makeup of the two cities themselves.

Boston is a city divided into many sub-areas which are each occupied by a different ethnic group. Hyde Park, Dorchester, Roxbury, Mattapan, Columbia Point, South Boston, are only a few of the many sub-areas which have distinct ethnic make-ups. 'South Boston', occupied by low-income Irish families, is where the initial disturbance related to forced court ordered desegregation took place.

Springfield, Mass. does not have similar neighborhoods with such strictly defined boundaries. In Springfield, there is a general area where you may find a predominate community of Blacks (as in any city). But even in these predominantly Black populated areas, you can find poor white family residents. So essentially the residential pattern in Springfield, Massachusetts is a more integrated one — a situation which exist throughout the city. Boston's Black populated districts (i.e. Roxbury, Dorchester, etc.) are distinctly and exclusively Black.

Boston English plagued by many changes

By BLACK NEWS SERVICE

After long months of disruptions, demonstrations, and boycotts, the controversy over school bussing has been slowly removed from public focus. For the moment the boycotts and demonstrations which left Boston in a state of combat has subsided. But underneath all the controversy is something that hasn't been laid to rest, the effect of the school bussing conflict on the participants.

Boston English High School is a unique high school. It has the distinction of being the oldest public high school in America. Next to Boston Latin, it has graduated more men who continued and completed their education at Harvard University than any other high school. Within the last ten years, Boston English has gone through a great many changes. Located within one of the oldest sections of the city—Roxbury—it was at first comprised of a predominantly white male population, reversing slowly to a predominantly black male population, a typical pattern for most urban high schools.

A second change occurred when the Supreme Court ordered all of Boston high schools with men only to admit women. Over the months all of the changes, plus desegregation and bussing have affected the operating pattern of Boston English. In a recent Black News Service interview George Johnson, vice principal of the school, said, "actions of the school committee and the whole issue of bussing has lowered the morale of the student body." Johnson went on to say, "If it weren't for the state supreme court, which saved Boston English from being swindled out of a brand new high school, morale would be even lower."

> "If it weren't for the State Supreme Court, which saved Boston English from being swindled out of a brand new high school, morale would be even lower."
> George Johnson
> Vice Principal

According to Johnson," with all the problems of bussing in South Boston, apprehension has settled in the school population of Boston English". Some students said that with all the violence that occurs, at times they are scared to come to school. Sporadic incidents of fighting have marred the school since opening day. Up until last week, the ringing of fire alarms was a common practice among students.

Truancy is another problem facing Boston English. A number of students live in South Boston and do not wish to come across town. In the classroom itself, one teacher told us "tension is so high between blacks and whites that it is hard to conduct the class properly".

With so many problems attending integration, Johnson was asked about community control of schools as an alternative to integration. Mr. Johnson replied, "Community controlled schools do not work. The only thing that they accomplish is keeping people in their section of the city, thus creating fragmented societies".

Johnson went on to say that his school is an educational institution. "We are supposed to create awareness of the real world, and the only thing that community controlled schools do is hide awareness. Regardless of all the problems facing Boston English and the city of Boston," Johnson stated, "every member of the teaching staff is dedicated to seeing that every student learns."

Black Affairs

Despite the latter statement by Mr. Johnson it is a fact that the famous school spirit of Boston English is non-existent. One long-time teacher at the school was asked about school spirit, and he replied flatly, "There is no spirit, not here anyway", and with that, he refused further comment.

One of the main problems faced by the school is the over crowded conditions. The school's capacity is between 2200-2400 students, yet with a 20 per cent absentee rate the school is carrying 2500 each day.

With such an overload of students, the facilities in this 35 million dollar school do not serve the students in the proper manner. Classes that are equipped to hold 30 students quite often are found to be carrying as many as 40.

Integration appears to be a very minor requirement which can divert attention and energy from major educational needs. The teachers and students of Boston are wrestling with such a situation today.

Shooting down handgun slingers

To the Editor:

As a representative of People vs. Handguns, I would like to clear up a few points raised by Wladyslaw J. Zielonka in his letter of 11-1-74.

First, there is no constitutional right to bear arms in this country. Literature put out by the Mass. Council on Crime and Correction makes this very clear. "The Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution guarantees that 'A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed'." The amendment refers to the State Militias alone. The National Guard is now the union of State Militias, and thus this body alone, outside of the regular armed forces, has the right to bear arms. ....In the U.S. there is a collective, but not an individual, right to bear arms. ...The U.S. Supreme Court affirmed this last in 1939, when it upheld the constitutionality of the 1938 Natl. Firearms Act."

Outlawing handguns will have to prevent many criminals from having them. Most of the guns used by professional criminals are lost by or stolen from registered owners [500,000 per year], so let's cut off that supply. Granted, some criminals might still get handguns despite a law. I don't deny the possibility of a black market in handguns. But the total number of handguns around would greatly decrease, and thus this country would still be a safer place to live in than it is now. Police would still be armed to protect us. Accidents, mistakes, and spontaneous murders by good citizens would sharply decrease. Where gun ownership is high, both the per cent of murders committed by handguns, and the general murder rate are high. Thus the key is to severely restrict the supply and availability of handguns, which gun registration laws just don't do effectively.

Handguns are hardly deterrents to crime in the home. The Eisenhower Commission Staff Report on Firearms and Violence concluded that firearms have little use in these cases because a robber has the advantage of surprise. Only 1-2 per cent of robbers and burglers are ever shot. How could guns conceivably stop such intruders? Authorities tell gun-owners to keep handguns safely locked up. So what happens when an armed robber enters? Is the victim supposed to tell him, "Wait a minute, my gun's upstairs. Let me go get it?" And even where a citizen does confront an armed intruder with a handgun, someone will surely get shot and killed. But if handguns were restricted, outlaws would be much less likely to use their guns if they have nothing to fear from victims they know to be unarmed.

Right now, rather than being a deterrent to crime, handguns make criminals out of previously law-abiding citizens. 75 per cent of the 25,000 yearly handgun homicides occur as accidents or crimes of passion. We have to disarm ourselves to make the death rate go down.

Mr. Zielonka's talk of outlawing knives, lamps, autos, pot roasts, etc., cannot be compared to the handgun issue. First, such items normally serve practical purposes. Further, the handgun is unique, in that it can cause death with dead certainty and efficiency, with no exertion in a moment of rage. These other items cannot be used that way. In a passion crime, the time it takes for a person to find a knife, go after his victim and get close enough to attack him would allow that person enough time to cool off and regain his senses. The handgun is too quick, too easy, and too readily available.

Finally, I want to caution against unwarranted paranoia. People vs. Handguns is not interested in taking away citizen's rights. Rather we want to see everyone able to enjoy the right to live in safety, without fear of the threat posed by the handgun.

I like UMass dorms...

To the Editor:

In the past few months a lot has been said to the effect that students should be allowed to live off campus. However, there are a few things that dorms have going for them that living off campus just can't compete or compare with. Here are a few of them:

The convenience of the dorm is one aspect beyond compare. Even from Butterfield or VanMeter, the dorms the farthest from the center of campus, a walk to the Campus Center is a mere ten minutes. That's WALKING. No worry about missing the bus, or where to park a car. If you live in an outlying area off campus and you miss the bus either you wait a few hours, hitch, or you don't go to school. Once you're on campus, you're stuck here until the next bus out. In between classes it's either the Hatch, the Bluewall, or the library. If you wish to participate in the campus night life and you don't live in a dorm either you hang around campus all day, or you don't participate. In contrast, "home" is only a short walk away when you live on campus.

The living-learning experience that a dorm provides is superior to many courses offered at UMass. Where else but a dorm can so much be learned about racism, sexism, and drugs, either pro or con? The only other area I know of is the Combat Zone in Boston. The effects of living with over 150 other students can help a person learn more about himself and how to deal with situations that only arise when there are 150 other views to be dealt with. Many dorms have a sense of community that supports the dorm and make it desirable to live there. Butterfield has just that. Some say Pierpont does also. In Butterfield, every evening 120 students sit down and eat together from food prepared in a STUDENT run kitchen. Because of this you know your neighbors as people, not just faces to grunt to when you pass in the hall. If you're living off campus you only know those living with you. Maybe four at the most.

Finally, no where but a dorm are small group activites more apparent. The intramural sports at UMass are based upon this concept. In a dorm if you want to have a football game it is just a matter of walking down the hall picking up players as you go. The colloquia offered in the dorms are also an example of this. Small group activites may be coincidential of dorm life, but fraternities and sororities have built upon activities for generations. This is apparent now where TEP has won the intramural football championship for the past three years.

I most definitely INSIST that students, as adults, have the right to choose where they want to live, off campus or on. Not all dorms are showplaces. Many dorms in Southwest look like Watts in 1965. When confined to a 20 x 20 room unrest is inevitable. This is why Monday morning many dorms are a shambles. In many dorms residents don't give two shits for their neighbors, let alone the building.

With the option given to students to live where they wish the quality of dorm life can only improve. It has been estimated by the administration that approx. 5 per cent of students will move off campus if allowed. This will get rid of the overcrowding in the dorms and free up many rooms. Rooms that can be combined with others so that claustrophobia doesn't set in when you study. Rooms that can be made into singles for those who desire them. The dorm atmosphere can only improve, for now students will be living where they want to, not where they are told to. Students will realize that the convenience of a dorm and the living-learning experience that a dorm provides are invaluable to an education at UMass. Of course, the administration has to realize that students won't live in dumps. Renovations of dorms must be stepped up. Students must be allowed to put input into what a dorm will look like, and how it will be run. Decisions concerning dorm residents should be made with student input, and not unilaterally on the part of the administration.

I sincerely hope that with these aspects in mind the dorm will continue to be a valuable part of the UMass campus.

Bruce Corwin

...I think they stink

To the Editor:

I am a concerned freshman student living in Orchard Hill. Because of the existing law which requires me to live in a dorm, I have been subjected to a very dissatisfying experience. Though I've only been in Webster one semester, I find a definite lack of privacy. I know that being surrounded by rooms containing twice as many people is unavoidable, but one should be able to retreat to one's room and be at peace.

It has been decided, that to persuade students to stay in the dorms, more attractive living conditions must be constructed. This would be very valuable when in reference to light sleepers like myself. I was unknowingly placed in a corner room located next to the bathroom on my corridor. Aside from the fact that people continuously troop in and out till 2:00 a.m. every morning, such obscene noises as people "going to the bathroom", filters right into my room. I wouldn't mind this so-called "natural sound" if I was a Biology major studying Human Necessities. But I'm not, so why should a light sleeper like myself, lose valuable resting hours every night? If the University had the foresight to construct walls more than one cinder block thick in rooms that need it; [such as the ones located next to the bathrooms and lounges], maybe I'd consider staying in the dorms. Sounds of running water and people taking showers are also commonplace noises; not to mention fighting between the roommates next door or across the hall. The added "gift" of hollow, paper-thin doors that the University has also donated to us, does not remedy the existing situation. More sounds leak through the doors than the walls; I'm surprised people can't see through them too.

The University doesn't understand these situations. After all, it's feasibly cheaper to construct dorm rooms a single cinder block thick, and to install hollow doors. But I'd like to see someone from these construction companies sleep in our rooms for a night. I'm sure they'd change their minds about staying here, in a hurry.

The administration wonders how many students will actually stay on campus if the new policy giving us the option to leave is passed. As the situation now stands, I'd rather take my chances with a bitchy landlord in an apartment complex.

Dunkathon Today

— Continuing —

The Collegian drive to help the hungry is sponsoring a dunkathon today on the Campus Center Concourse. The dunkees are listed below with appropriate times. It will cost twenty-five cents to soak the heads of these campus ne'er-do wells. The money will be used to feed the hungry.

11:30 to 12	Mark Citron, Co-chairperson, Student Health Advisory Board
12 to 12:30	Martin Miller, Chairperson, SGA Academic Affairs Comm.
12:30 to 1	Rick Savini, SGA President
1 to 1:30	Steve Saraceno, MDC Sports Writer
1:30 to 2	Dave Eibel, MDC Sports Editor
2 to 2:30	Mark Tripucka, UMass Football QB
2:30 to 3	Dennis Kiernan, UMass Football Co-captain, Linebacker
3 to 3:30	Steve DeCosta, MDC Sports Writer

Victor discovers the moon

Moving highways. Cars jammed up on Thanksgiving day, slowly hedging to thousands of turkeys that tasted the same. Susies and Bobbies and Freddies all over the country hedging towards the dinner table. In the car, stuck on the Long Island Expressway, my mother gave me a "briefing" on the state of the family. Yes, my cousin Victor was almost three, and growing all the time. Smart boy that Victor, a good boy, friendly and good tempered. The last time I saw Victor was several months ago, and I wondered if he would remember me.

Then my mother moved on to other topics. Uncle Steve lost his job, and things weren't going very well for him. His wife started working for a real estate company. Remembering Steve from my earliest youth, he was the epitome of the hard working puritan. Philosophizing how in this great country "Any man can make it, if he is willing to work", I felt bad for the man. No doubt things were tougher now, and he must be finding hard keeping up the standard of living that he had worked so hard to build up.

Remarking, half in jest, that her tales were like a "Diplomatic briefing", I told my mother that the news she was telling me was most useful. You can't take too many things for granted these days, and you really have to know just what is going on in the family. Where once before the simple question, "how is business", was as polite as hello, now it could bring on certain embarrassment. People were losing jobs, and families were breaking up. The social strata of the middle class seemed to be breaking apart like a misty cloud in the sky; always moving apart and thinning out.

Yet as I walked into my Aunt Sadie's house in Long Island the past came back like the smell of old cranberry sauce. When I was younger, say three or four, Sadie's Thanksgiving feast was an annual ritual. While Sadie and her husband Milton were now twenty years older, I tried hard not to notice. Sadie is my grandmother's twin sister, and along with the other brother and sisters in attendance all share a strong resemblance to the Russian stock that they emigrated from (and with) Kishinev in 1905.

Laughter and toasts with expressive harmony of souls. A football monotone in the other room leaked through walls of brick. The family was divided between nostalgia and futuristics. For diversion, several members watched the Detroit game, only to be further diverted into watching Mighty Joe Young during the commercials.

My grandfather, hair graying gracefully forgot to bring his mandolin, and instead spent time bouncing his "other" grandson, Victor on his knee. Things were moving too quickly, and I was thankful for this day with relatives whom I had not seen enough of over the past few years.

Time moves on. Victor, hammered out a three year old's version of Stravinsky, on the same piano that fifteen years before my cousin Lisa and I smoothed through duets. But now as I watched Victor's fingers not-so-gently hammer on the keys, while his legs, too small to touch the ground, dangled in the air, I realized that Lisa was at the other end of the room talking to her husband Bruce.

The family ritual was repeated in the house, as it was in thousands of others that day. The table, filled with turkey, cranberries, sweet potatoe, and stuffing, while not original, was good. The ritual served as a reminder for all the previous years, and smiles.

Times were rougher now, with family disasters and unemployment. Yet perhaps Thanksgiving served as a cheerful moratorium on the pessimistic grip that seems to be hovering over a nation. Coaxed off the piano stool by a grandmother bearing a glass of "Coca Cola", Victor stares out the window. A rubbery young arm points out the large clear opening to an outside fantasy. The smile of a three year old interrupts the pace of a football game. "It's a fooo mooen.." exclaims Victor. The little boy repeats, "look at the fooo mooen..",A happy grandfather picks up Victor and says, "A full moon?", pointing at the perfectly round yellow disc, that always seems to be smiling from the black sky. A head bobs up and down, "A fooo mooen!". With a smile, the grandfather picks up Victor and "sings", "boom didy-boom-boom - boom - boom - di - boom - boom - boom - boom - di - dy - di - da - boom - boom -" The tone was the same, as the one he sang to Victor's father, thirty years before, or that of his own father's sixty years ago. "Boom - di - di - boom - boom," and Victor was smiling and giggling.

Realizing that twenty years before that day, I was giggling too. The smile on Victor's face, and the warm beam of my grandfather helped me to better appreciate what Thanksgiving is all about, and why we must work to make sure that there are Thanksgivings for many years to come.

Some find Thanksgivings to be trite, and tolerate the ritual. But the beam of a grandfather and the giggle of a child are subtle and gentle reminders of where we are coming from, and fill us with smiles to get ready for where we are going to.

Ford's continental caddie

If during the past week or more you have managed to sever yourself from the brig of upcoming finals and occasionally take a scant glance at the national headlines, you will have found that amidst the plugs of famine, busing, and rising living costs, our illustrious pasha, gallant, galavanting Gerry Ford has been the biggest blurb.

U.S. representatives to the World Food Conference report "no word" from the White-House-in-transit, wherever it is now, concerning executive permission to increase foreign starvation relief. Meanwhile in the papers, Ford is seen soiling his tie in a fatuous attempt to dine with Japanese chopsticks while two women stare at his performance with lampoon-like glare. The cutline should read: Galloping Gourmet Gerry Gourges as Geishas Gaze.

That same day the world quaked when it was disclosed that Ford had greeted Emperor Hirohito earlier that week wearing baggy trousers, not to mention the suave pearl-gray doeskin weskit, stiffwinged collar, and his debonair ascot. Obviously he's got his ass caught in the public image with the sudden metamorphosis from country football hero to continental diplomat. Such an abundant lack of couth — a cad!

Sunday, two weeks ago, Gerry again grabs page one crowned in a furry Cossak cap — good evidence; they'll get him in a few years for that. The headlines proclaim a focus on the limitation of strategic arms; page two, famine.

Where is the American consciousness heading? Is it the press or the people who are applauding our prestigious president every step of the way? A few days ago the World Food Conference took page one precedence; why? Because it sold, interest was high and people wanted to read about it. While a good percentage of the nation fasted, Ford ate his way across Europe and Asia.

It is also noteworthy to consider that this whole fast business began one week before an immeasurable tonnage of food was consumed and thrown out. On Thanksgiving day the spirit of America stuffed its belly, putting aside its responsibility. It is also interesting that some three hundred years ago the presumably founders of this nation were starving and the country's original tenants, now a minority, supplied them with both grain and the knowledge to grow and cultivate a harvest.

Recently we read that Wilbur Mills, sixty-five-year-old chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Democrat from Arkansas, graced our state capital with his presence. "A most unusual visit" reads a Boston Globe headline; a most unusual article. Wilbur's sexual fantasies have taken page one priority over war, famine, and inflation. One of the most powerful men in the United States government rose before an audience at the Pilgrim theatre and bowed along side of Annabel Battistella, alias Fanne Foxe, alias the "Argentine Firecracker".

Over the weekend we have seen Ford flipping the coin that was to determine the opening play at the Army-Navy game; probably the biggest decision that he will be confronted with this year, not to mention the chance method he employed in his monumental decision making.

Americans bear a warm smile when they learn how the news of Michigan's loss to Ohio State was broken to Gerry gently at Vladivostok, USSR in the wee hours of the dawn. With such pressures on his mind and heart, Ford marches on.

Is this the face that could launch a thousand missiles? This man is the United States as far as foreign diplomats are concerned.

Elsewhere in the news is a full length feature article on the numerous winners of the Massachusetts State Lottery. Like Ford, their sudden leap in social status has changed their outlook on life. Some become overnight philanthropists; others do what they've always wanted to do, and famine descends another page deeper into the media.

Well, Ford had a better idea. The latest in the continental look turned out to be a caddie in disguise. You think you're getting a good deal at the used car lot and look at the cost you end up paying! Remember who sold us that used car? Who forced it on us? Remember the old (is it that old now) saying, "Would you buy a used car from this man?" Well we did.

Is it possible that we could ever have a puppet government? Everytime someone pulls his strings his pants would rise three inches. No; not possible. No, Wilbur Mills could never get any higher in the nation than he is now. Can he? And could the "Argentine Firecracker", like Peron's wife take over? No, it can't happen here. It isn't happening here. It can't...can it?

Mother and child have same right

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to Lori Zuroff's letter on abortion. In her letter, she asks previous "pro-life" supporters what right they have to determine a woman's right to have a child. Nowhere can I find anything arguing this point. She later asks another question closer to the issue. "...why should women who get pregnant go thru the pains of having the child just to give it away?" The answer to that should be obvious. Women should go thru the pains of having the child because this child has at least as much right to live as the woman has the right to have it. She talks about the value of human rights going down. If she wants to talk about rights, why not begin with the most basic right of all - the right to live? Who has the right to take that away?

Zuroff's attacks on Christianity and it's worth could be debated forever. However, her stand on abortion is very arguable. She seems to make her stand not on whether the unborn child is actually alive or not, but on whether the mother wants to bother having it. She does not even consider the argument that abortion of a living fetus is willful murder. That specific argument aside, do not the poor in society have the same claim to life as the rich? Why shouldn't those given life under unfortunate circumstances have the same right to live as those given an ideal one?

Finally, she sees the birth of illegitimate children as a "production" that must be checked. Perhaps if it was her life that was "checked", and her thoughts still reached the editorial page somehow, they would reveal a different point of view than the one stated in Tuesday's letter.

Don't forget us Denny

To the Editor:

The undersigned would like to note that through some regrettable inadvertence our names were omitted as co-signers of a letter cited by Ms. Denise S. Matteau as the basis of a personal attack on Prof. Howard M. Ziff in a recent issue of the Collegian.

We merely wish to correct the record, and to let your readership know that it is not only Professor Ziff who [as Ms. Matteau would so shrilly have it] is racist, sexist, and Pulitzer Prize-ist. We stand, unequivocally, in the dock with him.

Educate

To the Editor:

I, amongst numerous others on this campus have just about taken all we can about this "Help the Hungry" and fast campaigns on campus. Have you really sat down and thought about what's really heppening? It takes no genius to understand the problem that exists in these countries that are underdeveloped. Lack of education, and people to educate these starving peoples.

There's a lot of aware people on this campus who won't turn in their meal tickets, not because we're cheap but that it's the principal behind it. The Monday after Thanksgiving will not be any more of the ideal day to get a buck out of us ignorant morons than a Saturday nite at the Blue Wall.

First of all by sending food there is no guarantee that it will ever reach these starving people, and what good will that be? All that we'll be doing is "prolonging the cancer that now exists! It's like handing out contraception devices and saying to illiterate people, "Don't Produce!" Without education to the fact why they should use them or how we'd be accomplishing nothing!

I'm all for helping the starving peoples, in fact I'm here at this university to educate myself in a career of International Agriculture so that I can productively help these people. I feel it's first necessary to first educate these people in farming techniques, and buying seed and machinery so that they can help themselves. Agreed this will take a long period of time but the results will be in the long range and the people more appreciative knowing that they are being taught how to survive by themselves rather than waiting for generous countries to send over care packages.

Birth control is another of the major problems of these starving countries. By increasing their food intake for a short period of time we will be offering them the increased opportunity to reproduce more and in the long run to increase massive still births and severely malnourished mothers.

If we could use our energy and money to support the Peace Corps and help establish learning centers equipped with a staff of technical expertise in various fields we'll be doing a far greater act of mercy than sending over food that might not even reach its supposed destination.

Assuming this campaign tor hunger will continue, all I'm asking is that people involved will change their attitude to the abstainers. By singling out and condemning, even embarrassing people to donate is no way to run a campaign for hunger. When approached by crusaders I, amongst others will politely say no, and I ask of you not to disturb any of us who tack this article on our doors when your campaign begins.

If a campaign to help educate these people is conducted I'll be more than glad to help out, till then, I'll join Donald St. Mary at the Dining Commons.

Peace Corps VISTA

Peace Corps and Vista representatives will be on campus tomorrow through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on the Campus Center Concourse.

Seniors and Graduate Students can sign up for interviews at the Student Development Center in Berkshire House.

The representatives are being brought to campus by Alpha Phi Omega, the National Service Fraternity.

●●●●●●●●●●●

The Massachusetts Chapter of Alpha Zeta, the National Honorary Agricultural Fraternity, will sponsor a special lecture by Ed McLaughlin, the Area Agricultural Representative for ACTION-Peace Corps-VISTA, today at the Campus Center. McLaughlin will be on campus in conjunction with his engagement to be on the Campus Center Concourse to talk with students and graduates interested in ACTION.

January Law Conference scheduled

The Legal Studies Program will sponsor the third annual January Law Conference at the University from January 13-21. The conference, entitled, "The State of the Law of the State," will offer a variety of modular courses by university faculty, local attorneys, scholars, community workers, prisoners and politicians from the five college area and beyond.

Students may earn up to 2 credits for participation in the conference. Registration will be at the Legal Studies Office, 112 Hampshire House, December 10 and 11.

A special feature of the conference will be a "conference within a conference" dealing with new developments in biology, medicine, psychology and social control. This mini conference, "Law, Science and Ethics", will begin January 20. Faculty or students wishing additional information should contact Skip Singer at 5-2000 or John Bonsignore at 5-3536.

The main conference will include topics such as: "Computer Data Banks and Privacy," "An Inside View of the State Legislature," "Police Brutality on Trial" and "Massachusetts Mental Health Law--The Insanity of Committment." A number of the modular courses will make use of videotape and movies, including "Softening Up The Citizen--the TV Cop and the Constitution," a review of instructional movies on capital punishment, and the showing of several films by Fred Wiseman.

As in the previous January Law Conferences, "The State of the Law of the State" will provide a largely informal opportunity for people interested in law and society to meet each other and discuss issues of current importance in a non-traditional framework. Modular courses will be supplemented by several wine and cheese parties.

The general theme this January concerns legal and extra legal attempts to bring behavior and information under state control.

Further information can be obtained by contacting the Legal Studies office at 5-2000 or at registration time, December 10 and 11. Any member of the five college community is eligible to attend. There is no fee.

Continuing ed offers course in senility

A course on the Psychology of Senility will be presented by the Division of Continuing Education Wednesday and Thursday. This session is designed to benefit all who work with, or find themselves in a relationship with the aged.

This course, taught in a non-technical language, explores psychosomatic medicine, psychology of death and sexuality as they relate to the issue of senility, and as concepts to be used in preventive medicine. Topics the course focuses on include: the latest findings of Masters and Johnston in the area of aged sexuality, ideas, attitudes, and actions that affect our relationship with death and recent medical and psychiatric research in psychosomatics.

Course instructors are: Dawna K. Jenne and Clinton F. Jenne. Ms. Jenne is a marriage counselor for the Roman Catholic Diocese of Springfield, a private counselor for aged couples, and a nursing home consultant. Mr. Jenne is a staff member of the Regional Nutrition Program for the Elderly, a visiting lecturer at he University of Massachusetts and a nursing home consultant.

This course has been approved by the Massachusetts Board of Registration of Nursing Home Administrators for 15 classroom hours of credit toward re-licensure. This is the second of five times that the Psychology Senility course is being offered in different locations throughout the Commonwealth. The Dec. 3 and 4 session will be held in Woburn, with upcoming sessions in Worcester on Feb. 18 and 19, Holyoke on April 15 and 16, and Fall River on May 27 and 28.

For further information contact the Division of Continuing Education, 102 Hills North, 545-3410.

Univ. chorus tonight

The UMass Chorus and Women's Choir, both under the direction of Wayne Abercrombie, will present a joint concert tonight at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The program is open to the public free of charge.

The Chorus will be assisted by a double Brass Choir for the performance of the featured work of their program, Daniel Pinkham's "Christmas Cantata".

They will also present "Glory to God in the Highest" and "Alleluia" by Randall Thompson, "Lark" by Aaron Copland, and "O Clap Your Hands" by Ralph Vaughan Williams.

The Women's Choir's program will feature "A Ceremony of Carols" by Benjamin Britten with Anita Titsworth assisting on harp.

"Fancy's Knell", a work by music faculty member Charles Fussell, will be performed along with "Psalm 150, op. 67" by Benjamin Britten and "Do Not Go" by Bela Bartok.

Marijuana 'busts' up in the state

BOSTON [AP] — Despite a decline in drug arrests, more people are being arrested in Massachusetts for smoking marijuana than were busted a year ago.

Drug complaints in the district courts fell 6.4 per cent to 14,921 in the year that ended June 30.

But a study by Deputy Probation Commissioner Walter Murphy showed marijuana cases were 56 per cent of the total this year compared with 48 per cent the year before.

Murphy sampled all drug cases reaching the courts by studying those from one week in each of April, July, August and October in 1973 and again in 1974.

If his results hold for the 12-month periods ending in June, about 600 more marijuana cases reached the courts.

Coinciding with this 18 per cent increase in marijuana arrests was a 28 per cent decline in herion arrests.

Experts have different interpretations of these figures, and only one had a firm conclusion about marijuana.

"Marijuana has finally reached the boondocks," commented Rep. Barry Frank, D-Boston, sponsor of unsuccessful legislation to remove criminal penalties for marijuana use.

Frank believes marijuana arrests in big cities have declined but have more than been made up for by arrests in small towns and rural areas. "With marijuana at $35 an ounce, a six-pack of beer is the economic alternative," he said.

Lt. Dan Delaney, head of the state police drug control unit, says his men are as active as ever "and it could be we've made inroads on the (heroin) traffic."

He does not believe addicts are turning away from heroin, and notes laboratory analyses show a recent increase in the purity of heroin seized in arrests from 3 to 11 per cent.

"We concentrate on heroin," commented Delaney's counterpart in the Boston Police Department, Lt. Ed Connolly.

"Most of our marijuana arrests are made by divisional patrolmen—an officer gets a call that some kids are shooting craps in the hallway of a housing project, and he goes there and he finds them smoking marijuana too. Of course he arrests them."

Both Connolly and Delaney say they concentrate on "making the best cases against the biggest (herion) dealers we can."

Murphy thinks the wide variety of community-based treatment programs have made a real difference, at least for heroin addicts. "New York state built buildings; we contracted out for services and got something for our money," he said.

As a matter of fact, there are so many programs there are not enough hard-drug addicts to fill them. Arthur H. Rosenberg of the state's Committee on Criminal Justice estimates the vacancy rate at 30 per cent.

Rosenberg thinks drug usage of all kinds has leveled off.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 3 – Born today, you are a highly imaginative person who is capable of sustaining long periods of thoughtfulness along a single line of inquiry. Your ability to take the facts and figures of a case, bring them to the point where the whole case takes on an original and charming air is a talent that will stand you in good stead throughout your life. Not only will it spice up the mundane, it will bring you to the attention of those who can add luster to your career.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Keep your wits about you when switching from one project to another. Otherwise you may find yourself confusing approaches.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Take your time moving out of one project and into another. If you make a change too quickly, you will have difficulty adjusting.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – If you practice good work habits you should be able to attain at least one of your many goals by evening. Don't hesitate to ask for help.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – If you are careful to look only forward today, you will be able to see before you the end of the present road. Nightfall brings contentment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Make every effort to remain independent of outside influences today as you come to decisions on several matters vital to your career and happy home life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – If you have doubts as to what is best for you today, consult one who has been your mentor in the past. Don't rely on a faulty memory.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Divide your time realistically and you should be able to find the hours needed for work, play, and proper rest. Resist an offer that would dishonor.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Overdo on one level of life to the detriment of the other levels. There is little you can do to keep another from making his own mistakes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – All efforts to socialize should be kept within a small group. It is of little value to please the many by displeasing separate individuals.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Problems inherent in the present project must not be allowed to blind you to the good to be gained once they are all overcome.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – A good day for proving yourself before a large audience. Only take care that you are not taken in by your own publicity before the performance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – The wise Scorpio will be prepared for setbacks on the one hand but also for new beginnings on the other. Don't allow fear to keep you from progressing.

Legislation deadline tomorrow

The deadline for filing legislation to be considered by the 1975 session of the Massachusetts Great and General Court is 5 p.m. tomorrow.

Under Massachusetts law, any resident of the Commonwealth may file a legislative petition with his or her state representative or state senator.

A telephone request for legislative petition forms made yesterday morning by William Thompson, head of Government Documents at the University Library, prompted State Rep. James Collins (D-Amherst) to mail out extra forms from the State House in Boston. The forms should be available in the Documents Library (Level 21 of the University Library) by early this afternoon.

Collins said yesterday that he welcomes proposals for legislation and that he will be in his office on Beacon Hill today and tomorrow to receive last-minute legislative petitions, dictated over the telephone if necessary. Collins can be reached in the State House at 1-617-727-8946. Those petitioners who do not have access to a WATS line may reach him by dialing, toll free, 1-800-392-6250, and asking for Extension 8946.

Cowens ready to run; face Lakers tonight

BOSTON (UPI) — Center Dave Cowens is reportedly ready to go the full 48 minutes Wednesday night when the Boston Celtics entertain the Los Angeles Lakers in the first meeting between the two teams this year.

Cowens, injured during the preseason, has been used in spurts since his return to the Celtics' lineup two weeks ago. Both Paul Silas and Don Nelson are also on the mend, and coach Tom Heinsohn hopes to have his most healthy team since the last game of the NBA Championship series. Silas, bothered by a charlie horse last Friday, will be 100 per cent for the Lakers game, while Don Nelson's aching back is normal.

The Lakers aren't so lucky. After getting guard Lucias Allen to share backcourt duties with Gail Goodrich, Los Angeles lost Goodrich with a twisted right ankle, and he'll be a doubtful starter Wednesday. Also injured is Cazzie Russell, sidelined with a leg injury, which has forced Stan Love into a starting post up front. The Lakers do have a healthy Elmore Smith at center and an equally healthy Connie Hawkins at forward, along with Happy Hairston, Bill Bridges, Zelmo Beatty and Kermit Washington.

The Celtics are still struggling with Dave Cowens in the lineup, and have needed last quarter rallies to win the last two games. They trail the first-place Buffalo Braves by four games in the NBA Atlantic Division.

The Lakers are rebuilding, and have a 9-12 record thus far, six games behind the pace-setting Golden State Warriors in the Pacific Division.

One of track's "main men"

Stegerwald: Mr. Versatility

By MIKE BERGER
Sports Staff

As Jim Plunkett is the basic keystone of the New England Patriots, Curt Stegerwald is just one of the "main men" in the future of the UMass Indoor Track Team.

You really can't pinpoint Curt's main event because Coach O'Brien has plans for Curt in either the 600 yd. run, the 60 yd. High Hurdles, and also the 440-(a man) relay.

When Curt graduated from his high school in Connecticut, he accomplished the feat of becoming 4th in the state in the High Hurdles. His best times recorded in the 120 H.H. and the 180 L.H. were 15.2 and 21.4 seconds respectively.

The junior (forestry major) last year reached the semifinals in the New England College Championships in the High Hurdles. Mcs best times since he came to UMass have been 15.1 and 54.1 seconds for the 120 yd. H.H. and the 440 Int. H.H. respectively. Curt has also been a valuable member of the 440 Relay team where he has been timed in 49.3 seconds.

Track in college is quite different from that of high school track. In high school, the team met and practiced as a whole and under the proper organization became quite cohesive. At UMass, the team only meets as a whole during meets because of class conflict. As a result, Curt and members of his event must try to practice together. In a situation like this, it's people like Curt Stegerwald, (the upperclassmen of each event) who are assistant coaches and "leaders" of the team.

UMass unfortunately does not have an adequate indoor track facility that can be used as a home field for the Indoor Track Team's home meets. As a result, all of the team's meets are on the road.

Curt feels that a home crowd can make a big difference in a close meet. But if a team is ready, both mentally and physically, it can overcome the crowd noise and not let it affect the performance of each person's event.

For Curt, the toughest aspect of his event is finding out what he has to concentrate on. For each event mentioned in my second paragraph has its certain intangibles and little psyches that have to be mastered before one can truly excel in it.

If you notice a person running in the cold, rain, or snow, or through the muddy I.M. Field at 8:00 a.m. or even up 20 flights of a Southwest tower, try to remember that it's the dedication of people like Curt Stegerwald that have made the success of the Indoor (Without a Home Field) Track Team in previous and hopefully in succeeding years.

WFL ends season

BIRMINGHAM, ALA. (UPI) - Well, it's about time.

The financially-troubled World Football League plays its final game of a nearly five-month season here Thursday night when the Birmingham Americans host the Florida (Orlando) Blazers.

The WFL, which started the season with dillusions of grandeur, is calling its final playoff game the "World Bowl". The original idea was that the World Bowl would be the WFL's version of the NFL Super Bowl.

But somehow, it's hard to imagine a "World Bowl" between teams from neighboring states, especially when one of those teams (The Blazers) hasn't paid its players in more than three months.

Many of the owners say it isn't so, but it's possible that the first World Bowl could also be the last. There's no assurance at this moment that the WFL will be in action in 1975.

Only 10 of the original 12 teams made it through the first season, and four others changed addresses after the league was formed.

Detroit and Jacksonville (Fla.) fell by the wayside; the New York franchise switched to Charlotte (N.C.); the Houston Franchise moved to Shreveport (La.); The Memphis (Tenn.) Southmen were originally the Toronto Northmen; and the Blazers moved from Washington and Norfolk (Va.) before settling in Orlando.

Memphis, which had the best record (17-3) during the regular 20-game season starting back in July, was eliminated from the playoffs last Friday in an 18-15 loss to the Blazers.

The Southmen had been one of the very few solvent WFL teams and the Blazers had hoped their playoff game there would produce enough revenue to meet long past due bills. But the game drew less than 10,000.

The other semi-final game here, in which the Americans beat the Hawaiians 22-19, didn't do much better -- drawing slightly more than 15,000.

The WFL got a lot of pre-season publicity by signing a lot of NFL players for the 1975 or 1976 seasons. This was especially true for the Northmen-Southmen who reportedly laid out $3 million to woo Larry Czonka, Jim Kiick and Paul Warfield from the NFL Champion Miami Dolphins.

BURLINGTON, Vt. (AP) — The University of Vermont Faculty Senate has voted 11-8 to support UVM President Edward Andrews' decision to drop varsity football.

At meeting Tuesday, several faculty members supported the entire $1.5 million worth of cuts proposed by Andrews. However, several professors defended programs in their own departments slated to get the ax.

Berger's bag of goods, bads

By MIKE BERGER
Sports Staff

Good morning all. And as my esteemed colleague (Steve Saraceno) would say, why not go back for seconds of pancakes, french toast, eggs, or what have you, as your stomach continues to plod through the semester. Remember-your digestive tract has just about 35 days to get back to normal before the grind begins again.

As this holiday season draws near, let us take some time to remember the sporting world and its constituents. For without them, life would be dull, commonplace, and in short, I would be out of a job. So, isolating myself in the Collegian Sports office for a period not withstanding 30 minutes, I have assembled Berger's Bag of Goodies for all those somehow affiliated with the wide and wonderful world of sports. So without further adieu:

1. Mack Herron:

A 6 month vacation to Acapulco. You have certainly earned it. And as a bonus, I'm throwing in the long playing record of "Let's hear it for the Little Guy" sung by the Patriot's front office.

2. Chuck Fairbanks

Why not follow Mack and please don't watch Medical Center, Dr. Marcus Welby, or General Hospital in your spare time. Also deep inside your stocking are 6 foot receivers who come with plastic arms, wrists, and assorted appendages which are guaranteed not to twist, tear, or break.

3. Tommy Heinson:

A healthy and revitalized Dave Cowens.

4. Don Chaney:

A book of 1000 and 1 jokes, because the thought of you leaving the Celtics for the Red, White, and Blue, is not very funny.

5. Red Auerbach and Coach Dick McPherson:

Full size autographed pictures of officials Mark Schlaffman and Don Cody respectively. Enough said.

6. UMass Marching Band:

A football team matching your halftime spectaculars.

7. The Percussion Section of above.

Game films of Assistant B.C. coaches and players pushing and shoving tim-tom players, bass drummers, cymball players and snare drummers, as they (B.C.) relentlessly try to practice 3 more running plays before demolishing a football team. (Rumor has it that the Percussion Section is favored by 3 points in next year's B.C.-UMass pregame festivities due to reasons beyond this sportswriter's precognition.

8. UMass Basketball team.

Lotsa Luck and a few breaks because you certainly have the talent.

9. Coach Jack Leaman:

A best selling novel by Johnny Most called "How to Prevent Laryngitis" during 26 tension-filled basketball games.

10. W.F.L. owners:

A primer on Economics 101 with a 30 million dollar grant donated by Pete Roselle and the N.F.L.

11. Reggie Cleveland of the Boston Red Sox.

Dr. Spillman's Vegetable (water) Diet or the bestseller "How to Lose Weight" by Totie Fields and Jackie Gleason.

12. Outgoing Sport's editor Dave Eibel:

Memories of the "FAKE SPORTSWRITER."

13. Muhammed Ali

What else can I give you when you have your own training camp, heavyweight title and your own bus.

14. To the New England Sport's Fan.

Patience

The day is not too distant when in all 4 major sports, championships will be achieved in one season. But even so, I'd like to thank the Red Sox, Pats, Celts, and Bruins with all the excitement they have provided the sports fan this season.

Pucksters collide with tough Ephmen

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

Tonight at Williamstown, Mass. UMass faces the Williams College Ephmen at 7:30, hopeful of a good performance that could turn the early season doldrums of the Minutemen around.

UMass opened the season by beating New England College 9-6 at Orr Rink in a game devoid of defense. However, in their next two outings at Lowell Tech, and at St. Anselm's, the Minutemen were losers by 5-1 and 4-2 counts, respectively. The problem according to Coach Jack Canniff, cognizant of the fact that the best defense is a strong offense, does not lie with the blueline corps.

"Our biggest worry is that we're not scoring goals like we should be. I hope our backchecking will improve, because our forwards aren't helping out the defense enough."

The Minutemen will have Dana Redmond in the goal tomorrow night. Defenseman Timmy Howes will be back with the varsity after sitting out a one-game suspension incurred in the game with Lowell Tech. Howes played with the JV's the night of the St. Anselm's game and scored four goals in UMass' 8-7 win over the Chicago Minor Black Hawks. Wingers Billy and Bobby White will rejoin the team after missing two games due to a death in their family.

Williams has only played one game thus far, defeating American International 5-3 last Saturday. The Ephmen of Coach Bill McCormick come off a 13-5-2 record last season and a playoff appearance. The Ephmen, seeded sixth, were eliminated in the first round by Salem State.

Williams is led up front by co-captain Jim Harkins of Duluth, Minnesota, who scored eighteen goals last year. He's paired with Dennis Cahil and Ed Spencer on what constitutes the Ephmen's most potent line.

Seniors Angus Morrison and co-captain Joe Hamline anchor the Williams defense. Canniff singled out Hamline as a "really good defenseman."

Tonight's game looms as a big one for the Minutemen who find themselves in what will be the tightest race for playoff berths in Division Two in years. With Norwich and Middlebury, two perenially strong teams visiting Orr Rink this coming Friday and Saturday, a UMass win over Williams would fill the doctor's prescription perfectly.

Harper stolen from Red Sox

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Outfielder Tommy Harper became the first name player traded at baseball's winter meetings Monday, and there was speculation that the deal would touch off more swapping action.

After a day-long lull that produced only rumors of trades with names like Rusty Staub, Bob Boone, Mickey Stanley and Tony Oliva mentioned, the Boston Red Sox finally completed a deal, sending Harper to California for infielder Bobby Heise.

Harper, 34, is a 12-year major league veteran who led the American League in stolen bases with 73 in 1969 and again with 54 in 1973. He swiped 28 last season when he batted .237 for the Red Sox.

"He gives us additional speed," said Angels Manager Dick Williams. "He's stolen a lot of bases. I'm not sure whether I'll use him in the outfield or as a designated hitter."

Heise has spent parts of eight seasons in the majors with the New York Mets, San Francisco, Milwaukee and the Angels. He hit .267 in 29 games for California last year after he was purchased from Tulsa of the American Association where he hit .326 in 58 games.

"With Dick McAuliffe retired, we needed another infielder," said Boston Manager Darrell Johnson. "Heise gives us good flexibility because he can play second or third."

Earlier, Milwaukee sent rookie pitcher Roger Alexander to Atlanta, completing the swap which brought all-time home run king Hank Aaron to the Brewers.

Indoor track starts

URI "rams" open door to season

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

A year ago, Rhode Island captured nine first place finishes against the UMass Indoor Track team and won the meet 64-54. Today, the trackmen hope to prevent the same from happening as they travel to Kingston for the season opener.

The two teams appear to be evenly matched. The Rams will be hoping to pick up points in the hurdles and pole vault, while the strengths for UMass lie in the distance events.

URI has several outstanding competitors, including Gary Hague and Paul Piliero, the top two harriers during the cross country season. Hauge, a 4:12 miler, and Piliero will be battling a number of strong UMass runners, depending on which event they run. In the mile, New England finalist Devin Croft, Weeden Wetmore, 1973 Vermont mile champion Jim Scheer and Robb Leary will be the UMass participants. Two-milers include Chris Farmer, Phil Broughton, Frank Noto, John Scheer and freshman Matty Mangan, all of whom were members of the cross country team.

In the middle distances, URI boasts the talents of sophomore Warren DiClemente and John Quirk. Coach Ken O'Brien plans to counter with Mike Gillen, Mark Healy and another first-year runner, Pete Bloom.

The Rams also feature a strong hurdling corps. Gary Heckler, a New England finalist last season, leads the hurdlers.

In the weight events, Tom Lonergan and teammates will have plenty of competition. URI weightman Ian Pyka, the number two shot putter in New Jersey a year ago, threw the shot over 60 feet in high school. Coach O'Brien noted that Lonergan has improved greatly since last season, but Rhode Island should jump to an early lead as the result of an edge in the weights.

The Rams have one of the top pole vaulting groups in the East. Mark Jerro and Bill McCracken have both cleared 16 feet, and three impressive freshmen vaulters make this event one of URI's weapons.

O'Brien pointed out that the team has to hold together during the middle of the meet, something his charges failed to do last year against URI. If the team does so, "we can come back to win," added O'Brien. The UMass coach also stated that the team is well-conditioned.

Ailing Bruins face les Habs

MONTREAL (UPI) — Wayne Cashman is a projected starter in February, no one knows for sure when Bobby Schmautz will be ready, and as a result the Boston Bruins will be in Montreal playing the Canadiens with two patched up lines.

Cashman, the "digger" on the high-scoring Phil Esposito line, underwent back surgery last week to correct a ruptured disc. Although the operation was successful, Cashman won't be able to skate for another six weeks, and might not be able to play full-time until February.

Schmautz is still recovering from a broken hand he suffered in a fight against the New York Islanders last month. He was supposed to be ready for Wednesday's game, but now doctors say he'll be out for another two weeks.

Claims he never endorsed products

Ariel files joint countersuit

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
Staff Reporter

A UMass professor, who claims he never endorsed products for a California based company, has filed a joint countersuit for 33-million dollars in California with the same company against the company's competitor, a Florida millionaire.

Dr. Gideon Ariel who claims he never "received a penny" for consulting work for Universal Resilite, a subsidiary of Whittaker Corporation, has joined in a countersuit against Arthur Jones and Nautilus Corporation of Florida.

Jones has filed 10 million-dollar suit against Whittaker Corporation and Universal Resilite, for libel, slander, and unfair and deceptive trade practices. Although Ariel is not a defendant in the Nones suit, he is mentioned in an advertisement in Athletic Journal paid for by Jones and Nautilus Corporation. In the ad Jones accuses Ariel of misrepresentation. Says Jones, "A few months after that telephone conversation, Universal suddenly sprang their "Hero" onto an unsuspecting world...the 'great doctor' Gideon Ariel, according to their ads, had invented a new exercise machine with variable resistance. Which variable resistance, of course, was "exactly correct."

"Well the facts are that Gideon Ariel is an outright fraud...and, rather than providing perfectly balanced 'variable resistance,' their machine 'DOES NOT VARY AT ALL,' remains absolutely constant in all positions."

Jones continues, "When I first met Gideon Ariel I didn't know him from Adam's off ox..but it didn't take long to check him out...and, in any case, it was obvious at first glance that he was either an utter fool or guilty of criminal fraud; if he really believed his statements, then he was almost unbelievably stupid..and if he was aware that his statements were, lies, then he was guilty of criminal fraud. Take your pick, there is no other choice, fool or fraud.

A News release from Whittaker Corporation alleges that "an article by Mr. Arthur Jones in the November, 1974 issue of Athletic Journal contains statements about the plaintiff which are false and defamatory and that the article was published maliciously in order to drive away customers of Universal Athletic sales."

Jones asserts that copies of a magazine Muscle Builder-Power were distributed to prospective customers and that the contents were false and fraudulent. Jones further states that he has been libeled and slandered "as everything from a heroin smuggler to a Mafia assassin," and that the advertisement and the subsequent libel suit are attempts to publicly defend himself.

He concludes the advertisement with "I remained silent in the face of Universal's tactics so long as they were directed against me personally, or against my products but I have now been forced to speak up by their attacks against others, against research scientists and medical doctors that have contributed to our work at Nautilus."

Jones cites a specific example, accusing Universal of attacking Dr. Elliott Plese of Colorado State University of being a homosexual. He says, "Well, if so... then he has fooled me, and fooled his wife and six daughters as well."

Parking complaints said to be few

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

Complaints have been few, regarding the new parking ticket policy, said Al Gross, a member of the Parking and Transportation Council at UMass.

The main parking problem, according to Gross, concerns lot 50, one of the more expensive lots located near Whitmore.

People who have special stickers for this lot are sometimes unable to find parking spaces, because people without these stickers are parking here, he said.

Gross also added that he had received complaints from the Physics and Astronomy departments on campus, who pay for parking spaces in lot 63, (located across from the Campus Center).

At night, this lot is often "overflowing with Blue Wall visitors" he said.

In an attempt to remedy the situation, Gross said people with lot 63 stickers are trying to extend the sticker hours beyond the usual 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. time limit.

He added that he could sympathize with these people because they often had heavy research equipment that made convenient parking necessary.

Gross cited one incident where a woman, who had paid for a sticker enabling her to park behind Draper Hall, was unable to find a space in the lot. Eventually, she had to park at a parking meter.

When asked if he thought there had been a noticeable change in the number of parking tickets being issued in the last few weeks, Gross said:

"People are still being ticketed...it is selective, random ticketing, just as it is any place else. There just isn't enough manpower to do otherwise."

However, he added that every action will be taken to see that fines are being paid.

"If anyone thinks they can escape paying tickets altogether, they are in for a rude awakening," Gross said.

Gross hesitantly added there is a very slight possibility that the University may return to towing. He stressed that the possibility of this action is very slight, and then, only if there is "no other alternative".

The main purpose of the Parking and Transportation Council is to serve as an advisory board to Chancellor Bromery, said Gross.

"For instance, we urged the Chancellor not to tow for illegal parking", he explained.

The group also acts as a "buffer" between opposing groups, in relation to parking issues.

"We have periodic meetings and try to get people with opposing views together", said Gross.

In conclusion, Gross repeated that complaints have been minimal.

Amherst selectmen set date for elections

By JUDY BOUCHER
Staff Reporter

With the prime interest of students in mind the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night set the dates for the next year's town elections.

Notices that are required by law to be published, filing dates for nomination papers, town caucus and the day of the election will all fall while Amherst College, Hampshire College and UMass students will be in Amherst.

The Board passed a policy statement too in 1972 stating that all elections affairs will be held when all colleges will be in session.

At that time Eric Walgreen was running for a Board member but the caucus was held in during intersession and he challenged the constitutionality of holding the caucus when students could not vote. The cause is presently before the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Town elections are non-partisan and officers to be elected are Town Meeting Members, Town Moderator, two selectmen, two Jones Library trustees and one Housing Authority.

In order to resigster as a voter you have to be 19 or older and have lived in Amherst or resident of Massachusetts and lived in Amherst for at least six months.

The last day to register before the election is March 19 and the election will be held on April 8.

Seeks patent for it

Thatcher resident invents camera

By MICHAEL J. MASSI
Staff Reporter

John Guera lives in Thatcher, which is about 600 feet from the Observatory. This fact would not seem surprising, or even remotely newsworthy, were it not for the fact that he has recently invented a new telescopic camera which may revolutionize the amateur stargazer world if he can patent the camera.

John, a member of the Astronomy Club, explained the camera's workings as utilizing the process of Cryogenic photography, which uses cold temperatures to expose film plates. The process has been used for many years in the large observatory telescopes, but they have been too bulky to use in smaller, privately-owned star glasses. "The process involves applying a cold chamber to the back of the film plate," John, in his junior year, said.

"This chamber is then filled with dry ice or liquid nitrogen, which freezes the film." This freezing stabilized the ASA rating of the film, which would normally drop when exposed for long periods of time, such as two hours, which is the usual time it takes to photograph the heavens.

"Color photography is different," John said. "Each layer reacts differently, resulting sometimes in untrue colors, not really accurate. Freezing the film makes the ASA more natural, thus ensuring a clearer, better picture." To make his own photographs clearer, John invented a new camera case which is smaller and more compact than one made some years ago by a man in California.

"The process itself I did not invent," he explained. "I invented the design of the camera, which consists in part of using silica gel packets instead of plexiglass to absorb moisture," which would damage the film. "Using silica packets cuts down on the cost, since plexiglass is very expensive."

The camera is shaped like a box, with a tube on the faceplate which inserts into the eyepiece of the camera. On the side are buttons for on-off—brightness and to control the angle of reflection of the lenses. In the back, on a hinge, an aluminun plate cools off the film plate. Valves are set into the camera to release the buildup of gases which may collect during the filming which takes place.

"The film holder is about 2½ x 3½, the camera is thus about 3 x 5," John said. "I've been selling a few of them already. I can make — well, over the summer, I was working forty hours a week, so I only made five in two weeks."

What must happen, in order to protect himself in the future, is that the camera must be patented. But the process is complicated and regimented. The parts that John has invented can be patented, not the whole process.

"I have to read all the rules and regulations, leave nothing out," John said about the process of patenting. He has to fill out official forms and get them notarized, then send the forms in to be approved. "It can be a rough process."

John's invention should enable the star gazers who watch the heavens from he Observatory near Northeast to take clearer, more valuable, more informative pictures of the twinkling points of light above our healds which fascinate mankind. The small size and low cost of the camera should appeal to a University hard-pressed by inflation and a limited budget. It is functional without being bulky, a quality which should interest those astronomers among us who desire equipment that is easy to carry and store.

John Guera feels that his invention has potential. "It won't make very exciting news," the Physics major said, but it might if it gains acceptance within the astronomical community, and if there is a market for the camera.

Cores can be waived with inquiry program

Special to Collegian
By Inquiry Program Staff

At just the time when freshmen are beginning to feel the academic blues, as the end of their first semester approaches, a little-publicized university option for individualized study its opening its application period for second semester.

The Inquiry Program is its name, and its "special program" status at the University is based on its waiver of core requirements and on its flexibility in the award of credit.

An information table for both the Inquiry Program and Project Ten, which is its residential base, will be in the concourse of the Campus Center (Thursday) today from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The deadline date for freshmen to apply is Friday, December 13, with notification of acceptance coming during January.

"The Inquiry Program is now in its third year and enrolls nearly 100 students," says Charles Adams, the program's faculty director, "but we think that there must be many more students here who could take advantage of the flexibility and room for self-directed learning we can offer."

"The most flexible aspect of the program," he stressed in a recent interview, "is the portfolio system we use," through which method students document work done each semester, and which they present at the end of their time in the program to a committee of faculty."

"We are really the freshman-sophomore version of the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration," Adams explained, "in the sense that students in both programs individually negotiate the way they want their studies to be conducted."

"By this means," he added, "students can complete 60 credits, which ordinarily requires four semesters of coursework, in as few as two semesters," though he conceded that it is more common for students to spend three or four semesters before completing the program.

Students "graduate," he said, with 60 credits guaranteed them, even though they may not have completed 20 three-credit courses. He explained that "it's the portfolio system which makes this possible."

"If the faculty committee in reviewing the student's work is satisfied that the person has reached the level ordinarily expected of someone beginning their junior year, we arrange with the Records Office to assure that the student has 60 credits registered on his or her transcript."

Interested people may pick up application forms either at the Inquiry Program office in Pierpont, or at the Campus Center information table this week.

Community volunteers need help in Britain

The Agency of Community Service Volunteers in Britain is accepting students from UMass for placement of one semester to one year beginning this January.

The Agency assists in such projects as running Welfare Rights Stalls, making deprived groups aware of their rights, working with physically disabled persons, organizing projects of environmental improvement and anti-pollution in areas of industrial neglect, helping to run adventure playgrounds, working in a hostel for alcoholics, and many others.

Although students will be charged a 50 pound administrative and supervisory fee, the Agency will provide room and board and a 3.50 pounds a week per student pocket money. Students will be interviewed and placed within three weeks after arrival in Britain. The Agency has supervisors of volunteers at each project and UMass will provide a liason person to deal with personal and work matters of the students abroad.

Students can arrange for academic credit while participating in the program. The details of credit, such as how many and in what department, should be worked out by the individual and his-her advisor. The Outreach office can also assist students with this matter.

Interested students should contact the International Programs Office in 239 Whitmore for applications which must be completed within the next two weeks for a January placement. Those interested in later placements should also contact International Programs as soon as possible.

Head notes increased interest

Flying Club may expand to train pilots

By HUGH OWEN
Staff Reporter

The UMass Flying Club, primarily a social club for students already skilled in flying, is looking to change its directions as a student organized club.

"We have tried to keep the club on a low scale, more as a social club for people interested in aviation and who already have a pilot's license. This semester I have noticed considerable interest from people who aren't pilots and would like to be," Flying Club President Rich Gardner explained.

As a result of this increased interest in flying by non-pilots, the Flying Club is looking at the possibilities of offering inexpensive flight instruction to students.

Gardner stressed the importance of offering inexpensive instruction students could afford. Airports charge approximately $1400 for the forty hours instruction required for a pilot's license, a sum, Gardner said, students could not realistically manage.

The alternative to high airport instruction fees the Flying Club has come up with is to acquire a plane for the club's use. This step, according to Gardner, would not only substantially reduce the cost of a pilot's license to about $450, but would also attract more student's attention to the Flying Club.

"I am sure if the University had its own airplane you would find more people interested in learning to fly," Gardner maintained.

According to Gardner, the club has three options for obtaining a plane. The club could lease a plane for a year, arrange a lease-purchase agreement where the club would have the option to buy the plane when the lease is up, or forfeit the lease if the arrangements have not worked out to the satisfaction of the club.

"We have the available manpower to do it right — the instructors, the people to run the club. Now what we want is the people and the plane. How we get the plane is up in the air.

"The main thing is to have the asset at your availability and to use that asset to your advantage."

The Flying Club will meet at 7:30 a.m. today in Rm 905 of the Campus Center to discuss some of the questions which have arisen regarding the future of the club, and to decide which direction it will take in organizing itself.

"If we are going to stay a social club we will not want people who don't know how to fly," Gardner said. "I don't want to see the club go in this direction."

Students urged to study folklore

By HANK BARTLETT
Staff Correspondent

"Step on a crack-break your mother's back"...."kill a snake and he won't stop moving till sundown"...."a penny saved is a penny earned"....familiar sayings like these are fragmentary components of a vast body of legendary beliefs, proverbs, expressive art forms and traditional behavior patterns comprising American folklore.

The UMass faculty with three full time and two half time folklorists is encouraging students to explore this fascinating and important field of cultural forms.

Texas-born Rayna Green, an assistant professor in the English department, brings to the teaching of folklore not only a wealth of personal involvement and scholarly competence but also a seemingly effortless brilliance and charm in lecturing.

After receiving her B.A. and M.A. from Southern Methodist University, she taught American literature in a Dallas high school, in Bishop College, and with the Peace Corps in Ethiopia, where she trained teachers.

Dr. Green (or Rayna, as she prefers to be called) responded to an early and abiding desire to study folklore.

"It seemed a far cry from the writings of Henry James," she said, but I felt at home in this new field. My family was very much involved in the things I teach about."

Her maternal grandmother was a great singer and story-teller. She was known in the South as a "granny woman"-a midwife and herbal doctor. Rayna's mother was German Jewish and her father a Cherokee Indian. Hence she brings not only academic training to the teaching of folklore, but also a rich natural endowment. Like all the women in her family she sings. She also plays the guitar and has given numerous professional concerts as a traditional singer, in fact, she partly earned her way through college with this talent.

After Rayna completed her Peace Corps tour. University of Maine professor and famed traditional singer, Edward (Sandy) Ives, whose son Rayna taught at an academic summer camp, urged her to enter the folklore field. Feeling that this career change was right for her, she earned her Ph.D. from Indiana University with distinction, doing her dissertation on a fellowship at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. She taught folklore at the University of Arkansas before coming to UMass three years ago.

One reason for this teacher's convincing display of competence and professional knowhow is that she brings an amazingly broad interdisciplinary experience to the teaching of folklore - including linguistics, antrhopology, theology, sociology, psychology, art, music, and literature.

This would help to explain why Rayna, who recently returned from the annual meeting of the American Folklore Society in Portland, Oregon, is so well known in her proxession. She is Book Review editor of the Journal of American Folklore, a consultant to the Smithsonian and to the American Association of the Advancement of Science, with particular reference to Indian education. She teaches nine hours, serves on committees, and travels in search of material for her teaching and writing.

"I am a field folklorist," said Rayna, "not one of the armchair variety, though I've often been too deskbound for my taste."

All folklorists at the University share Rayna's enthusiasm for the development of this discipline.

"We all have a commitment to outreach and public service," she said, "most of us are deeply involved in schools, community colleges, and historical societies."

Asked why folklore is a subject offered by the English Department, Rayna replied, "It could appropriately be listed in a number of departments, but the English department seems to be the most flexible, forward-looking, innovative one on the campus-constantly moving its boundaries to include many aspects of artistic performance. This university has a fine opportunity to become a real center of folklore study.

Students at the Five Colleges are responding to the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration (BDIC) as it applies to folklore. The library has a good beginning collection but field work equipment is practically non-existent. Approval of present grant applications submitted to the Bicentennial Commission would give us valuable impetus and encouragement."

Faculty member aids in atomic discovery

By JUSTIN MILLIUN
Staff Correspondent

A UMass assistant professor is one of a group of scientists who have discovered a new subatomic particle that could prove to be a major scientific breakthrough in the study of matter.

James T. Dakin, as part of a Stanford University collaboration, has been working on project SPEAR (Stanford Positron Electron Asymmetric Ring) since he joined the UMass physics dept. along with another UMass physics professor, Michael N. Kreisler.

The newly discovered particle, which that team calls "Psi", appears to also have been discovered independantly by researchers at MIT, who are calling the particle "J" and a third group of researchers in Italy.

Indications are that the Psi particle is three times more massive than protons, positively charged particles in the nucleus of atoms, and neutrons, neutrally charged particles also located in an atom's nucleus.

More importantly, the newly discovered particle has a lifetime that's 100 times longer than would be "expected" from a particle of its mass.

This seemingly indicates that Psi possesses some previously unobserved physical property not possessed by any other particle. It also appears that this new property is unique in that it is not affected by the strong attractive forces that hold an atom's nucleus together.

In what has turned out to be a timely moment, the UMass Physics Club is sponsoring a lecture tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 134 on "The Universe: Its Microscopic Structure." The subatomic physical world, including its newest member, will be discussed by Mt. Holyoke's Professor David Griffiths. Everyone is invited to attend.

Three church groups support busing rally

Three local, church-related groups today announced their support of a "FREEDOM MARCH" in Boston on Saturday, December 14th. Community Change, Inc. and Clergy and Laity Concerned, both with offices in the First Congregational Church of Amherst, and the United Christian Foundation, an ecumenical ministry at the Universtiy of Massachusetts, have chartered a bus to leave Amherst at 9 a.m. and return at 6 p.m. at a cost of $3.75 per person.

State Senator-elect William Owens, a member of the Black Legislative Caucus and the Emergency Committee for a National Mobilization Against Racism, has said: "The eyes of the nation and of the world are now focused on Boston. On December 14th, we must demonstrate against racist violence to show that the vast majority of Bostonians — black, brown, yellow and white — stand on the side of human rights and justice and oppose mob violence against school children. We also call on justice loving people from all the 50 states to come to Boston and join our Freedom March."

Mills enters hospital for exhaustion

House Democrats vote to cut Mills' influence

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Wilbur Mills entered Bethesda Navy Hospital yesterday, complaining of exhaustion, as House Democrats voted away more of his power as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

"I'm terribly tired," colleagues quoted Mills as saying shortly after the Arkansas Democrat left for the hospital in suburban Bethesda, Md. "I'm exhausted."

Speaker Carl Albert disclosed that Mills — who appeared on stage with stripper Fanne Fox in Boston during the weekend — confided to him on Monday that he was ailing.

"I asked him, 'Wilbur, are you sick?'" Albzrt said. "He said, 'Yes, I am sick.'"

Disclosure that Mills had entered the hospital came after the Democratic Caucus, comprising all party members, elected to the new Congress, voted with no audible dissent to increase the size of the influential Ways and Means Committee from 25 to 37.

This opens the way for increasing the liberal bloc on the committee and diminishing the power Mills has wielded. At the same time, members have concluded privately that Mills' recent activities have made it likely he will be removed as chairman of the panel.

Mills has appeared despondent since his return from Boston where he appeared with Miss Foxe, the entertainer who jumped from his car then into the Tidal Basin in October after the speeding vehicle, with its light off, was stopped by police.

He made no effort to prevent action against him by House Democrats, who voted on Monday to strip his committee of the power to make House committee assignments, which it has held since 1911.

Mills had used this authority to sway members who feared they might otherwise be assigned to minor committees with little influence.

Many members of Congress have suggested his removal as committee chairman, and members of his own panel have met to discuss a possible changeover to Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., the next in line for the chairmanship.

"Everyone sits down, almost cries, and says he has to go," said one committee of Mills, who won re-election in November after telling voters he was embarrassed and humiliated by the Tidal Basin incident.

"He's obviously sick," said another, speculating that Mills might be suffering from complications of surgery last year for a back ailment.

Haldeman asserts CIA's motive in limiting FBI was security

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Watergate cover-up defendant H.R. Haldeman testified yesterday he asked the CIA to head off an FBI investigation in 1972 only because it would have been politically embarassing and could have uncovered sensitive national security matters.

But Haldeman, the former White House chief of staff, denied under cross-examination that he tried to block the FBI inquiry because it would have disclosed a link between the Watergate break-in and President Richard M. Nixon's re-election campaign.

Haldeman made his approach to the CIA on June 23, 1972 — six days after the Watergate break-in — and following a White House meeting in which Nixon approved the idea.

The FBI investigation involved a check from a secret Nixon donor that was "laundered" through a Mexican bank and eventually showed up in the Florida account of one of the Watergate burglars.

Haldeman also said there were other campaign donation activities in Mexico that would have proven embarrassing to the Committee to Re-elect the President had the FBI investigation been pursued.

The prosecutors maintain Haldeman's motive was to keep the re-election committee from being linked with the burglars. Haldeman insisted this was not the case, saying that in addition to the secret donations, Nixon had national security concerns because of other activities — such as the Bay of Pigs invasion — in which Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt had been involved.

Assistant Prosecutor Richard Ben-Veniste, cross-examining Haldeman, asked, "Isn't it a fact that you did something you had no right under the law to do — to misuse your position in the government and misuse the CIA in a way to defraud the CIA and the FBI in taking action in a political investigation for reasons you knew not to be in the national interest?"

Haldeman replied, "I had no intention of acceding my responsibilities to my job. I had no intention of defrauding and misusing the CIA or the FBI. I had no intent of obstructing the investigation they were engaged in."

"Isn't it a fact," continued Ben-Veniste, "that the entire reason for bringing the CIA into this matter was to obfuscate the fact that it was the White House and John Mitchell and CRP that wanted this investigation curtailed?"

"No," snapped Haldeman. Mitchell, former attorney general and one of five cover-up defendants, was head of the re-election committee at the time of the break-in.

Ford to submit added appropriation

Congress overrides veto of veterans bill

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Congress rode roughshod over President Ford's veto and enacted into law yesterday a bill increasing veterans' educational benefits by nearly 23 per cent.

The White House said Congress would have to pay $814 million for the extra benefits in the bill.

The vote in the House was 394 to 10. In the Senate it was 90 to 1.

Anticipating a strong vote against the veto, presidential press secretary Ron Nessen announced Ford would send Congress a request for $814 million in supplemental appropriations to pay for the increases.

"If they override, then Congress can vote to put up the money to pay the bill," Nessen said.

The 22.7 per cent increase in veterans educational benefits is the largest since World War II and Ford has called the bill inflationary.

The Vietnam veterans who fought in "that horribly, muddy, nasty war" had a more difficult time than any other American veteran and should be helped in their efforts to readjust at home, said Rep. William Jennins Bryan Dorn, D-S.C.

"We cannot delay any longer," Dorn added.

The measure would increase education benefits for a single vet from $220 a month to $270. A married vet with no children would get proportional increases.

Veterans could collect the benefits for 45 months instead of 36 and would get $600 in education loans if other federal loans were not available.

Ford said in his veto message Nov. 26 that his veto was not an easy one, "but it is necessary if all of us are to operate with essential budgetary restraint."

Private task force recommends integration of veterans' programs

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A privately financed study of the nation's veterans programs recommended yesterday that many of the $15 billion in benefits be integrated into the general social welfare system of the United States.

But the study, prepared by the 20th Century Fund Task Force on policies Toward Veterans, drew back from recommending immediate dismantling of the Veterans Administration, although one task force member recommended such a course and another indicated that could be the result of the group's recommendations.

The panel made no estimate of the cost of its proposals nor did it make any comparison with costs of present programs.

In one of its key recommendation, the task force said it believes "as a general principle, society should rely on benefits from general social welfare programs to meet the non-service connected needs of veterans."

It said the two most important non-service connected benefits were pensions for wartime veterans and their survivors and medical care for non-service connected health problems.

On pensions, which involve some one million veterans and two million widows and surviving children, the task force said it believed "non-service pensions should be paid only to wartime veterans and their survivors with incomes below the poverty level—not as a supplement to adequate Social Security benefits or other government retirement system benefits."

It said it believed it was necessary to maintain an "income test for pensions" and that if this was done the pension program will, in the future, "pay benefits to only a very small number of needy veterans and survivor beneficiaries."

Trade bill pushed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger told Congress yesterday the United States should grant favorable trade status to Russia despite that country's failure to formally guarantee easing of its emigration policies.

Testifying before the Senate Finance Committee, Kissinger acknowledged that the Kremlin had made no concrete commitment to let Jews and other dissidents leave the Soviet Union freely.

But he said "any attempt to nail this down as a formal obligation is likely to backfire," and that the U.S. position in world commerce and diplomacy would "be most severely jeopardized" if long-pending trade legislation is further held up for this reason.

Rate hike asked

WESTBORO (AP) — Massachusetts Electric Co. said yesterday it had filed for a rate increase that would boost the power bills of its average customers by about 55 cents a month.

The request amounts to a 2.6 per cent increase, or $22.7 million.

Massachusetts Electric, the second largest electric utility in the state after Boston Edison, serves customers in the central, Northeast, northwest and southwest sections of Massachusetts.

Acupuncture hit

BOSTON (AP) — Practitioners of acupuncture in Massachusetts will be severely limited by new state regulations in 1975.

The state Board of Registration of Medicine, which licenses doctors, and the state Department of Public Health are ready to declare the Chinese medical science "experimental" rather than a "practice of medicine."

The new standard would limit acupuncture practice to hospitals and medical schools for research purposes. The 18 to 20 acupuncturists believed to be practicing in Massachusetts would no longer be able to treat patients in doctor's offices.

State DPU head airs reasons

Small power users may be hit with surcharge

BOSTON [AP] — People who don't use much electricity may be hit with rate surcharges because they are not paying their fair share for power, according to the new chairman of the state Department of Public Utilities.

Barbara L. Hassenfeld, named DPU chairman last week by Gov. Francis W. Sargent, said the surcharge prospect has resulted from "shocking" information presented at continuing department hearings on the electric companies' rate structure.

She said the DPU and electric firms are not now considering such a surcharge, mainly because it would hurt the poor and elderly the most.

However Mrs. Hassenfeld said the only other alternative in the future would be to encourage smaller users - largely apartment dwellers - to cook and do household chores that require electricity at non-peak usage hours, after 6 p.m.

The DPU hearings on rate structure began last month and will continue into 1974.

What surprised the DPU, the new chairman said, was information from the utilities that commercial stores pay almost three times as much proportionately for power as small users, those who average about 250 kilowatt hours a month or about $12 in electric charges.

Mrs. Hassenfeld said single family households, which average about 600 kilowatt hours a month or $30, are providing utilities with a fair share of needed revenue, based on current rates.

A spokesman for the Massachusetts Electric Co. said the problem with small users is that their power usage does not pay for the high cost of providing service to them.

However Bruce McCarthy said his company is "not in any way suggesting that their rates be raised. There are social considerations "for the poor and elderly."

The rate hearings, first of their kind in the state, were initiated by former DPU Chairman Robert L. Meade who resigned his job last week, but will remain on the seven-member DPU commission.

The aim of the hearings is to determine the fairness of various electric rates charged to different customers.

Mrs. Hassenfeld said a major reason for huge rate increase requests by electric companies is their need to expand service at peak hours.

The DPU chairman said householders may have to learn to cook meals for the next night late the previous evening, or use washing machines at 9 p.m., instead of 5 p.m.

Mrs. Hassenfeld, a Sherborn resident and lawyer, said utilities need some rate relief.

Pending before the DPU is a $70 million rate request from Boston Edison Co. and a $22.8 million request from Mass. Electric.

Simon says Treasury to sell gold in 1975

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Treasury will sell 2 million ounces of gold bars from the national stockpile in early January to meet an expected demand from American citizens entitled to own gold for the first time in 40 years, Treasury Secretary William E. Simon said yesterday.

However, few individuals will be able to afford the minimum purchase of one 400-ounce bar. At current prices of about $187 an ounce on the London and Geneva gold exchanges, a 400-ounce bar would cost about $74,800.

The entire quantity to be auctioned by the General Services Administration on Jan. 6 from bullion depositories in San Francisco, New York and Denver would have a current free market value of $374 million.

The ban on private ownership of gold, imposed in 1934, will be lifted Dec. 31 and a number of banks and fine metals dealers already have announced plans for gold sales in much smaller amounts, giving less affluent U.S. citizens a chance to pick up some of the glamor metal.

Simon said there were two reasons for the sale:

—Increasing the supply available for purchase domestically when the ban is lifted may dissuade Americans from seeking to buy gold on foreign markets which would tend to worsen the U.S. balance of payments.

—Since gold in national stockpiles is, by international agreement, priced at $42.22 an ounce, sales at the much higher free market price will earn a tidy profit for the Treasury. This will reduce the government's need to raise money in the private market to finance its day-to-day operations, "thus leaving more funds available for private investment in industry, housing and other activities."

Treasury officials strongly denied that a related aim was to drive down the free-market price from its current record levels.

The U.S. position in international monetary negotiations has been that gold should play a lesser role in monetary affairs. The record runup in gold prices in the past year has reflected investor disenchantment in the value of hard currency, securities and other traditional forms of investment and, in the eyes of some officials, frustrated U.S. attempts to "demonetize" the precious metal.

Simon indicated that additional small sales from the U.S. gold stockpile might be held in the future and he downplayed the effects of these public offerings.

Pioneer 11 bypasses Jupiter successfully

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (UPI) — Pioneer 11 sailed away yesterday from its successful encounter with mighty Jupiter's radiation belts toward the first spacecraft look at the loveliest of celestial bodies, Saturn and its three rings.

After passing within 26,000 miles of Jupiter's cloud tops Monday night, Pioneer took advantage of Jupiter's gravity to give it an assist toward Saturn. The Jupiter feat proved that it is possible to use the planet's orbital motion as a slingshot to toss future spacecraft to the outer planets.

Until Pioneer 11, man did not know if a spaceship could safely approach close enough to the radiation-shrouded planet to make use of its gravity. Now scientists have a fairly accurate map of the radiation regions and can program spacecraft to avoid them. They can also build spacecraft much larger.

"This verifies that if you want to get close, you can come in at the south pole, zip up through the magnetic equator, where peak radiation exists, and escape over the north pole," said R. W. Fillius, of the University of California at San Diego.

John H. Wolfe, chief project scientist, said the peak radiation "was like a blowtorch — and you can run your finger through a blowtorch if you move fast enough."

Pioneer was moving at 107,000 miles an hour at its closest point to Jupiter.

Saturn is a yellowish orb of gas 700 times the size of earth. Like Jupiter, Saturn wears horizontal bands resulting from high-speed gas currents.

The banded effect is dramatized by the three rings around the planet, a unique feature. Scientists suspect the rings are composed of flying ice chunks and rocks.

In a few months the Space Agency will decide Pioneer's trajectory, and whether it will fly between the rings in its approach.

The voyage to Saturn will take until 1979, and the color pictures which will be made should be more spectacular than Pioneer's orange and gray photos of Jupiter.

Late Tuesday, NASA's Ames Research Center said Pioneer was 1 million miles away from Jupiter. If Pioneer's plutonium power supply does not decay too fast, scientists said that after the Saturn visit, it may be possible to send the spacecraft to Uranus — a trip of several years beyond 1979.

Moore House students elect own counselors

By JANE HOLZAPFEL
Staff Correspondent

While most heads of residence are graduate students selected by a Personnel Committee for the specific residential area, Moore House, in Southwest, is one of the only dorms which elects theirs.

"Moore is one of only three dorms that are student-run," according to Sellinger, head of residence. "It is unique in that both counselors and heads of residence are elected by the dorm."

Sellinger is an undergrad, class of '76. Elected by the dorm last spring, both he and the Co-head of Residence, Jeffrey Cohen, underwent intensive training in August for their positions.

"The training session covered the counseling, administrative, and actual running of a dorm," Sellinger said.

"Being a head of residence is a twenty-four-hour job. I have to constantly be aware of the responsibility. This also means that I had to rearrange priorities between my personal life and the job — I can't just take off for a couple of days anymore."

There are pros and cons to being an elected undergrad head of residence, as opposed to an appointed grad head. Sellinger believes one advantage is that other students in the dorm feel comfortable in coming in to see him, whether with a problem or just to socialize.

"I'm a full-time student, just as they are, and have some of the same problems they do. At the same time, a student needing counseling must feel that I'm a little removed from that, or he might not think I'm capable of helping him out," Sellinger said.

"Counseling can be one of the most rewarding aspects of the job. When I have helped someone solve a problem, it makes all the petty hassles that come with the position less significant."

Getting feedback from Moore residents is necessary for his effectiveness in the position. According to Sellinger, one of the most important aspects is 'in house' performance.

"I like to know how people feel about how I'm doing my job. If people don't feel I'm handling the job effectively, I want to know. This week, I'll be giving out an evaluation form to all the residents. I'm hoping to get a good response — if I get back only ten of fifteen forms, it will be from the people who either really like or really hate what I'm doing — but I'm hoping to get a response from everyone."

Maine students seek ping pong marathon

HOULTON, Maine (AP)- Four Ricker College students, loyal to their financially-strapped school and eager to break a record, began a marathon ping pong game yesterday.

The students opened their doubles match at 9:35 a.m. and planned to play for 48 hours, with respites five minutes every hour and 30 minutes every six hours.

One of the players, Bill Stapleton, 18, of Barrington, R.I., said the present world record for doubles ping pong listed in the Guiness Book of World Records is 42 hours, one minute, set at Kent, England, last year.

Ricker College, on the brink of financial disaster this past summer, said an official from Guiness is expected at the school Wednesday to view the last day of playing.

Stapleton said he and the three other students, Kevin Ziese, 17 of Seldon, N.Y., Kip Sowell, 20 of Simsbury, Conn., and Noel Kartman, 18, of Downers Grove, Ill., are all "pretty good ping pong players.

"We just wanted to do something....wanted to break a record," Stapleton said. "But we're also trying to raise money for the college." He said they had $50 in pledges by noon Tuesday.

He said contributors may pledge so much money per hour so the longer the game goes on, the more money Ricker will reap.

"But even if we don't make any money, we will try to get into the record books," Stapleton said.

Ricker, located in this northern Maine-border town, is a four-year liberal arts college with about 250 students.

College officials said last summer the school would not open in the fall unless over $150,000 could be raised.

An emergency fund-raising drive was successful and the school reopened in the fall.

However, it appeared doubtful Ricker could depend on too much additional revenue from their ping pongers.

"Right now we want to get this thing over with," Stapleton said. "We've been playing for two hours and are tired already."

Two receive life terms for murder

BOSTON (AP) - Two young men who pleaded guilty to the murder of a Boston police officer have received five concurrent life sentences each.

The men from Boston's Dorchester section were sentenced in Suffolk Superior Court on Monday on second degree murder charges in connection with the Nov. 30, 1973 holdup of the Suffolk Loan Co. in which Police Det. John D. Schroeder was shot to death.

Anthony J. Irving, 18, and Nathaniel Williams, 21, also pleaded guilty to four counts of armed robbery.

The men had testified for the state last week that Ella Mae Ellison, 27, formerly of Dorchester, had driven them to and from the holdup.

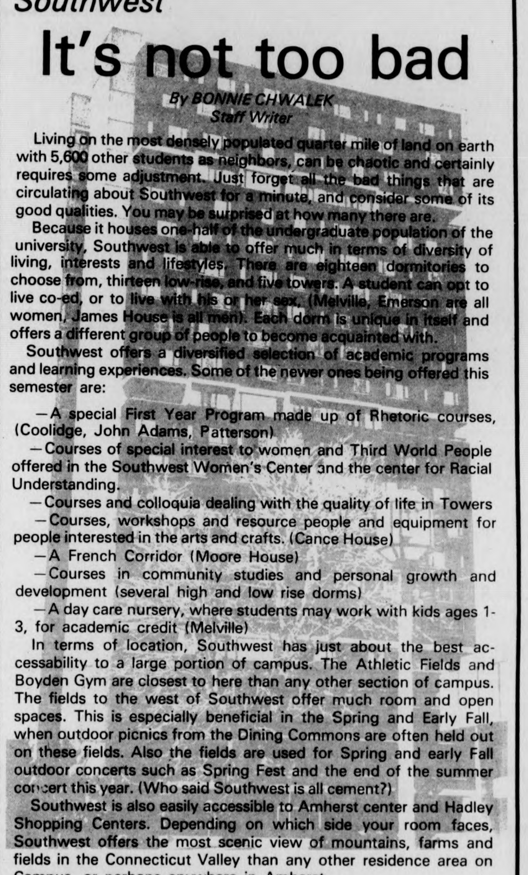
It's not too bad



By BONNIE CHWALEK
Staff Writer

Living on the most densely populated quarter mile of land on earth with 5,600 other students as neighbors, can be chaotic and certainly requires some adjustment. Just forget all the bad things that are circulating about Southwest for a minute, and consider some of its good qualities. You may be surprised at how many there are.

Because it houses one-half of the undergraduate population of the university, Southwest is able to offer much in terms of diversity of living, interests and lifestyles. There are eighteen dormitories to choose from, thirteen low-rise, and five towers. A student can opt to live co-ed, or to live with his or her sex, (Melville, Emerson are all women, James House is all men). Each dorm is unique in itself and offers a different group of people to become acquainted with.

Southwest offers a diversified selection of academic programs and learning experiences. Some of the newer ones being offered this semester are:

—A special First Year Program made up of Rhetoric courses, (Coolidge, John Adams, Patterson)

—Courses of special interest to women and Third World People offered in the Southwest Women's Center and the center for Racial Understanding.

—Courses and colloquia dealing with the quality of life in Towers

—Courses, workshops and resource people and equipment for people interested in the arts and crafts. (Cance House)

—A French Corridor (Moore House)

—Courses in community studies and personal growth and development (several high and low rise dorms)

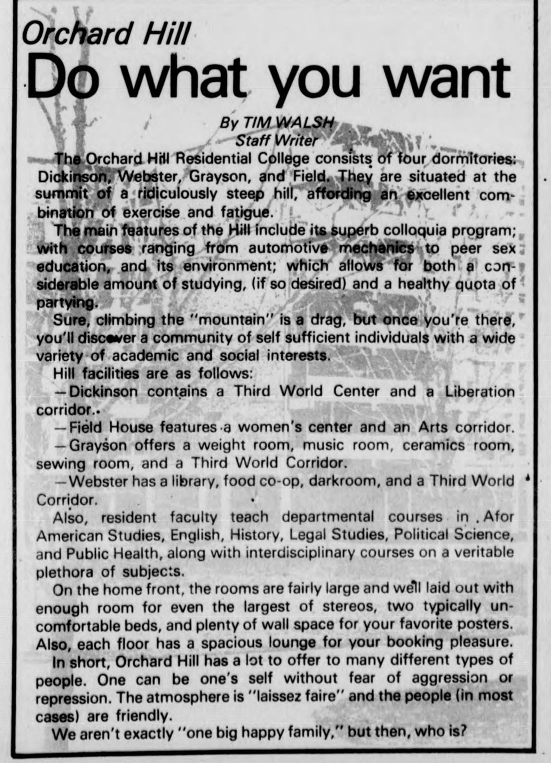
—A day care nursery, where students may work with kids ages 1-3, for academic credit (Melville)

In terms of location, Southwest has just about the best accessability to a large portion of campus. The Athletic Fields and Boyden Gym are closest to here than any other section of campus. The fields to the west of Southwest offer much room and open spaces. This is especially beneficial in the Spring and Early Fall, when outdoor picnics from the Dining Commons are often held out on these fields. Also the fields are used for Spring and early Fall outdoor concerts such as Spring Fest and the end of the summer concert this year. (Who said Southwest is all cement?)

Southwest is also easily accessible to Amherst center and Hadley Shopping Centers. Depending on which side your room faces, Southwest offers the most scenic view of mountains, farms and fields in the Connecticut Valley than any other residence area on Campus, or perhaps anywhere in Amherst.

Orchard Hill

Do what you want



By TIM WALSH
Staff Writer

The Orchard Hill Residential College consists of four dormitories: Dickinson, Webster, Grayson, and Field. They are situated at the summit of a ridiculously steep hill, affording an excellent combination of exercise and fatigue.

The main features of the Hill include its superb colloquia program; with courses ranging from automotive mechanics to peer sex education, and its environment; which allows for both a considerable amount of studying, (if so desired) and a healthy quota of partying.

Sure, climbing the "mountain" is a drag, but once you're there, you'll discover a community of self sufficient individuals with a wide variety of academic and social interests.

Hill facilities are as follows:

—Dickinson contains a Third World Center and a Liberation corridor.

—Field House features a women's center and an Arts corridor.

—Grayson offers a weight room, music room, ceramics room, sewing room, and a Third World Corridor.

—Webster has a library, food co-op, darkroom, and a Third World Corridor.

Also, resident faculty teach departmental courses in Afor American Studies, English, History, Legal Studies, Political Science, and Public Health, along with interdisciplinary courses on a veritable plethora of subjects.

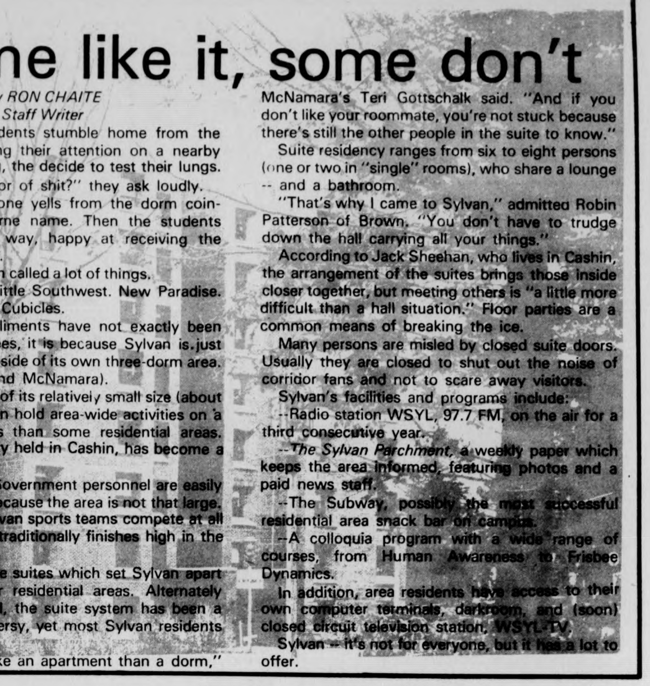
On the home front, the rooms are fairly large and well laid out with enough room for even the largest of stereos, two typically uncomfortable beds, and plenty of wall space for your favorite posters. Also, each floor has a spacious lounge for your booking pleasure.

In short, Orchard Hill has a lot to offer to many different types of people. One can be one's self without fear of aggression or repression. The atmosphere is "laissez faire" and the people (in most cases) are friendly.

We aren't exactly "one big happy family," but then, who is?

Sylvan

Some like it, some don't



By RON CHAITE
Staff Writer

A crowd of students stumble home from the Blue Wall. Focusing their attention on a nearby eight-story building, the decide to test their lungs.

"What's the color of shit?" they ask loudly.

"Brown!" someone yells from the dorm coincidently of the same name. Then the students continue on their way, happy at receiving the expected response.

Sylvan -- it's been called a lot of things.

Concrete City. Little Southwest. New Paradise. Land of the Little Cubicles.

Yet if the compliments have not exactly been falling from the trees, it is because Sylvan is just not well-known outside of its own three-dorm area. (Brown, Cashin, and McNamara).

Sylvan, because of its relatively small size (about 1,400 students), can hold area-wide activities on a more regular basis than some residential areas. Newt Night, a party held in Cashin, has become a monthly favorite.

Area Staff and Government personnel are easily accessible, again because the area is not that large.

Intramurally, Sylvan sports teams compete at all levels, McNamara traditionally finishes high in the campus standings.

However, it is the suites which set Sylvan apart from all the other residential areas. Alternately cursed and praised, the suite system has been a subject of controversy, yet most Sylvan residents seem to like it.

"It feels more like an apartment than a dorm," McNamara's Teri Gottschalk said. "And if you don't like your roommate, you're not stuck because there's still the other people in the suite to know."

Suite residency ranges from six to eight persons (one or two in "single" rooms), who share a lounge -- and a bathroom.

"That's why I came to Sylvan," admitted Robin Patterson of Brown. "You don't have to trudge down the hall carrying all your things."

According to Jack Sheehan, who lives in Cashin, the arrangement of the suites brings those inside closer together, but meeting others is "a little more difficult than a hall situation." Floor parties are a common means of breaking the ice.

Many persons are misled by closed suite doors. Usually they are closed to shut out the noise of corridor fans and not to scare away visitors.

Sylvan's facilities and programs include:

--Radio station WSYL, 97.7 FM, on the air for a third consecutive year.

--The Sylvan Parchment, a weekly paper which keeps the area informed, featuring photos and a paid news staff.

--The Subway, possibly the most successful residential area snack bar on campus.

--A colloquia program with a wide range of courses, from Human Awareness to Frisbee Dynamics.

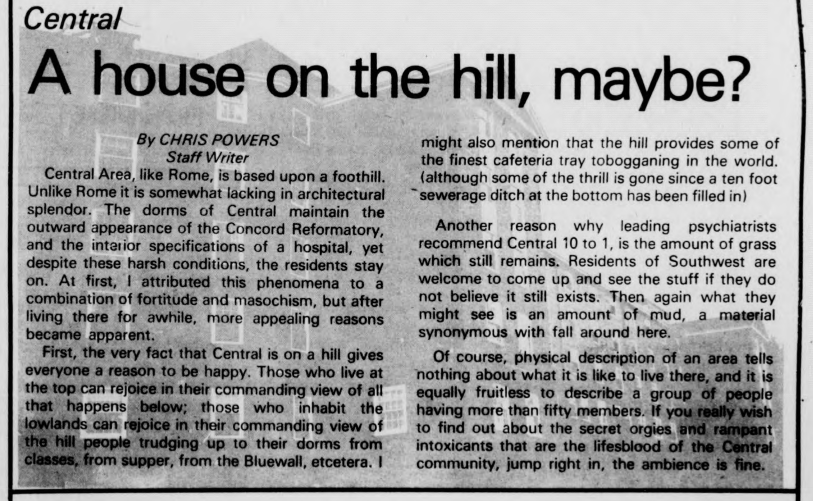
In addition, area residents have access to their own computer terminals, darkroom, and (soon) closed circuit television station, WSYL-TV.

Sylvan -- it's not for everyone, but it has a lot to offer.

"No need to discuss it, think it's time for a change"

Central

A house on the hill, maybe?



By CHRIS POWERS
Staff Writer

Central Area, like Rome, is based upon a foothill. Unlike Rome it is somewhat lacking in architectural splendor. The dorms of Central maintain the outward appearance of the Concord Reformatory, and the interior specifications of a hospital, yet despite these harsh conditions, the residents stay on. At first, I attributed this phenomena to a combination of fortitude and masochism, but after living there for awhile, more appealing reasons became apparent.

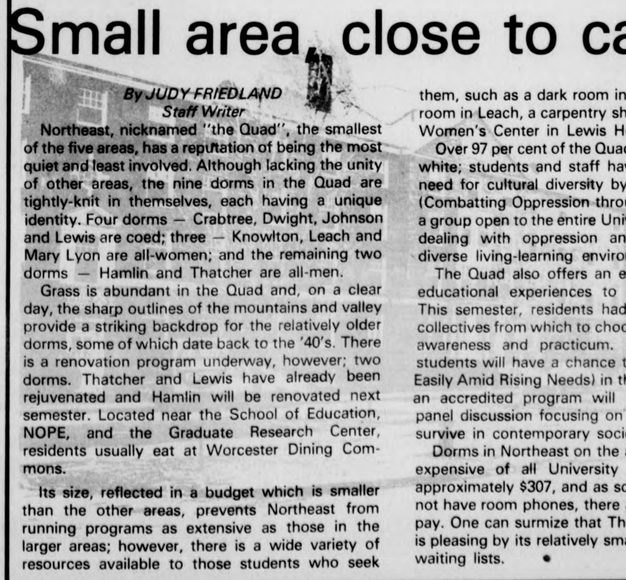
First, the very fact that Central is on a hill gives everyone a reason to be happy. Those who live at the top can rejoice in their commanding view of all that happens below; those who inhabit the lowlands can rejoice in their commanding view of the hill people trudging up to their dorms from classes, from supper, from the Bluewall, etcetera. I might also mention that the hill provides some of the finest cafeteria tray tobogganing in the world. (although some of the thrill is gone since a ten foot sewerage ditch at the bottom has been filled in)

Another reason why leading psychiatrists recommend Central 10 to 1, is the amount of grass which still remains. Residents of Southwest are welcome to come up and see the stuff if they do not believe it still exists. Then again what they might see is an amount of mud, a material synonymous with fall around here.

Of course, physical description of an area tells nothing about what it is like to live there, and it is equally fruitless to describe a group of people having more than fifty members. If you really wish to find out about the secret orgies and rampant intoxicants that are the lifesblood of the Central community, jump right in, the ambience is fine.

Northeast

Small area, close to campus



By JUDY FRIEDLAND
Staff Writer

Northeast, nicknamed "the Quad", the smallest of the five areas, has a reputation of being the most quiet and least involved. Although lacking the unity of other areas, the nine dorms in the Quad are tightly-knit in themselves, each having a unique identity. Four dorms — Crabtree, Dwight, Johnson and Lewis are coed; three — Knowlton, Leach and Mary Lyon are all-women; and the remaining two dorms — Hamlin and Thatcher are all-men.

Grass is abundant in the Quad and, on a clear day, the sharp outlines of the mountains and valley provide a striking backdrop for the relatively older dorms, some of which date back to the '40's. There is a renovation program underway, however; two dorms. Thatcher and Lewis have already been rejuvenated and Hamlin will be renovated next semester. Located near the School of Education, NOPE, and the Graduate Research Center, residents usually eat at Worcester Dining Commons.

Its size, reflected in a budget which is smaller than the other areas, prevents Northeast from running programs as extensive as those in the larger areas; however, there is a wide variety of resources available to those students who seek them, such as a dark room in Knowlton, a sewing room in Leach, a carpentry shop in Crabtree and a Women's Center in Lewis House.

Over 97 per cent of the Quad's 1500 residents are white; students and staff have responded to the need for cultural diversity by organizing C.O.P.E. (Combatting Oppression through Peer Education), a group open to the entire University, committed to dealing with oppression and creating a more diverse living-learning environment in Northeast.

The Quad also offers an expanding number of educational experiences to University students. This semester, residents had 55 colloquia and 3 collectives from which to choose, on crafts, human awareness and practicum. During intersession, students will have a chance to L.E.A.R.N. (Living Easily Amid Rising Needs) in the Quad, L.E.A.R.N., an accredited program will offer colloquia and panel discussion focusing on how to successfully survive in contemporary society.

Dorms in Northeast on the average are the least expensive of all University housing; one pays approximately $307, and as some of the dorms do not have room phones, there are no phone bills to pay. One can surmize that The Quad environment is pleasing by its relatively small turnover and long waiting lists.

Amherst College play probes real/unreal

The conflict between illusion and reality--what seems real and what actually is--is the underlying theme of the Amherst College Masquers' production of Italian playwright Luigi Pirandello's "Henry IV," which will be presented in the College's Kirby Memorial Theater on Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings, Dec. 6, 7, 8 and 13, 14, 15.

1934 Nobel Prize winner Pirandello's script suggests the conflict in people's ordinary lives when they create a role for themselves. This philosophical dilemna is particularly theatrical, explains director Helene Keyssar-Franke. "This is a play which enjoys the fact that it is a play." Guest designed Paul Steinberg's set accentuates Pirandello's theme. The set is an abstracted version of an 11th century throne room with a dominating arch that mirrors the characters' movements on the stage.

Director Helene Keyssar-Franke is a Visiting Professor of Dramatic Arts, who came to Amherst from Pittsburgh, where she taught at Carnegie-Mellon and the University of Pittsburgh. She holds a Ph.D. from the University of Iowa in Modern Letters, which is a joint program in English and theater. Her major interests are theater, Black Studies and literature. She has taught at Atlanta University, the largest complex of black colleges in the country, and appeared last year in an NBC television special entitled "Woman, Is Fine."

Ticket sales for the Masquers' production of "Henry IV" go on sale Monday, Dec. 2. Admission is $2.50, and tickets can be obtained at the Kirby Theater box office daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Aerosol sprays can increase skin cancer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The National Academy of Sciences has ordered an investigation into the possibility that gases from household aerosol cans may damage the atmosphere's ozone layer that protects us from solar radiation.

It was learned recently that the academy's governing body acted on the recommendation of a special five-member panel of scientists who agreed the matter poses a serious threat to the environment and warrants immediate attention.

Donald M. Hunten, chairman of the panel, said he believes the investigation by the National Research Council's Climatic Impact Committee probably will lead to a recommendation for restrictions on manufacture of the propellant gases known as flourocarbons.

"My personal feelings are it really is serious and drastic action is going to be necessary within a year or two unless there is some completely new factor about the chemistry of the stratosphere that no one has thought of yet," he said in a telephone interview from his office at the Kitt Peak National Observatory in Tucson, Ariz.

The concern is that the gases used in hair sprays, deodorants, insecticides and the like are building up in the upper atmosphere where they can destroy much of the ozone layer. The flourocarbons, most commonly known commercially as Freon, are harmless in themselves. But their reaction with sunlight releases chlorine atoms, which in turn break down ozone molecules.

It is the ozone, a form of oxygen concentrated 15 to 30 miles high, that screens out nearly all of the high intensity ultraviolet radiation from the sun. It has been estimated that a 5 per cent reduction in ozone would increase the incidence of skin cancer in the United States by anywhere from 8,000 to tens of thousands of cases a year.

State senate will study offshore oil development

Senator William M. Bulger (D-Bos.), Chairman of the Special Legislative Commission on Marine Boundaries and Resources, announced that hearings on offshore oil development will resume as a result of a recent disclosure that the U.S. Department of Interior has scheduled Georges Bank for leasing in May of 1976.

Senator Bulger commented, "I am very disturbed by this disclosure and must unhappily conclude that the Federal government in its apparent lack of direction in energy matters is committeed, as are the major oil companies, to increasing in a mindless manner that supplies of oil without rational consideration of energy conservation."

"National experts and officials will be invited to place before the public the many facts particularly relevant to Massachusetts surrounding offshore oil development that have been intentionally in some cases obscured to serve the purposes of the majors."

Outdoor group seeks to make cold exciting

By BARBARA SOBACINSKY
Outdooor Interest Group

It's getting mighty cold outside and some folks are content to stay inside a warm room. But some folks (whilst they vegetate in front of a television) cannot remove from their souls the excitement of the outdoors. Yes, they simply refuse to allow nature to go untended, unloved and wasted. Their souls swell with the desire to have an affair with nature.

If you might be one of these people (or think you might like to see if you're one of these outdoor folks) then don't let the frigid weather frustrate you. Some people who have found out that the "out-of-doors" always has open arms have gotten together to create an "Outdoor Interest Group". The group is planning to give birth to a University Outdoor Program in the near future.

The Outdoor Interest Group is sponsoring some Winterim colloquia for the January term. These will be mostly one credit colloquia, workshops and seminars giving you the chance to experience the natural environment. The outdoors becomes the classroom. These courses attempt to incorporate all the facets of education - intellectual, physical and personal development - into a single learning experience in our outdoors environment.

JS to offer courses on photography

William Curtis, a photographer with The Boston Globe, will offer two seminars in photojournalism during the Spring, 1975, semester as part of the Journalistic Studies Program.

Enrollment in the seminars, one at the beginning level and one at the advanced level, will be limited and by instructor's permission only.

Curtis will be available in Room E12S Machmer from noon until 3 p.m. on Tuesday, Dec. 10, to discuss the courses with prospective students. Those wishing to enroll are urged to bring portfolios of their photographs with them for their interview with Curtis.

BNS on the scene - Boston revisited Part two

Rumors pervade the Boston Crisis

By Black News Service

During the recent violence in Boston, following the court ordered school desegregation plan, much false virulent "hear-say" passed from person to person. When one girl had a minor scuffle with another student in which her clothes were torn, a prevailing rumor announced "a girl got raped". In another instance a policeman was reported to have been killed by a truck. In fact he suffered leg injuries only when another person fell upon him.

These and other hideous rumors, in addition to the inaccurate accounts of events circulated by the local news media, prompted groups of concerned citizens to develop alternative means of informing the public. Thus, several information or rumor control centers were implemented, providing prompt factual information concerning different incidents related to the desegregation and busing situation.

One such concerned group is Fredom House, a community based organization interested in assisting Blacks and other low-income families with housing, education, and other problems which directly affect them. Fredom House has existed for 25 years. Within the Fredom House structure is the Institute of Community Education: the program directly responsible for the inception and operation of the rumor control center located in Roxbury.

This rumor control center was started in September and, like other rumor control centers, it was primarily incepted in order to present official, accurate reports on runners which were perpetrated throughout the community. A hot line service gave information about schools the students were going to, pick-up and drop-off points for buses, any services which were available in the public school system, and just about any other information that would be of interest to a parent or student concerning conditions related to bussing.

The center was operated by 5 staff members, and many volunteers, who actively took part in answering phones, tracking down information, or actually reporting information to the rumor control center.

Sources used in verifying the credibility of rumors were police reports, City Hall information, and workers on the scene.

The most pertinent source of accurate information, however, were those reporters who actually went to the particular areas where events transpired. These members had constant contact with the control center through the use of an electronic paging device which they carried. This device emits a beeping sound when a signal is sent from the central office. The reporter would then find a telephone in order to contact the center to find out what information was needed. These reporters were a great asset to the center because of their first hand account of any happening, and also because they were actually a part of the community, and were able to deal with the situation more readily than someone from outside.

The rumor control center affiliated with Fredom House in Roxbury provided a vital service to the people of Boston during the recent crisis. But this information center is not the only one located in the Boston area. There are others in areas such as South Boston, Rosindale, Hyde Park, and at City Hall.

In view of this fact Dennis Roach, media coordinator for the institute of community education at Freedom House, was asked in a recent interview whether there was a possible divergence of interest because of the numerous information centers located in one city area having the same function.

Mr. Roach stated that he did not see any problem at all, "with more than one information center, there was always a place a person could call and receive prompt service. At the beginning of the Boston bussing situation there were ten phones in operation at the Freedom House and they all were constantly ringing. There definitely was a need for more than one information center, to take some of the load off the other center."

Beside the necessity of a divided work load which enabled more people to be informed, Dennis Roach also explained "with the presence of more than one center, we are also able to check with each other and work collectively in getting to the root of many of the rumors that were started.

Since violent incidents related to bussing have been reduced to a minimum, media coverage have discontinued. "I guess since there is no violence occuring," explains Mr. Roach, "the media don't really feel that there is anything to write about, but it's still a boiling pot. It just hasn't exploded yet. If the other half of the bussing plan is implemented — Phase two which will include schools in East Boston, Charlestown, and other parts of Boston — is implemented, then the whole thing will rise up again, and the need for control over the city will be mandatory once more."

Report from Charlotte

In a recent telephone interview and in previously published news stories, two of the four Boston students who travelled to Charlotte, North Carolina last month said that they benefitted from the experience. Eighteen year old Robert Messisa of Hyde Park said, in a telephone interview that there were many ongoing projects in the Charlestown High Schools that should be implemented in the Boston school system.

Among the programs are "The Aires Project", in which "responsible high school students get together with elementary school kids," she said.

Messisa flew to Charlotte with three other students, Dana Gonsal, 18, of Mattapan, Linda Lawrence, 17, of Hyde Park, and Barbara Steer, 18, of Mattapan. All attend Hyde Park High and all are on the Bi-racial Committee.

The students arrived in Charlotte on October 21st accompanied by two male observers, one black and one white, giving the delegation equal representation in terms of race and sex.

Robert described the trip as "non stop rapping with black and white students, faculty, and school officials who would listen". He feels that many Boston parents aren't helping the situation. "If the kids were left alone for a week, perhaps things would calm down."

Eighteen year old Barbara Steer of Mattapan feels that there is a definite lack of communication in the Boston school that she attends.

After her return from Charlotte, North Carolina she complained of conditions in Hyde Park High, which she feels compounds the integration process. Steer mentioned the over-crowded cafeteria and toilets without doors. "Policemen in the halls," she added, "make it hard to study."

We enjoyed our stay in Charlotte. The people were warm, hospitable, understanding, and treated us with respect," she said. They really prepare students for college down there. The Charlotte schools have more programs, special audio-visual facilities, mandatory driver education, and special literature programs such as Women's Literature. Steer added that she would like these implemented into the Boston School System.

Messina also commented that rennovation of the Boston schools would help. In a Boston Globe interview, he remarked that the Boston and Charlotte schools are only similar "in that they both have blackboards and chalk."

West Charlotte High has a 60 per cent white student body, the students there appear to fully accept integration. It may appear that all is not well in North Carolina. We read that the Bostonians' trip was cut short due to what other resources describe as a "racial unrest". However, Messina says that students at West Charlotte told her the unrest at Olympic High was drug related.

The trip was financed by the students in the Charlotte schools and the Charlotte community. According to the Boston Globe, the Boston School Committee had nothing to do with the trip, except voting to recall the students in view of the Charlotte disturbance.

Commenting on the inadequacy of public schooling in general, Steer said, "It's here and we have to solve the problems and get down to the business of education."

Anti-racism rally planned

BOSTON [LNS] — A massive "Boston Freedom March for Human Dignity" has been called for December 14 at Boston Commons by black and trade union people. The national action is planned to counter the mobilizations against school desegregation and busing that have been gaining momentum in Boston.

According to the Emergency Committee for a National Mobilization Against Racism, a broad-based ad hoc coalition of groups that is sponsoring the demonstration, "We believe that the urgency of the situation requires the broadest possible demonstration bringing together the maximum number of people who are against mob attacks on black school children and who are for the right of these children to go to any school in safety."

Announcing the action at a news conference on November 20, William Owens, the first black State Senator-elect from Massachusetts, said that the action would say "no to institutionalized racism, no to racist mob violence, no to racism in education, and no to the Boston School committee."

Among others announcing the action was Dennis Serette, Vice-President of Local 1101, Communication Workers of America, and President of the New York State Coalition of Black Trade Unionists; Reverend Weeks and Reverend Codman, black churchpeople in Boston; and Leo Fletcher, President of the United Community Construction Workers.

The Emergency Committee for a National Mobilization against Racism during its few weeks of existence, has reached many individuals and organizations who have agreed to join together in sponsoring a peaceful mass action.

Among initial endorsers are William Lucy, President of the Coalition of Black Trade Unionists and National Secretary-Treasurer of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees; Rexford Weng, Vice-President of the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO; and Fred Punch, District 1199E — National Union of Hospital and Health Care Employees, Baltimore.

People in various organizations are building for the demonstration. Endorsers at this point include: Virginia and Walter Collins, Southern Conference Educational Fund; Clyde Bellecourt and Leonard Crow Dog, American Indian Movement; Reverend George Webber, Clergy and Laity Concerned; Brother Big Black and Herbert X. Blyden, Attica Offense-Defense; Minnie Player, Cleveland Welfare Rights Organization; Geraldine Roberts, Domestic Workers of America; and Bill Worthington, Black Lung Association.

For more information about the march and local committee in your area, contact the Emergency Committee for a National Mobilization Against Racism, 634 Massachusetts Avenue, Room 207, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02139 or telephone (617) 876-9295.

Paul Harrison honored

The faculty and staff are cordially invited to attend a book party honoring Professor Paul Carter Harrison, professor of Afro-American Studies and Theatre. The Party will be held December 8th between 3 and 6 p.m. at the black cultural center at Smith College.

Professor Harrison is the editor of the latest title on Black Theatre-- Kuntu Drama: Plays of the African Continium (Grove Press). His intent in this effort is to demonstrate the influence of Africa on the sensibilities of Afro-American playwrights as reflected in the contemporary forms of Black Theatre.

Professor Harrison is also the author of The Drama of Nomme.

Letters to the editor

Facts vs. distortions

To the Editor:

First of all, Ed Cohen deserves a great deal of credit and gratitude from all of us in any way concerned and-or interested in the Mid-East situation. For too long, too many people have allowed themselves and others to be fooled by the distortions, ignorance and avoidance of the truth, and outright lies on the part of both the Israeli and the Arab governments (to say nothing of U.S. and British fabrications).

Last week, I wrote a letter to the Collegian running down many of the facts vs. myths. Fortunately, Ed Cohen's article was much better written and more complete, presumably explaining why my letter was not printed. There are still a couple points that should, at this time, be added to the raging controversy. Shalom Eliezer's letter (?) was a nearly worthless addition to the debate, and certainly no contribution to informing the public about what has really been going on for the past 30 years in the Mid-East. To Diane Karsh (both Eliezer's and Karsh's letters appeared in the Nov. 25 Collegian ) I have this to say: Her point about how "the Arab governments told them (Palestinians) that the Jews would kill them if they did not (flee)", was just another of the gross lies fostered by Israel and its supporters. During the initial Israeli-Arab war, radio broadcasts told Palestinian villagers that Israel was out to kill them, and that they should come to the neighboring Arab countries, where they would receive land and shelter. As it turns out, the British government finally admitted, only a few years ago, that these broadcasts were made, not by any Arab country, but by the British Army itself as part of their official program to drive out the population of Palestine in order to impose a Jewish state on their homeland.

Also, Ms. Karsh makes mention of Arab-Palestine terrorist groups, specifically the Stern "gang." Why does she choose to leave out the Israeli-Zionist terrorist groups who, armed by Britain and the U.S., literally wiped out entire villages (not 6 people, not one airplane, but entire 3 and 4 thousand-year-old settlements) of Palestinians who wouldn't leave under the "advice" of phony radio broadcasts and rumors. Maybe neither side is blameless on the question of senseless terrorism, but let's at least weigh the facts before inventing heroes and martyrs.

Now we hear from Ms. Karsh that the World War II Jewish-German casualty count has gone up to 10 million. Is this because people are beginning to realize that Hitler's murder of 6 million Jews is irrelevant to the position of Jews today, and thus the figures must be raised in order to regain the shock value of the Nazi atrocities? Let's have some more facts, Diane.

Final point: How different is the Palestinian situation from that of the Native American ("Indian") populations of North and South America, who were brutally slaughtered and left to rot on the worst land of the continents by the barbarians from Europe? The same mentality, the same attitudes, and therefore the same people, are doing the same thing to the Palestinians — claiming their "manifest destiny" justifies the oppressing and murdering of Palestinians, after ruthlessly robbing them of their lands and livelihoods.

Let us also not forget that, in spite of Palestine's mention in the Bible, it was the last choice (after sections of Germany and Ethiopia) of the Zionist Congress for a place to impose a Jewish state. Zionism is preached as a basic tenet of Judaism, just as papal infallibility is passed off as the fundamental cornerstone of the Vatican and Catholicism. But, if we were to go back a mere 100 years in the lifetimes of these two ancient religions, we would find that neither of these "Truths" were in existence yet. Fact, not distortion.

Not all voters support nuclear power plant

To the Editor:

David Kowal's letter in last Tuesday's Collegian expressed an informed awareness and healthy concern about the effects of nuclear powerplant radiation. However, he closed his letter by saying that, "from the recent election results, it is apparent that someone isn't doing their job." I would like to bring some additional information to his attention and to the attention of everyone interested in the nuke issue.

First, the results of the referendum have in some places been represented as a victory for the proponents of nuclear power. The correct information is that 47.5 per cent of the voters in the Franklin-Hampshire-Hampden County district oppose the construction of the Montague plant, and 33.2 per cent call for the immediate closing and dismantling of the plants at Rowe and Vernon.

The significance of these results lies in their political impact: on both questions, voter support turned out to be much, much greater than expected. One out of every two voters opposes the Montague nuke, one out of every three demands the immediate shutdown of Rowe and Vernon. Even in the town of Montague itself support for the plants diminished from 3-to-1 last spring to 2-to-1 last week. And opposition is still mounting.

Second, the results of the referenda turned out as well as they did only through the hard work of dozens of people throughout Hampshire and Franklin Counties. It was the Alternative Energy Coalition who placed the questions on the ballot. Starting last spring, we framed the questions, printed hundreds of petitions, and spent the summer gathering over 3,800 signatures, more than enough to get the two questions before the voting public. We then conducted a drive to get residents registered to vote and initiated a campaign to inform voters of the referenda, counteract preconceptions about nukes, and provide the public with the full story on nuclear power. We distributed thousands of pieces of literature, produced radio spots, engaged in debates, addressed numerous area groups and meetings, and finally organized one of the most comprehensive canvassing efforts ever to be undertaken in this district. On campus MassPIRG recruited students to participate during the weeks prior to the election. Throughout the campaign, the Alternative Energy Coalition provided speakers and news articles to the Sunday News Collective and the Progressive News Service to keep the student body informed.

Third, last week's referendum was the largest nuclear power referendum ever to be held in this country. The results showed that the anti-nuclear movement in this area has grown to even greater proportions than was anticipated, and that nuclear power is already becoming one of the major issues of the 1970s. The Collegian's coverage of the referenda results, however, was surprising.

The Nov. 7 issue carried nothing more than a 3-inch AP wirestory with the headline: "Local residents endorse NUKES." No attempt was made to examine the implications of the referenda or place their significance in any social context. For the Collegian to provide this kind of coverage on a major issue is superficial and careless journalism — a disappointing oversight on the part of the editors.

The Alternative Energy Coalition is presently gearing up to use the referenda results to their greatest effectiveness in promoting the anti-nuke movement and supporting energy-related legislation on federal, state, and local levels. In addition, we are continuing our effort to provide the public with full information on nuclear power and the advanced energy system alternatives.

I invite David Kowal and everyone else concerned about this issue to help us do our job. Contact the Alternative Energy Coalition in Amherst, 253-2564.

To the Editor:

First of all, how are facts biased? Or are they only biased when they don't fall into your neat little ideas of right and wrong? (assuming you do know the difference.)

Do you call a chance for equal education, the right to know and be proud of a Black heritage and the natural right to be accepted as a man or woman regardless of color everything? Well, you are right, it is everything — but we as white Americans take it for granted. No-one has ever forced on US the idea that we're inferior, that we have no place in history, that in asking for basic rights we want EVERYTHING. Damn right!! Because we've been ve-e-ery careful to make Blacks feel like non-people, either acknowledging them with hatred or ignoring them altogether.

Now things are changing — we have forced busing in Boston, in the liberal North — and Boston school kids have to go down to South Carolina to see how THEY get along with fellow students of another color. Isn't that insane?

Okay, now you want the other side of the busing issue — well, there was no one at the teach-in who said "we don't want busing because we don't want to go to school with Blacks." Now you don't have to wonder why there has been such strong resistance to busing in Boston. It's all here in Black and White.

Israel's side; an ancient story

By SHALOM ELIEZER

I. A history more than thirty-five centuries long

One of the myths related to the Arab-Israeli conflict is that Israel and the whole of Mandatory Palestine before it, was stolen from the Arabs as a result of imperialist machinations and settled by alien Jews. The fact is that until the defeat of the Ottoman Turkish Empire during World War I, there was no geopolitical entity called Palestine, no Arab nation lived on this soil, and no national claim was ever made to the territory by any group other than the Jews. During the whole period of recorded history, Palestine was never ruled by the Arabs of Palestine, while Jewish rule of Palestine extended over a period of some 1350 years (1350 B.C. to 70 A.D. with the exclusion of the Babylonian conquest from 587 B.C. to 538 B.C.). For 1878 years, from 70 A.D. to 1948 A.D., Palestine was ruled by foreign governments and never by the people who lived in it. Its frontiers underwent changes according to the administrative interests of the ruling power. Its name was also changed by successive colonialist rulers. Roman (70 A.D. - 395 A.D.), seeking to destroy the Jewish identity, changed its name to Palaestina, after the long vanished Philistines, one of the Aegean peoples. The Byzantines ruled the country from 395 A.D. to 636 A.D. until it was conquered by the Arab empire (636 - 1072). The Arabs divided the country into two military districts, on both sides of the river Jordan. One was called Filastin, the other Urdun. Subsequently Palestine was conquered by the Seljuk Turks (1072-1099), the Crusaders (1099-1291), who named the country "kingdom of Jerusalem", the Mamluks (1291-1516), and the Ottoman Turks (1516-1917). The Ottomans had no name for the territory as a whole, and it was an intergral part of their empire. The British (1918-1948) renamed the land Palestine. In 1922 the British partitioned the Mandated territory into Palestine (west of the Jordan) and Transjordan (east of the Jordan). All Jewish immigration to Transjordan was prohibited.

To the Jews, this land has been for over thirty-five centuries the core of their national life, and the center of their aspirations. Jews have lived continuously in this land for over three thousand years. For many centuries they were independent, for many centuries they were subject to foreign rule, until they became a minority to their own land.

During several centuries of Arab rule a process of Arabization and Islamization took place. This process was strengthened by immigration from Arabia and Egypt. The total population at the beginning of the nineteenth century probably did not exceed 250,000. During the second half of the nineteenth century, both communities, Arabs and Jews, began to grow. Today, in the historical land of Israel, also known to history as Palaestina, Filastin, Kingdom of Jerusalem, etc, which encompasses both Israel and Jordan at the present time, live almost three million Jews (2,930,000 in Israel) and about 2.4 million Arab Palestinians (390,000 in the Gaza strip and Northern Sinai, 470,000 in Israel, 640,000 in the West Bank of the Jordan River, and 900,000 in the East Bank) a population twenty times larger than that of two centuries ago (see Time Mag., Nov. 1974).

History has dealt harshly with Jews and Arabs dwelling on this land today. It is very important to know and to appreciate this history, but we also have to live in the present and for the future. The present facts demand the beginning of negotiations for peace, peace for a land that has not seen peace for two millenia of foreign conquest and warfare. The present also demands recognition of the fact that Israel is a land and a people.

II The Israelis and the Israeli Way of Life

Israel has regained its independence to become a homeland for the Jewish People. Inspired by the prophetic vision of the ingathering of the exiles, Israel has provided a home for almost a million and a half Jewish immigrants since 15 May, 1948, of whom more than half a million were forced to flee from Arab countries. The movement for the return to Zion, a mountain in Jerusalem which symbolizes Jerusalem and the Land of Israel, was motivated by various forces of which the most powerful was cultural. The Jews in Israel are living in their own land, speak their own language, and are masters of their own fate. The simple and self-evident fact that Israel is a nation like all nations has to be understood. We do not have an "ideal" society and we are not an "ideal" people, although we strive to realize the vision of social justice of our Biblical prophets.

Although the majority of its population is Jewish, Israel is a pluralistic society where different cultures, social traditions, and languages co-exist. Israel ensures equality of its citizens before the law without distinction of race, religion, or language, and affords its minorities (Moslem, Christian, Druze etc.) every opportunity to maintain their own cultures and traditions. Jerusalem is a living example of this fact.

Israel is a democratic state based on principles of social justice. In income distribution, Israel is one of the most egalitarian countries in the world, more egalitarian than all communist countries. The wage differences between professionals and workers, between professors and farmers, between the skilled and the unskilled are the lowest in the world. Furthermore, about 80 per cent of the Israeli population are wage earners. For all twenty six years of its existence, Israel has been led by Zionist socialists. All Israeli parliaments have had socialist majorities, and all prime ministers have been socialist. The Israeli economy is a mixed economy, containing a public sector as well as an equally strong private sector. Israel is presently the most socialized democratic country in the world. For example, the labour federation of Israel (Histradrut) dominates more than half of Israeli economy.

III The Palestinian People

The existence of a "Palestinian problem", the blame for which was placed on Israel, was exploited by the Arab countries as a pretext for continuing the policy of belligerency and for refusing to make peace. Whatever the "Palestinian problem" may be, it is not the problem of a people expelled from its homeland, since the great majority of Palestinians (2.4 millions out of a total of about 3 millions) continues, to this day, to live within the bounds of the territory of Mandatory Palestine, which originally included what is today Jordan. Nor is the problem, in essence, a refugee problem, or one of homeless families. Most of the Palestinians, including those living in the Israel-administered West Bank, are citizens of Jordan, and are well integrated in the social, economic and political life of that country. Mr. Anwar Nuseibe, a prominent Palestinian from the West Bank, stated on October 23, 1970: "The Jordanians are also Palestinians. This is one state. This is one people. The name is not important." Certain Palestinians might be unhappy with their system of government, with the constitutional structure of their state, or with its leadership. This, however, can in no way substantiate a claim that the Palestinian Arabs have been shorn of their rights as a people. The problem is to negotiate an acceptable border between Israel and its eastern neighbor, the Palestinian state of Jordan, so that both people, the Palestinians and the Israelis can live in peace in their own countries pursuing their own ways of life.

However, the "Palestinian problem" as now represented by the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) is to "restore the legitimate rights of the Palestinians" through the establishment of a "secular, democratic Palestinian state". Who are the Palestinian "spokesmen"? These "spokesmen" proudly claim responsibility for such acts of "national liberation" as the mass killing at Lod Airport and the Munich Olympic Games in 1972, the murder of three diplomats (two of them Americans) in Khartoum in 1973, and this year, the murders of entire families at Kiryat Shmona, Beth Shaan, and the massacre of twenty four children at Maalot. What do these "spokesmen" mean by the slogan "a democratic state"? They mean the total elimination of the State of Israel. The PLO covenant of 1968 states in article 20, that Israel has no right to exist as a nation, These aims were elaborated upon in the 10 point program adopted by the PLO in Cairo on June 8, 1974. Point 3 of this program is "the PLO will struggle against any plan for the establishment of a Palestinian entity if this would require recognition (of Israel), conciliation (with Israel)" in any form of boundaries. The desire to destroy the Jewish state was confirmed by the PLO leader Yasser Arafat in his speech to the United Nations on November 13, 1974. Concerning this basic aim of destroying Israel, there is full agreement between "extremist" George Habash and "moderate" Yasser Arafat.

IV What Next?

For the benefit of all the people living in the Middle East, for the benefits of our children and for the next generations, the only possible solution is peace between Israel and all the Arab nations including the Palestinians. A new war will not solve anything, it will bring only agony and destruction, perhaps not only to the Middle East, but also to the rest of the world.

The existence of Israel, like the existence of the Palestinians, is not negotiable, and it is impossible to change these facts by new wars. Reason leads to peace. Emotion and fantasy lead to war. I hope that reason will win.

The football myth

To the Editor:

In response to Tom Fahey's letter of Friday (November 22). Football is the object of much criticism at UM largely due to the tremendous cost of supporting a first rate team. The arguments in defense of a large football expenditure has traditionally been that football "supports the rest of the athletic program", draws alumni support and gives the University some favorable publicity. That football supports other sports at UM is fast becoming a "myth". Football may be "revenue generating" but is by no means self sustaining let alone able to support other sports. The fact is that football costs at least twice as much as it makes. The arguments for alumni support and public recognition for the university are perhaps more valid.

Athletic interests at UM are growing - the students desire to participate is increasing. At present the university cannot even maintain present programs (men's gymnastics) never mind increase their sports' offerings. It is unlikely that the University Athletic Department will have more money to work with in the near future. It is also very unlikely that football will even become a "real" money maker at UM. In view of this, I strongly support Mr. Fahey's plea for students to evaluate the present athletic situation and to make their feelings known to those in authority. I am not suggesting an end to football at UM - I am suggesting that there may be a need to restructure the athletic priorities. Are the majority of students given what they want for their athletic dollar? How does the administration determine what the athletic priorities will be - students, coaches, alumni, tradition, public relations impact. . . ? I firmly believe the individual athletic interests of most students would be better served if less emphasis was placed on one sport and money was spent to ensure quality athletic opportunities for more UM students. There are many genuine athletic interest groups on campus who could benefit greatly with money unwisely spent. We are in a recession and as a "practical New Englander" I feel we can get a lot more "mileage" from our athletic dollars. Trading in our present Football program for a "compact version" would be a practical move. I realize UM's football program may be modest compared to that of other schools - but, our purpose here is not to "keep up with the Jones" in football - but to serve the students first. Yes, Mr. Fahey, football in its present state at UM is a luxury we should all question.

Blacks still discriminated

To the Editor:

After reading the letter from SPONGE in Monday's Collegian, I had to sit down and think of what could possibly be done with people suffering from such a total lack of awareness...and I came up with nothing save writing this letter.

The blatant absurdity of their contention that blacks are getting everything staggers the imagination. A mere review of basic statistics revealing the increasing discrepancy between black and white median income and the disproportionate ratio of black to white unemployment is testimony that whites are continuing, if not strengthening their superior economic position.

If the authors of the letter believe that bussing is somehow "giving" the blacks something, perhaps they should remember that equality of opportunity is a right not a privilege, and that a correction of injustice is not a concession to be granted but a responsibility to be accepted. SPONGE, why won't you open your eyes to the very real oppressive force of institutional and personal racism that is, and has been operating against the black people for hundreds of years in this country? And while you're at it, why don't you open your hearts to some human understanding, the best cure for paranoia and bigotry that I know.

Sincerely,
Betty Londergan

Allocation vs. recognition

To the Editor:

The football team gets a good sum of money to entice "good" football prospects to come to UMass. The University Chorale gets NO recruiting money. The football team desecrated the UMass name last Saturday. The Chorale has brought nothing but glory to UMass. In the Spring of 1973, when its Director, Dr. Richard duBois, went on sabbatical, the Administration completely forgot that the Chorale even existed. It was just as if there never was a UMass Chorale, as far as they were concerned. We got not a cent and not even a mention of the name! I wonder if Dick MacPherson ever went on sabbatical if the same thing would happen to football.

It strikes me funny that despite all its recruiting to get such profound players, that the football team is so mediocre. Yet, the Chorale, with its maximum "recruiting" done through posters on campus and the Collegian, gets the average singer and is molded into one group that gives pride both to the University and to the group itself. Match the amount of pride the Chorale brings to the University compared to the amount of money it gets. Then do the same for the football team. Yet, every year football gets a good chunk of money, no matter how they perform. Chorale gets forgotten despite a consistent excellence in performance.

This year alone, we have had to sing with lack of music booklets due to lack of funds to buy them. Every year the girls of the Chorale have an out-of-pocket cost to buy material for their gowns and still have to put in time to MAKE them. There is a meager pittance for travel expense for the Chorale. Most of the time we have to drive our own cars and with 72 of us that's a few cars. Another out-of-pocket cost. How many football players would endure an out-of-pocket cost for such items?

The football team charges admission into its games (except for students who get hit nevertheless). Chorale Concerts are free to the public.

Dick MacPherson doesn't have to worry where his next dollar is coming from. He only has to worry about how good his next performance is going to be. Richard duBois doesn't have to worry about how good his next performance is going to be. He has to worry about where the next dollar will come from in order to get music for a performance and even in order to GET to a performance.

So again, with a measure of performance, the UMass football team would be massacred by at least a 70-8 score if it matched the UMass Chorale.

I've been with the Chorale 3 years and Equipment Manager last year. I know that everyone in that group works super hard and does this despite lack of recognition. And no one deserves more credit than Dr. "D" for holding the group together and trudging onward despite the lack of funds. Few people realize how hard it is to put that little extra effort into it. But in the end the greatest satisfaction of them all is gained: the self-satisfaction of knowing that you've accomplished something with the odds at your back.

I'm asking the Administration to open their eyes and allocate some money to the people who upgrade the UMass name, be it Chorale or some other group. Chances are, these are the groups that will be shunned in these belt-tightening times. Yet, these are the ones who do the most for UMass. Do the belt-tightening elsewhere this time okay?

Finally I'd like to give a word of appreciation to the members of the Chorale both past and present who have made my stay most enjoyable. Most of all, I'd like to thank Dr. "D" for bringing the Chorale through the tough times and mostly for giving me a chance to belong to one of the greatest groups on campus.

Dog lost

To the Editor:

Last Tuesday evening, Nov. 26, I lost my dog from outside the Campus Center Bluewall entrance. I had tied my dog to the railing on the stairway there, and when I returned from my meeting, the dog was gone.

Since the rope with which she was tied was also gone, I am led to the conclusion that somebody took her. This is understandable since it was a cold night and the person may have felt sorry for the dog.

I've called the local veterinarians and police and they have not received any word on the whereabouts of my dog. If anyone out there knows anything about my dog, could you please get in touch with me?

"Windy" is a three year old, spayed female Golden Retriever. She had no collar. She is a bit timid, but, at the same time, affectionate. I'm a little worried that she may be getting sick. For some time now, she has been living outside in a dog house and a sudden, drastic change in her environment (i.e. being indoors a lot) might screw her metabolism up a bit.

If you know anything, please get in touch with me, Tom Glynn 665-7076.

Thanks,
Tom Glynn

UMass professor receives patent for computer aid

A 22-claim patent has been issued to UMass professor Kenan E. Sahin for a computer network named for his wife.

Sahin, inventor of the Selcuk (Sel-Chuk) system, also has patents pending in the United Kingdom, Canada, France, Italy, Germany and Japan.

"The invention is a novel solution to a crucial problem in routing information through a computer network after an information request is broadcast from a particular computer...getting the responses from informed computers to the source of the request," said Dr. Michael Arbib, chairman of the UMass Computar and Information Department.

The Selcuk system eliminates the need for a central router or switchboard. A user can interogate an entire network without identifying his computer's address or those of the potential response sources.

Dr. Arbib said the importance of the invention is in management information systems, and for information retrieval on the basis of content rather than location. The invention also has applications to automated pattern recognition.

Legal work for the patent was carried out by Dr. Robert H. Rines, dean of the Frankly Pierce Law Center in Concord, N.H., and formerly a lecturer on patent law at Massachssetts Institute of Technology.

Dr. Sahin's work on the invention began at M.I.T. and was completed at UMass.

Dr. Sahin received his bachelor's and doctoral degrees at M.I.T. He is currently an associate professor in the UMass School of Business Administration. He is a native of Turkey and taught at Robert College after several years at M.I.T. He has received several awards.

His wife is also on the UMass faculty.

CCEBS hosts career day on Saturday

The annual Minority Career Day, sponsored by CCEBS, is being held Saturday, December 7th, at the New Africa House. The free career day is for all western Massachusetts third world students to come and explore opportunities available to them.

The career day will be open from 12:00 until 4:00. During that time representatives from business, industry, the military, federal government, law schools will be available to answer questions and to tell about opportunities in their field for minorities. There will also be the continuous showing of the film "Do they really want me."

Dick Ray of Ray-Black Associates and Rosalind Matthews of KGA Personnel will conduct workshops on resume writing and effective job interviewing skills, as well as hold a discussion on what to expect on a job search.

CCEBS hopes the event will prove valuable to students looking for jobs before graduation and help other students decide on an academic program which would help obtain employment, once they graduate.

Area welfare recipients unite in movement

By BOB GARDNER
Amherst Welfare Rights Organization

The Progressive News Service (PNS) is a collective interested in social change. It is a channel for community groups to feed information from a non-traditional perspective into campus media. It is located at the UMass Veteran's Coalition, 2nd floor Student Union.

Area welfare recipients have banded together recently in an attempt to resurrect remnants of the now-defunct National Welfare Rights Organization (NWRO), and to map new strategies for change in the anti-poverty movement.

The group, organized under the name Amherst Welfare Rights Organization, has been at work since October 15th in an effort to establish community support and a common base with other recipients in the Amherst area. Four meetings have been held to date in the Village Park Apartment Complex, with another scheduled for 10:30 Saturday morning, December 14th in the Community Room at Village Park (room 111, East Pleasant St., Amherst).

Chapter 766, the new state educational Act for children with special needs, will be the main topic of discussion, with presentations and talks by Jane Holappa of Office for Children, and a yet-to-be named representative of the Amherst School Department. The meeting is open to all interested parties, whether on welfare or not.

Although primarily a welfare group, AWRO wishes to deal with all the varied problems of the working poor, and not just the poor on public assistance; plus deal with the various welfare-related problems in the school system, business, or in the labor unions, etc. Among the problems slated for discussion and action are the problems of locating quality daycare-babysitting in the Amherst area, the various tenant-landlord difficulties of low-income or welfare people. They will also discuss the problems connected with the staff shortages in the Welfare Department, including long waits for appointments, the inability to contact a worker for services or emergencies, and the logjam of applications for food stamps.

According to some observers, including the late George Wiley, activist and ex-director of NWRO, the National Welfare Rights Organization suffered because of its limited scope and its one issue program. Wiley advocated the forming of an economic alliance with labor and other middle and lower class groups, which the membership rejected.

Amherst Welfare Rights hopes to avoid this and the many other pitfalls of the NWRO, including its frequent ideological and political schisms. Beyond dealing with the basic bread-and-butter issues, AWRO will be attempting to cope with the psychological problems of, and public attitudes toward welfare recipients. The greatest single problem of recipients according to AWRO is the stigmatization, degrading treatment, and the intimidation of those "on the rolls" by administrators of the Welfare Department, and the public in general.

In the eyes of group coordinator, Kathy Perry, "dealing with the reactions of friends, relatives, and the family doctor to being on welfare is a far greater trial than the task of "making ends meet" on the pittance from Welfare." Nearly all recipients of aid have been met with sneers from across the counter at the neighbor pharmacy, or insults and abuse at the local Welfare Office. It is the intention of AWRO to counteract these biased attitudes through education, publicity, advocacy for individuals facing institutions, confrontation if necessary, and the development of support and consciousness-raising groups to help recipients overcome the barriers they encounter along the road to self-respect and independence.

Inquiries about this project, or requests for welfare information can be directed to Kathy Perry at 549-6420, or Bob Gardner at the Student Organizing Project (545-2415) or the Amherst Community Resource Center (253-2591)

URPE conference meets this weekend

By ALICE SUNSHINE
URPE

The Union for Radical Political Economics will hold its annual New England Regional Conference this weekend, Dec. 6, 7 and 8.

The opening address will be "Report from China" given by Harry Magdoff, a co-editor of Monthly Review, the independent Socialist Journal. Magdoff, who has written extensively about imperialism, has recently returned from China.

This address will be in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College, 8 p.m. this Friday.

All day Saturday, beginning at 9:30 a.m. URPE will offer workshops on topics in political economics. Among the 21 choices will be workshops in "The Current Economic Crisis: Domestic Aspects", "Political Organizing Around the Current Crisis", "Feminism and Socialism", "Alternative Economic Systems", "The Political Economy of Health Care" and "Energy Crisis: A Matter of Profits".

Many UMass people will be involved in workshops including Sam Bowles, Mike Albert, Jim Crotty, Herb Gintis, and alot of others. There will also be people from the New American Movement, the Communist Party and the Revolutionary Union giving a workshop on their organizations.

Also on Saturday, the film "Political Prisoner in America" will show at noon, one, two and three. This film is about the plight of Martin Sostre, a black political prisoner who was framed for running a political bookstore in the ghetto.

All the workshops and the film will be at Hampshire College in Franklin Paterson Hall. Registration begins at 8:30 a.m. and the Saturday program costs $3 for low-income people, $6 for high-income people. Free child day care will be provided.

Sunday will be left open for informal discussions. People from out-of-town can arrange for accommodations Friday night at the Magdoff talk.

NASA sponsors research

New England may develop windmills for power

BLOOMFIELD, Conn. (AP) — A modern version of the centuries old windmill may be appearing on the New England landscape, if a research project underway meets with the approval of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA).

Kaman Aerospace Corp. has received one of two $500,000 grants to study the application of wind power to the country's energy problems.

The research will be entirely theoretical now. But if successful it could lead to another grant to build windmills, a spokesman for Kaman said.

Windmill power will never replace nuclear power, according to Weston B. Haskell Jr., director of public relations for the parent firm, Kaman Corp. of Bloomfield. He said windmills might serve small communities or farm cooperatives or might be an inexpensive supplement to other types of power.

"The major problem is that you can't depend on the wind. It doesn't blow steadily," Haskell said. That means if a homeowner used a windmill as the sole source of power, the electric lights would fade in and out as the wind blew.

The job of Kaman engineers is to find out how to make a windmill run at constant speed, according to Haskell. He suggested this might be done by devising a means to store power or tilting the angle of the blades.

Windmill blades are practically identical to those of helicopters, which had been Kaman's major product before it diversified.

"In fact all of aerodynamic research is in effect a kind of research into windmills," Haskell said. And the reason the government just now has become interested in the company's research is that the need didn't exist until the energy crisis, he said.

A Vermont power company used a windmill to decrease oil consumption during World War II, but that urgency passed, he added.

Now that there is a worldwide energy shortage, it is essential that research be done into alternative power sources, Haskell said.

That research does not threaten power companies at all, he said. To the contrary, Kaman will use Northeast Utilities engineers in the study to understand better how generators work. Northeast is the parent company of Hartford Electric Light Co., Connecticut Light & Power Co. and Western Massachusetts Electric Co.

Kaman will study the construction of windmills that would be 100 kilowatts, for use by small communities, up to three megawatts, for possible connection into the power networks of large utility companies.

"There aren't going to be windmills in Bloomfield now, but there may be, if we come up with interesting results and NASA likes our work," Haskell said.

Detroit snow stops school, trial, murders

DETROIT [UPI] - Funerals were postponed. Schools, banks, offices, stores and factories closed. The newspaper did not publish. Milk and mail were not delivered. At one murder trial, neither the judge nor the jury showed up.

It was the worst snowstorm in Detroit since 1886. The snow officially measured 18.9 inches, the most since April 6, 1886, when 34.5 inches fell.

Eighteen persons in Detroit died of heart attacks suffered Sunday and Monday as they attemtped to shovel sidewalks and driveways clear of snow.

Detroit police said streets were so blocked that emergency ambulance services ran two to three hours behind.

All public schools in Detroit remained closed yesterday.

Police said the storm cut crime to a virtual standstill - with Detroit going 42 hours without a homicide. It ended with a shooting Monday night over a parking space.

Thousands of offices, banks, stores and plants closed Monday with some companies buying radio time to tell workers to stay home. Even funerals were postponed, and court officials said at one murder trial neither the judge nor jury turned up.

The Detroit News did not go to press for the first time in its history because there was no way to deliver the newspapers. The storm also stopped or disrupted deliveries of mail and milk.

Nuclear advisor seeks local data on Rowe plant

Dr. Larry Gay, a Marlboro, Vermont, resident and science advisor to the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, recently requested that a local Public Document Room (PDR) be established for Yankee Atomic. Yankee, a nuclear power station with an electrical output of 185 megawatts, is located in Rowe. The Westinghouse-designed reactor, the third commercial reactor built in the United States and the first in New England, became operational in July of 1961.

Karl R. Goller, Assistant Director for Operating Reactors, said in his letter to Dr. Gay, "Local PDR's for the use of the local public in the vicinity of proposed nuclear power sites have been established since 1972. With respect to plants, like Yankee-Rowe which were already licensed to operate in 1972 and for which there were no public hearings scheduled, local PDR's generally were not established.

"However, in response to your request, which indicates a growing public interest in the Yankee-Rowe plant, we are now looking into the possibility of establishing a local PDR in the vicinity of the site. This local PDR would be supplied with a copy of the Yankee-Rowe license together with the Technical Specifications, and documentation of all recent and future licensing actions and other matters concerning the health and safety of the public."

Until now, documents for Yankee Atomic have been available only in the Atomic Energy Commission's Public Document Room in Washington, D.C. Final arrangements, such as the location and opening date of the PDR, have yet to be made.

Local VA hospital sponsors art exhibit

In an effort to provide members of the community an opportunity to more clearly understand mental illness and how it may be treated, the residents and staff of Ward 12 at the Northampton Veterans Administration Hospital are inviting the public to a unique art exhibition and open house to be held December 7 and 8 from 1:00 to 5:00 p.m. Several patients, who are talented artists, will be exhibiting their work. Exhibit items include oils,pen and ink drawings and works done in a variety of other mediums. In addition to the art exhibit, there will be tours of the ward, refreshments, and an opportunity to talk informally with staff and residents about the hospital, its treatment procedures and how the community can support individuals when they leave the hospital.

The idea for the art show and open house grew out of a patient and staff feeling that much of the news about people with psychiatric problems concerns those who fail in their attempted return to society. The failures are actually in the minority. Many more patients return to home, family and successful employment.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 4 — Born today, you are a very domestic individual. All things concerning home and family appeal to you greatly — and all things outside the home, though you will no doubt be successful at any number of them, must by that very fact mean less to you than they probably do to others. Man or woman, you will take tremendous joy from your role as a parent — whether to your own children or as surrogate father or mother. You have a knack for taking pleasure from simple things; cultivate it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Community events need your help if they are to get off the ground gainfully. Do what you can to advise without seeming to take charge.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — There is much to be said for your being relatively inactive today, especially when it comes to routine chores around the house. Conserve energy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Interests are such that you may find yourself in conflict with several good friends. Do your best to smooth things over before day's end.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is an excellent time to contemplate your own future — and in so doing to plan for the initial stages of a new project in the making.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Chances occurring in your everyday life have a single underlying cause. Discover that and you will have discovered a way to new gain.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — You should be able to set things up in your own favor today. A draft of plans for the future should find a friend in one who is in charge.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your present position on the employment scene may not carry with it the prestige you would like to enjoy. Take heart, however; time is in your favor.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Don't overlook the advantages to present conditions on the home front. Small matters carry with them large responsibilities at evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Co-workers can do much to put you and your work in a good light with those in authority. Do nothing to block developing friendships.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — If you make it your business to do what is asked of you this morning — but no more — you may well succeed by day's end but it won't be spectacularly!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Fear that you may be placed in a compromising position on the employment scene must not be allowed to keep you from moving ahead in your career.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Personal relationships should be improving just about now. Take care that your efforts to make friends are not mistaken for forwardness.

Yoga Club sponsors Yogi Bhajan

Yogi Bhajan, founder and spiritual guide of 3HO Foundation (Healthy, Happy, Holy Organization) will speak on Friday, December 6th at the Engineering-East auditorium here. Sponsored by the UMass. Kundalini Yoga Club and by the Guru Ram Das Ashram of Montague, Yogi Bhajan will discuss the subject of Consciousness and Spiritual Evolution for the Aquarian Age.

Over the past five years Yogi Bhajan has worked to lead people to their highermost levels of awareness. A Master of Kundalini and White Tantric Yogas, and a native of New Delhi, India, he has introduced to students in this country a way of life which emphasizes Yogic practices for personal development, group unity, and an honesty and righteousness in daily activity. As a result of his teachings there are now over one hundred-ten 3HO communities in this country, Canada, Europe,and the Orient.

Yogi Bhajan's lecture is open to the general public, and a donation of a dollar-fifty is requested. For further information call the Guru Ram Das Ashram at 367-9586.

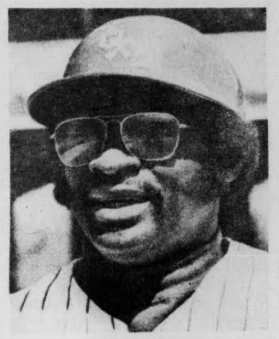
Baseball trade market begins

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Dick Allen, turned down by 20 other clubs, finally landed with Atlanta in a feverish day of wild trading at the winter baseball meetings Tuesday, with Tug McGraw, the New York Mets' "Ya Gotta Believe" relief ace, going to Phildelphia and slugger Lee May moving to Baltimore in another pair of multi-player swaps.



Dick Allen

Allen, who will doubtlessly end his controversial "retirement" shortly, and pick up a $250,000 salary again next year, was peddled by the Chicago White Sox to the Atlanta Braves for cash and a player to be named later.

It was the fifth major league stop for the 32-year-old Allen, who won the American League home run title this year despite his dramatic "retirement" Sept. 14.

McGraw, who popularized the Mets' 1973 pennant drive rallying cry, "Ya Gotta Believe," was sent to the Phillies along with outfielders Don Hahn and Dave Schneck in exchange for centerfielder Del Unser, relief pitcher Mac Scarce and rookie catcher John Stearns.

The Orioles then got caught up in the fever and obtained May, the slugging first baseman. from the Houston Astros along with outfielder Jay Schleuter for first baseman Enos Cabell and rookie second baseman Ron Andrews.

"We traded Allen bacuse when he failed to formally retire, he violated his contract," explained White Sox General Manager Roland Hemond. "By doing that he let us down."

Although Atlanta became the fifth stopping place for Allen in his stormy, 11-year major league career, Braves' manager Clyde King was not immediately concerned with the Slugger's troublesome reputation.

"I managed Hank Aaron and Willie Mays — both players with gifted abilities," said King.

"I treat all my players equally and I don't want to make a big deal of this. If I felt he would be a problem, I wouldn't have gotten him. I'm certainly not going to try to change Dick Allen after all these years."

The Braves don't expect any real problem about Allen reporting, especially since the power-packing first baseman, who hit a league-leading 32 homers in '74, was quoted recently as saying, "I'll play anywhere, even in Jenkintown (Pa.)."

The 30-year-old McGraw, baseball's highest paid reliever at $90,000, fills the Phillies' bullpen needs and also gives them a new rallying cry to go with second baseman Dave Cash's "Yes we can" of this past season.

BOSTON (UPI) — Boston College, winner of its final six games by outrageous scores, has captured the UPI New England Major College Football Poll by a unanimous vote.

The Eagles, who finished 8-3, received all 15 first place votes cast for 75 points. They topped the weekly poll the final month as they outscored opponents 270-27 over the final six games.

Harvard, third place in the poll every week until beating Yale in the finale, finished second with 56 points. The Crimson were 7-2 on the season, boosted by southpaw quarterback Milt Holt and Harry Agganis Award winner Pat McInally.

Yale, undefeated till the Harvard game and the weekly poll winner through mid-November, dropped to third with 49 points.

Brown, winner of its last four games in a turnaround season, picked up 19 points to edge Holy Cross for fourth place. The Bruins finished 5-4.

Holy Cross, with its crushing 38-6 loss to Boston College in the season's last game, finished fifth with 17 points.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (UPI) — The University of Connecticut Huskies, winner of the District 1 NCAA Playoffs last months, have taken first place in the final New England Soccer Poll for the second straight year.

The Huskies took all 12 first-place votes. Runnerup was Brown University, which lost to UConn 4-3 in triple overtime in the NCAA Playoffs.

Springfield was third in the voting, followed by Keene State, Massachusetts, Bridgeport, Westfield, Harvard, Babson and Worcester.

FOXBORO, Mass. (UPI) — Reserve running back Josh Ashton, like seven New England Patriot teammates before him, will be sidelined for the rest of the season, the club announced Tuesday

Ashton, New England's ninth round pick in the 1971 draft, suffered a fractured left forearm in Sunday's 41-26 loss at Oakland.

Ohio State's Archie Griffin was named winner of the coveted Heisman Trophy yesterday. He is the first junior to win it since Navy's Roger Staubach in 1963.

Archie Griffin voted best college player

NEW YORK [UPI[- Archie Griffin of Ohio State, whose consistency as a runner is unmatched in college football history, Tuesday became the first junior in 11 years to win the Heisman Trophy and, true to the teachings of his Coach Woody Hayes, the 5-foot-9 running back said he would galdly trade the bronze statue for a National Championship.

The Columbus Comet, who established an NCAA Record this season by rushing for more than 100 yards in 22 consecutive games, won college football's most coveted honor by a landslide over another 5-9 "Mini-Back," Anthony Davis of Southern California. Griffin was the leading vote-getter in each of the five geographical sections of the nation and received 1,920 points to 819 for Davis.

Griffin, who finished second nationally in rushing with a 147.3 yards per game average, is the first junior to win the Heisman Trophy since Navy's Roger Staubach in 1965 and is only the fifth underclassmen to capture the prize. Other were Doc Blanchard of Army in 1945, Doak Walker of SMU in 1945 and Vic Janowicz of Ohio State in 1950. All were juniors and none ever repeated.

Joe Washington of Oklahoma, another junior, was third in the voting with 661 points followed by Senior Quarterbacks Tom Clements of Notre Dame (244) and David Humm of Nebraska (210). Rounding out the top 10 were quarterback Dennis Franklin of Michigan, Linebacker Rod Shoate of Oklahoma, Quarterback Gary Sheide of Brigham Young, Outland Trophy Winner Randy White of Maryland, a defensive tackle, and quarterback Steve Bartkowski of California.

Charlotte Lettis of the Sugarloaf Mountain Athletic Club, shown here leading the pack including husband Tom Derderian (3rd), recently placed fifth in Women's AAU cross country championship.

UM distance woman Lettis finishes fifth in nation

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Competing against two hundred other women cross country runners, Charlotte Lettis of the Sugarloaf Mountain Athletic Club placed fifth in the Women's AAU cross country championships, held last Saturday in Dayton, Ohio.

UCLA won the team title, while Lynn Bjorland of the Duke City Dashers captured individual honors by completing the challenging three-mile course in 17:31.8.

Lettis was the first Eastern runner to finish and noted that the course was a difficult one. The layout consisted of two loops, each one and a half miles long and included an eight foot water jump. Muddy conditions made the footing tough and at race time it was cold. Lettis added that the cold weather may have been a slight advantage for her because, as the UMass senior stated, "I'm used to it."

Bjorland simply outclassed the field in winning the race. Julie Brown of UCLA was second, behind the speedy, 16-year-old winner with a time of 17:41. Francie Larrieu, considered by many as the best female distance runner in the country, took third in 18:03. Debbie Quatier of the Falcon Track Club was fourth in 18:10 with Lettis two seconds behind. Lettis was in ninth place at the halfway mark and in seventh with 100 yards to go. The attractive harrier outkicked two opponents at the finish, however, to account for her impressive fifth place performance.

Most of the participants in the race were former Olympians or among the top distance runners in the country. Lettis, who has run the mile in 5:01, was up against runners who had been clocked in 4:40 or better for the mile.

Good morning-afternoon! Today's exotic DC lunch menu includes rosy onion and homemade turkey soup (in whose home was it made?), B.L.T. sandwiches, and, just what you've been craving, chicken chow mein. Inspiration Ernie Roberts will undoubtedly have oatmeal hotcakes, wherever he might be...

Moving right along...here are (trumpets please) THE BIG STORIES OF THE PAST WEEK: The Patriots lost 41-26 to those Oakland hoods, but they played well, considering half the team has been rubbed out; and the Minutemen finished second in the Hall of Fame Tipoff Tournament to North Carolina (at Charlotte), A poor second...

FOOTBALL — New England's gloomy defeat by the Raiders was enlivened a bit by John Tarver's burst for negative 15 yards to his own 1, whereupon he wierdly threw the ball over his shoulder and out of the end zone. 'Twas the funniest play since Garo Yepremian's Super Bowl Nutty Pass...

Earlier, on Turkey Day, Clint Longley popped out of one of Tom Landry's computer slots and threw for a late TD to bring Dallas over Washington in a crucial one...

Upset: Steelers (by Oilers, 13-10) and Cardinals (by Chiefs, 17-13). Very Upset: Giants (by Bears, no less.) And for the fourth straight game in the final seconds. All of which explains why so many members of that ill-fated squad are going around giggling and knocking their heads against walls). Very, Very Upset: My stomach after this meal.

Monday night, Miami beat the Bengals, and now the Pats will waltz into the playoffs, providing of course, the Colts upset the Shula and Co. next week while New England beats Pittsburgh and, alas, Miami...

On the college front, USC crunched Notre Dame's national title hopes, 55-24. The Irish looked so bad in the second half that, as a last resort, ol' Ara almost put in the seldom used reserve he usually keeps tied up in the campus chapel bell tower. Yes, that redoubtable Hunchback...

PRO MISCELLANEOUS — The Celtics went 1-1 on the week, as did the Bruins. The C's topped Bill Russell's SuperSonics, and then lost to the Knicks. The B's triumphed over California (mean feat) and then were shutout by the division leading Los Angeles Kings...

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar started wearing goggles to protect his healing eye, and looked very silly...Bake McBride was named NL Rookie of the Year...and the World Team Tennis owners met for a player draft and ended up picking Elton John, Bill Cosby, and Johnny Carson. It's all business in the WTT...

And the Sox traded Tommy Harper for Bob Heise of the Brewers. If that is all Boston got then you are a stupidhead, Dick O'Connell...

CAMPUS MISCELLANEOUS — UMass topped Dartmouth 86-59 in the Hall Tourney opener, and then lost to UNCC and guard George Jackson (31 pts.), who gives the medium-range jumper a good name. John Murphy was the only standout for the Minutemen...

The hockey team lost to St. Anselm's 4-2. The wrestlers lost to BU 31-9, and then split a triangular meet, beating UConn and losing to Yale...

Eat your dessert. It's lime jello and grapefruit halves. Yum. If you're still hungry ya might be able to scrounge up some seconds on that soybean loaf...

Finally, the junior blademen (that's sportswriter lingo for JV hockey team) eked out an 8-7 win over the Chicago Minor Hawks, whose name is a complete mystery to everyone...

Little Minutemen thwarted, 5-3

WILLIAMSTOWN, Ma.-- The UMass JV's saw a 3-2 second period lead dwindle away as Williams College scored three unanswered goals to upend the junior Minutemen 5-3 last night.

Bob Dailey put Williams ahead at 6:56 of the first stanza, but at 9:17 Dan Mark knotted the count for UMass. Williams' Ken Norton and UMass' Chris Crown scored later in the first period which ended at 2-2.

UMass' Billy Devine scored at 4:54 of the second period to give UMass their only lead of the night. He took a pass at the faceoff circle and then tucked it in as he skated through the crease. But Bob Nooze scored four minutes later to tie it up for Williams.

Jim Walsh rounded out the scoring for Williams with two third period goals.

JV coach Russ Kidd thought his club played a strong game but the JVs failed to capitalize on several excellent scoring opportunities especially in the third period. One Minuteman breakaway which could have changed the complexion of the game midway through the third period was thwarted when the Williams goaltender, caught out of position, stopped a sure goal with the butt end of his stick.

Williams catches UMass 6-5

Staff Photo by Dan Smith

SLIDING TOWARD GOALIE in previous action, an unidentified UMass skater watches flight of puck. The puck didn't fly right for the blademen last night as Williams blitzed the Minutemen for three late goals to grab a 6-5 win.

By DAVE EIBEL
Sports Staff

WILLIAMSTOWN, Ma. — Two different hockey games were played last night at Williams College. In the first game, which lasted fifty-eight minutes and thirty-five seconds, the UMass Minutemen played superb two-way hockey and won 5-3, but in the second game, which lasted one-minute and twenty-four seconds, the Williams Ephmen hung all over the Minutemen and won 3-0.

And that was shocking, illogical story of a game that all of the 3,000-plus in attendance felt was a sure UMass win, but turned into a 6-5 loss to Williams.

UMass found itself down early in the match when a wide open Ed Walsh took a pass from the corner off the stick of Jim Spencer and beat goalie Dana Redmond. At 7:33 Carl Burns tied it up for UMass when he picked up a rebound off a Bob Jefferson drive from the point and beat Ephmen goalie Chuck Cremens. Mike Elkind scored only a minute and twenty-nine seconds later to put Williams back in the lead, but Scott McChesney, who sprained an ankle in the second period, scored on a second chance rebound off a shot by Bobby White.

UMass went ahead 4-3 after two periods on goals by Steve Nims, and Scott Stuart, who scored on a power play. But co-captain Jim Harkins put Williams right back in the game with a tip-in at 10:06, only 27 seconds after Stuart had put UMass up by two.

The Minutemen went up by 5-3 when Nims scored his second of the night, converting a perfect pass from John Muse at 1:26 of the third period. Muse laid a perfect cross-ice pass on NIm's stick and "Nimbo" lifted it in from the edge of the faco-off circle.

Then came seventeen minutes of wide-open hockey with Williams turning all the jets on to get back in the game and the Minutemen playing sound two-way hockey. Goalie Redmond was especially brilliant during the period, thwarting numerous scoring threats. His finest hour occurred during a Williams power-play midway through the period. He stopped a point blank slapper off the stick of Dennis Cahill through a maze of legs and Harkins, who came in all alone off the left wing.

UMass thwarted the power play and seemed home free, but at 18:36 Ed Spencer, left all alone in front of Redmond, tipped in a cross-ice pass from Dan Yeadon with the UMass goalie having no chance on the play. Only fifteen seconds after Spencers marker, defenseman Joe Hamline picked up a loose puck in front and beat Redmond through a screen with a wrist shot to tie it 5-5.

But the incredible turn of events had not run its course. With 30 seconds left, UMass attacked one last time, as the hearts of Williams fans could be heard murmuring. A rolling puck came back to Timmy Howes, who fired a fifty-footer, which was blocked by the ever-dangerous Harkins, who swept in over the UMass blue-line leading a three on one break. With the seconds ticking away he let a wrist shot go which Redmond blocked with his left arm, only to have the puck roll down into the nets with only seven seconds left in the game, completing the improbable comeback.

For a goalie who'd played so well, it was a tragic way for Dana Redmond to lose. For the rest of the team, now 1-3, they've got to put the game behind them.

But asking that might be asking too much.

This is a scene that the Minutemen wrestlers hope will prevail tonight when matmen host New England co-champs URI. Clif Blom shown here from meet last year.

UMass wrestlers host URI

By JOHN BOCK
MDC Sports Staff

The friendly confines of Boyden Gym will be witness to the battle of New England Wrestling Co-Champions, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, tonight at 7:30 p.m.

Last year the Minutemen came from out of the pack to wrest a share of the title from odds-on favorites URI. The two teams tied at 139¼ points apiece but UMass crowned four champs while Rhody mustered two.

The Minutemen return two of the champs while the Rams come to Amherst with only one. URI outlasted Boston University 20-11 in a Monday night clash that saw the match tied at 9 all with four bouts remaining. URI swept three of the four and tied one against the same BU team that handed the Minutemen a 31-9 pasting this week.

The Rams seem to be quite strong in the lightweights. They have former New York State Champ Rich Applebaum at 118 and he will wrestle UMass' Peter Sachon. Smooth as silk two-time 126 pound New England Champ Scott Pucino will be favored over Minuteman Greg Tallon. At 134 pounds Scott is joined by brother Frank Pucino, a talented freshman that gave BU's Sev Popolizio all he could handle before bowing 9-6. His opponent will be UMass' defending New England Champ Russell Chateauneuf.

The Minutemen have Tim Fallon at 142 and he will face Mike Willner, a freshman whose high school distictions included a New England HS Title. Steve Jabaut has dropped to 150 for the match and will see the Rams' Marty Pereira. Co-captain Cliff Blom will rejoin the line-up tonight at 158 and will wrestle URI's John Richard, a New England Runner-up at 142 in 1973. The 167 pound bout has UMass' Tom Smith wrestling freshman Eric Shodel.

The 177 pound class is anchored by Stu Horowitz, New England champ in 1972 and 1973 and a quarter finalist in the NCAA's in '73. His UMass opponent is Bob Spaulding. The Rams have senior Tad Sargent at 190 while frosh Bill Fickert fills in for an injured Tom O'Connell.

Gymnasts open vs. Boston State

The UMass gymnastic Minutemen open their 1974-75 season tonite when they travel to Boston State College to take on BSC in a dual meet.

Although a lot of minor injuries are somewhat hampering the Minutemen coach Tom Dunn said the team should not have any trouble with a lessor quality Boston State squad.

"We don't expect too much competition against Boston State," said Dunn. "What we want to do is find out what we ourselves have got."

Coach Dunn plans to go with two different lineups in each of the season's first two meets. The second meet is against Lowell Tech and that one should also be non-competitive for the Minutemen. After that meet and tonite's BSC meet the best combination will be put together and that one that will go against Army when they come to Amherst a week from Saturday. That meet will provide the UMass gymnasts with their first tough competition of the season.

Tonite coach Dunn plans to go with Co-captains Roy Johnson and Bill Brouillet along with Paul Marks as the all-around performers. His specialty men will go as follows: Charley Mall, Tim Beaseley-floor exercise; Chris Brown, Dave Kulakoff-pommel horse; Peter Lusk, Tim Beaseley-rings; Jack Fabbricante, Jon Brandon-long horse vaulting; Tim Beaseley, Dave Kulakoff-parallel bars; John Hake, Henning Geist-high bar.

"We'll go with this lineup tonite and then we will make some changes against Lowell Tech," said Dunn, "then we will see what is the best for Army."

FLYING FINISHES — In the injury department Steve Marks is out with a broken finger and will not see action until after semester break. John Forshay is out with torn knee cartilage and may be out for the season. Just as in football long time players often have beat up knees, in gymnastics long time gymnasts often have beat up shoulders. Such is the case with seniors Brouillet, Beaseley and Johnson. Next meet is Tues. Dec. 10 versus Lowell Tech in Boyden at 4:00 p.m.

But not New England Veterinary School

Wood favors vet student aid

By FRED NOBLES
Staff Reporter

New England residents may soon be able to attend veterinary school at either Cornell University or the University of Pennsylvania following approval and funding of a program by New England state legislatures.

UMass President Robert C. Wood said sixty spaces for New England residents, tentatively available in September 1975, are being negotiated with the two schools. Wood made the statement at a regular meeting of the Trustees yesterday in the Campus Center.

In an interview following the Trustees meeting, Howard White, a spokesman for the President's office, said "The underlying issue is whether the state legislature will see to the funding of the program."

White pointed out that each of the sixty openings "is going to have a specific price tag on it." He said each state participating in the program will have to pay UPenn or Cornell about $13,000 for each student accepted into the program.

White said if the program is approved, it may open the way for "the possibility of short and long term arrangements" to meet the needs of Massachusetts residents interested in veterinary school.

The issue of faculty workload was also discussed at the Board meeting and a motion was passed that would certify to the Massachusetts Senate Ways and Means Committee that UMass at Amherst and Boston are in compliance with workload guidelines established by the Board.

The Trustees' action was in response to the Massachusetts General Court's demand that UMass comply with recent State contact hour legislation.

Trustee Frederick Troy, Chairman of the Faculty and Educational Policy Committee, said, "The total average workload for teaching and equivilancy workload at Amherst is 12.7 hours and at Boston it is 9.4 hours."

Troy went on to say, "The faculty of Amherst and Boston have been upset by what they see as an intrusion by the General Court into their affairs." He expressed his belief that UMass professors, now and in the past, have surpassed the minimum workload guidelines the General Court is enforcing.

The trustees also passed the Capital Outlay Budget for fiscal year 1976. The budget includes $7.4 million for renovation and remodeling. Most of the money will be spent to remodel Goodell building and Draper Hall.

Ariel present at Universal salespitch

By DOROTHY MULLER
Staff Reporter

Dr. Ariel a professor of exercise science at UMass claims he never endorsed a commercial product for an exercise machine company. However, when the company presented it's salespitch to Boston College last spring, Ariel came along.

Dr. Ariel states he "never received a penny" from Universal resilite, a subsidiary of Whittaker corporation, and manufacturer of exercise machines, but according to Joe Daniels, assistant football coach at Boston College, "Ariel never actually came right out and said you should buy it (Universal) but it was obvious he was selling for Universal."

"When a salesman for Universal called us up I told them that we had already made up our minds to buy the Nautilus machine; we were in the process of buying the Nautilus. I told him we had had one (Universal machine) before and we were not impressed. However, they told us that they had a new machine, the Centurian."

When the salesman came, Dr. Ariel also delivered a program of slides "designed to show the difference between Universal and Nautilus machines. I can't honestly say he acted as a salesman but everything in the presentation pointed to the fact that Universal was superior to Nautilus."

The day Ariel and the salesman came to Boston College they also brought along a Universal machine. They left the machine there and suggested the school try it out for six weeks.

Says Daniels, "At the end of that time the salesman called and asked how we like the machine. I told him we're still going with Nautilus."

Ariel is currently jointly pressing a 33 million dollar suit with Universal Resilite, a subsidiary of Whittaker Corporation against Florida millionaire, Arthur Jones and Nautilus.

The Ariel suit comes in response to a paid advertisement by Jones accusing Ariel of misrepresentation and Universal of false advertising. Jones, who owns Nautilus Corporation, has filed suit against Whittaker and its subsidiary Universal, for 10 million dollars. He accuses them of advertising fraud, libel and slander.

Inflation, expansion, drive State budget requests up 40 per cent over last year

BOSTON [AP] — Budget requests for the fiscal year starting in July are more than $1 billion above the current state outlay — a 40 per cent boost to approximately $3.9 billion.

Requests from the state agencies provide the raw data from which Gov.-elect Michael S. Dukakis will frame his budget message to the legislature next month.

In a recent campaign, Dukakis ran on a no-new-taxes platform but inflation and built-in expansions without a corresponding increase in revenue could dampen his enthusiasm.

Dukakis is also considering several hundred million dollars in deficiency requests for the present fiscal year which will take priority in legislative action, narrowing the gap somewhat in budget escalation.

The budget requests, state house sources indicate, include allowances for the continuation of services covered in deficiency pleas.

Costs for welfare — representing more than $200 million in deficiencies — will continue to zoom. Welfare Commissioner Steven A. Minter has recommended a $1.56 billion appropriation for fiscal 1976, roughly a half-billion above his current allowance.

The state's 10 cabinet secretaries are expected to trim requests before the pleas are moved along. How much they will cut, however, remains in doubt

One of the secretaries of a major spending agency seeking a large increase said very little can be removed from the budget without reducing mandated public services.

Transportation Secretary Alan Altshuler has gone through the $137 million sought by his agencies and reportedly removed only $7 million — 5 per cent. Most of this affected the Department of Public Works.

The energy crisis is continuing to add to state costs, a big factor in anticipated deficits as well as higher requests. Debt service — repaying of the state's borrowed funds — will be up more than 10 per cent above the current appropriation.

Senate passes motion for popular vote on mandatory residency, SGA elections

By CINDY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night passed a motion to allow the Senate referendum to be voted on by the student body next Monday and Tuesday. The referendum is on whether or not there should be mandatory dorm living and if a popular election of the SGA president should be held.

Barely passed was a motion for the Senate to require the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) to hold off further actions for the proposed Campus Center Bank until the Student Senate and the B.O.G. review the preliminary findings by the Student Organizing Committee on the proposed bank.

Also passed was a motion to appropriate $6.00 initial expenses for charter of a student credit union to the University Federal Credit Union Association.

The Senate voted to support the December 14 march by the Student Committee for the National March Against Racism and allocated $500 for their resources and activities on December 13 and 14.

The motion to allot the Collegian $9,341 for the purchase of production equipment and $11,200 for the cost of personnel and materials was tabled because the Finance Committee had not received it for report.

The Student Senate Referendum contains three questions:

1) Do you think there should be a popular election for the office of SGA President?

2) If there is a popular election, how shall it be financed? Choices given will be: By an equal allotment form the Student Senate to each candidate; by an allotment from an Area Government to the Candidate; by the candidate him-herself; and various combinations of these three choices; and

3) Should dormitory living be mandatory for those students now ineligible for exemptions?

Dorm residents will vote in their dormitories and Commuters will vote in the Dukes Room in the Student Union, (subject to change.)

It was proposed that the referendum be held off until the beginning of next semester. Others argued that candidates for SGA president would have too little time for their campaigns then.

State may help vets

$3.1 million was also budgeted for "campus improvements and necessary relocation of facilities." This expenditure represents a step toward the eventual closing of North Pleasant Street to vehicular traffic.

The remainder of the Board meeting was devoted primarily to issues affecting the UMass Medical School at Worcester.

President Wood said, "We are committed to the July 1 opening of the teaching hospital."

Wood went on to call actions by the Commission of Higher Education which are delaying the procurement of equipment necessary for the operation of the new hospital as "irresponsible acts" that "represent a covert intrusion into the opening of the teaching hospital."

The Trustees voted to appoint a search committee to find a Dean for the new Med School. Chairman of the Board of Trustees Joseph Healy said the person selected will eventually become Dean and Chancellor and that the search committee will be made up of one student, two laymen and two Trustees.

'Help the Hungry'. reps continue dorm canvass

Representatives for the "Help the Hungry" campaign are continuing to canvass their dormitories asking one dollar donations from each student.

The campaign will officially end Sunday night on campus.

The reps will then bring the money to the Collegian office where it will be counted so that a check may be sent to Oxfam-America which will use the money for famine relief of those starving overseas.

Commuters who still wish to donate to the fund may do so at the Collegian business office on the second floor of the Student Union Bldg.

The "dunk-a-thon," in conjunction with the nearby commuters' table, raised some $300 Monday and Tuesday.

About $100 has been given at the Collegian office.

A complete break-down of all donations will appear in Monday's Collegian.

UMass will enforce towing

The UMass Department of Public Safety would like to remind and forewarn students, faculty, and other involved parties, that tow zones on campus will be strictly enforced.

Vehicles parked in tow zones, fire lanes, and access lanes, (particularly in the area of the Southwest parking lot 50), will be towed, police said.

Correction to yesterday's issue

The news editor goofed. He erroneously published an old, outdated story by Judy Boucher on page one yesterday. Voters, as Judy had noted in a newer article, must be only 18 by the date of election and there's no residency requirement to vote in town elections.

Collegian Senate provide exposure

Groups can gain recognition 2 ways

By BRUCE R. FREDERICK
Staff Correspondent

Any and all RSO and Five College groups who feel that they could use some recognition now have two ways to get it.

First of all, the Collegian, with the aid of the Student Senate Communications Committee, will publish a two page supplement at the start of the next semester. This supplement will list and describe the activities of any group submitting a short, typewritten, double-spaced description.

The description should include:

1) The official name of the group; estimated number of members; and the names, addresses, and phone numbers of the principle leaders.

2) Sources and amount of funding, and membership dues (if any).

3) Examples of specific activities.

4) Customary meeting times and places.

5) Signature and phone number of the chief coordinator.

These descriptions should be deposited in the Communications Committee mail box, located in the Student Senate office, by December 21.

The SSCC also provides a press release service throughout the rest of the year for any organization that would like coverage for specific events or activities. The Committee will take information concerning the activity and write it up into a news article for the Collegian, WMUA and-or any other media outlet which may be appropriate. To take advantage of this service, a representative for the organization should come to the SSCC office, located in Rm. 415 of the Student Union.

The Committee would also like to remind students of its Grievance Board service. Any non-academic complaints or problems with the University should be deposited in the Bitch Box located in the lobby of the Student Union. Complaints may also be brought in person to the SSCC office. Problems of an academic nature should be reported directly to Ombudsman Jay Savareid in Rm. 919 Campus Center.

The SSCC strongly encourages groups and students to take advantage of these services.

Next semester, the Committee is starting a publicity campaign to encourage students to take an active part in student government, to be aware of current issues, and to have a say in their life at the University. Any person who would like to work on this, or any other facet of the SSCC is welcome to join the Committee.

Frat Managers Board holds first meeting

By TONY BATTISTA
Staff Reporter

The Board of Directors of the Fraternity Managers Association (FMA) held its first meeting Tuesday at 3 p.m. in the Fraternity Managers Association office.

According to its constitution, FMA is designed to "promote and maintain a high degree of financial competance in the policies and operations of social fraternities and sororities at UMass."

The constitution also states, "the corporate powers, property and affairs of FMA shall be exercised, conducted, and controlled through the Board of Directors".

According to Rob Hopkins, a member of the Board of Directors, the board has control over FMA. "The students tell us what they want and we in turn bring it to Joe Sexton, who is in charge of FMA", Hopkins said.

The Board of Directors is comprised of six undergraduates, four alumnae, and Joe Sexton and Ed Bowe who are the advisors.

Ray Schow, the President of Delta Chi fraternity, was elected chairman. Tim Mackie, an alumnus, was elected vice-chairman. Steve Falconer, treasurer of Delta Chi, was elected secretary-treasurer.

Plans were made at this meeting to update the FMA constitution. The current one was drawn up in 1960.

The board also discussed the relationship of FMA with the Greek Council. It was agreed that FMA should be a separate entity since not all houses which belong to FMA also belong to Greek Council.

The possibility of conducting meetings between the businesses which deal with FMA and the treasurers and kitchen stewards of each of the houses was also discussed. The purpose of these meetings would be to discuss new products which the houses might be interested in.

The next meeting will be held January 30, 1975 at 7 p.m.

Other events coming up in the Greek Area include a "gripe session" to be held at 7 p.m. today at Phi Mu Delta. At this session, anyone with a gripe about Greek Council or the Greek Area as a whole can be heard.

This meeting is a follow-up to one held at Sigma Kappa sorority where people aired their gripes concerning Greek Council. At this meeting Rob Hopkins, former president of Phi Mu Delta, charged the Greek Council with not meeting the needs of all Greeks.

It is hoped that some action can be taken on the gripes aired at this meeting before intersession.

Tonight at 9, the Greek Council will sponsor a Christmas party at the Quonset Club. Admission will be by the special stickers distributed to all Greeks which should be attached to the back of your ID card. Music will be provided by Fate.

Joe Kos entertained friends, strangers, and stragglers with his art of cooking in the Student Union Art Gallery last Tuesday with a cabbage and kielbasa supper.

Ombudsman slices through UMass red tape

By MARA KLEIN
Staff Reporter

Situated in an office high in the Campus Center is a man who can help solve many of the bureaucratic problems at UMass. Jay Severeid, the University Ombudsman sees himself as a "grievance man", someone to respond to the UMass community when regular channels don't work.

Although he is a faculty member, he seeks to help people with problems against the University or a UMass agency. This service is available to all undergraduate and graduate students, faculty and administrative staff. He said graduate students should have more need for the Ombudsman's services, since they have less options open to them than the undergrad does.

If he finds merit a student's problem, he functions as an advocate, by trying to get the best possible hearing.

Many of the residential areas have Ombudsmen who work with Severeid in a voluntary capacity. They deal with the matters brought before them, if they feel they can help. If they can't help you they'll send you to someone who can.

As in past years the most prevalent problems are housing assignments, off campus housing and financial aid. These problems seem to persist over the years. At the present time Severeid's assistant Phyllis Foster is working with the administration to resolve the forced dorm living policy. Other problems which have recently come up are that professors are scheduling exams before finals, thereby creating an overload of exams during the last week of classes.

Another problem concerned a female student who was propositioned by one of her male instructors. Plagiarism is another problem handled by the Ombudsman's office. Two cases involving academic grievances now under review are the Journalistic Studies controversy and the Fashion Merchandising problem. Both of these situations concern retroactive policy and departmental requirements.

A graduate of Northwestern University and Cornell University, Severeid has been a member of the Communication Studies department for eighteen years. For the past two and a half years he has been the University Ombudsman, succeeding Prof. Ellsworth Barnard.

The Ombudsman serves a two year term, but he can be reappointed once. The appointment is made by the President of the University upon a recommendation of a selection committee comprised of three faculty members, two undergraduate students and one graduate student. Since he is appointed by a varied committe, with no political pressure, so that he can act as an independent agent for anyone he feels has been treated unfairly by the University.

Jay Severeid is someone that UMie's should know about and feel free to talk to.

DOMINICAN REPUBLICAN SEEKING TO INCREASE TOURISM

Pedro Morales Troncoso, director of the Tourism Department of the Dominican Republic, had been visiting the Eastern United States, from Florida to Boston, in an effort of that country to increase U.S. interest in their tourism industry.

According to Morales Troncoso the effort is to create an awareness among Americans and U.S. Spanish Speaking that life in Dominican Republic is not as presented by political adversaries and the American press.

According to Morales Troncoso the present government had created more hospitals, schools and employment opportunities. He expressed hope that the Dominican students in United States, when they returned to their homeland could proudly said "Tengo una Patria.'

Prosecutor charges

Nixon offered $300,000 to Haldeman, Ehrlichman

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The prosecution charged yesterday that President Richard M. Nixon offered H. R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman up to $300,000 legal expense money if Watergate cover-up revelations forced them to resign their White House posts.

Cross-examining defendant Haldeman at the cover-up trial, assistant prosecutor Richard Ben-Veniste said tapes of an April 17, 1973, meeting among Nixon and his two top aides showed they were "all in together and the President was willing to provide money if they needed it."

Acknowledging defense objections, Judge John J. Sirica eventually instructed the jury to regard Ben-Veniste's remarks as argument and not evidence, but not before the prosecutor had gotten his allegation into the record.

"Is it not a fact," Ben-Veniste asked Haleman, "that in the conversation with President Nixon, President Nixon told you that there was funds available in cash to be made after you leave the White House for your benefit and expense-$220,000 to $300,000 from persons who received favored treatment over the years?"

Before Haldeman could answer, Sirica asked Ben-Vensite what the "materiality" of his question was.

"This tends to show that Mr. Nixon, Ehrlichman and Haldeman were all talking about what their strategy would be - what their line would be and Mr. Haldeman went up and testified falsely before the Select Senate Watergate Committee," Ben-Veniste said.

"They were all in together and the President was willing to provide money if they needed it," Ben-Veniste said.

Haldeman and Ehrlichman, two of the five defendants at the cover-up trial, did resign from the White House staff about two weeks after the April 17 conversation, at a time when the cover-up was collapsing because of John W. Dean's cooperation with investigators. Nixon fired Dean at the same time.

Defense lawyers said Ehrlichman had refused Nixon's money offer and Haldeman, when finally allowed to respond, said he did too.

"It seems to me a highly unsavory connotation has been put upon it in the way it has been raised," he said.

Ben-Veniste also introduced previously unpublished tape transcripts which recorded Nixon's early reactions to the news Dean had begun to cooperate with Watergate investigators.

In the transcript of a Nixon-Haldeman talk on April 24, 1973, Nixon said:

"Well, I think he's out to save himself if he'll, he's gonna play every card that he can, and uh, a desperate man he may wanna bring the president down too, but in this case then, Bob, there's no, no other choice, it's to fight, to fight like hell. This is an evil man, you know."

"My own belief at this point is that," Nixon said, "that we just gotta stand goddamn firm today, tomorrow, Friday, the weekend."

Albert suggests that Mills' term as Committee Chairman is over

WASHINGTON [AP] — House Speaker Carl B. Albert indicated yesterday he believes that hospitalized Rep. Wilbur D. Mills' tenure as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee is over.

Albert, D-Okla., was asked at a news conference if he assumed that Mills would not be chairman if he returns to Congress.

"I think that's a pretty accurate statement," he said, but indicated the problem of selecting the committee chairman for the 94th Congress would be treated gingerly.

"We don't want to hurt a man who has done so much for Congress for 36 years," he said. "He has a great record. He is one of the greatest congressmen of our generation but he is a sick man."

Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., the committee's acting chairman and Mills' most probable successor,' said: "He is a very sick man and I think the odds are that he will not be" able to continue.

Democratic colleagues of Mills, 65, have said they don't think he will remain in Congress if he loses the position that has given him wide-ranging powers over the nation's tax, Social Security, and health insurance legislation. Mills has been chairman of the committee since 1958 and a member of the House since 1939.

Meanwhile, Annabel Battistella, the stripper who ran from Mills' car and into the Tidal Basin last Oct. 7, said she hoped to visit the ailing congressman at the Bethesda Naval Medical Center. She left her New York hotel yesterday afternoon but her destination was not disclosed.

Mills' illness was not diagnosed, but the hospital reported he was in satisfactory condition.

Boland hits Mills

SPRINGFIELD AP — U.S. Rep. Edward P. Boland said yesterday he wants to see Rep. Wilbur D. Mills replaced as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Boland, D-Mass., did not refer specifically to Mills' involvement with striptease dancer Fanne Foxe, but instead criticized his behavior in a general way.

"His repeated public actions raise the possibility in my mind that some untoward influence might be exerted on him or his legislative actions. It could be injurious to the nation," Boland said.

Sources say miners accept new contract

CHARLESTON, W.Va. [UPI] — The nation's striking miners have ratified a proposed contract with soft coal producers to end a 23-day walkout which threatened to worsen the nation's economic woes, a union source said yesterday.

"It definitely has passed," the source said. "They are already celebrating in Washington."

The source, who declined to be identified, said the vote in UMW districts across the country was running 56 per cent in favor of the pact. The only exception was in southern West Virginia's District 29 where "just a dribble" of returns had come into union headquarters in Washington.

"Even if all of District 29 votes against it, it is still passed," the source said. He predicted the final margin of approval would range from 53 to 60 per cent.

Results of the balloting, which ended at 8 p.m. local time last night for the 22 UMW districts, were to be announced Thursday by UMW President Arnold Miller at an 11 a.m. news conference in Washington.

However, even with ratification it probably would be Monday at the earliest before mines could resume full production.

Hartford students plan campus fasts

HARTFORD, Conn [UPI] — A hunger banquet in Hamden and a fast by students in the Hartford area planned for today represent a growing movement across the state to help feed the hungry people of the world.

About half of the student body at Trinity College will take part today in a campus wide fast to raise money to feed hungry people in America and overseas.

Trinity Hunger Action Project, a student group, said about 800 persons have signed a pledge to go without at least one meal.

the Rev. William Sloane Coffin Jr., Yale University chaplain, will address the participants today at 4 p.m. in the Life Sciences Auditorium at Trinity.

Coffin started a similar program that was launched last month at Yale.

The Trinity sponsors said Sage Foods Inc., director of the meal plan at the school, has promised to contribute a large portion of the cost of the unused meals to the project.

The Horace Bushnell Congregational Church Pantry, an emergency relief agency, will receive 75 per cent of the contributions and the rest will go to Oxfam America, a relief organization for famine victims.

Padre Humberto Almazon of Cromwell, known as the movie priest, will speak at a Hunger Banquet where the main course will consist of rice and tea.

An international movie star of the 1950s who has played opposite Ingrid Bergman, Sophia Loren, Anna Magnani, and Jeanne Moreau, he is currently featured in two movies to be released soon starring Ernest Borgnine. By coincidence, the banquet will be held in Hamden where Borgnine was born in 1917.

Scheduled for 8 p.m., at St. Rita's Church, it is sponsored by the Marriage and Family Apostolate of the Archdiocese of Hartford to dramatize the "reality of the nutritional inequities in the world."

The Apostolate says the rice and tea menu represents "what most of the world might be served as a meal."

Yale's undergraduate orchestra will hold a concert Friday "dedicated to a world without artificial boundaries and without hunger.

US requests Canada to keep sending oil

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The White House said yesterday the United States still is importing more oil than it should and appealed to Canada to continue its present level of shipments in case other foreign sources should dry up. Before President Ford met with visiting Canadian Premier Pierre Trudeau, press secretary Ron Nessen said the administration hopes Canada will change its mind and at least agree to a more gentle phase out of the crude oil now especially vital to the American Midwest.

Canada announced plans on Nov. 22 to cut its oil exports to the United States starting Jan. 1 from 900,000 barrels a day to 800,000 with a view to ending all exports by 1982.

"The United States is disappointed to learn the Canadian government does plan to shut down production of some of the oil and reduce its supplies to the United States more rapidly than was suggested by Canada's National Energy Board," Nessen said.

He said the phasing out period was nncessary so that the U.S. Midwest, chief users of Canadian crude oil in this country, could secure new supplies and processing facilities.

However, speaking of all international suppliers of petroleum to America Nessen said, "Progress toward reducing oil imports has not been as satisfactory as the President hoped for." He gave no figures.

Nessen also reaffirmed President Ford's often-repeated opposition to raising the gasoline tax to reduce consumption.

House bans busing

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House voted 212 to 176 yesterday to accept a House-Senate compromise which could effectively ban the busing of school children to achieve racial desegregation.

The amendment, attached to a supplemental appropriations measure providing in part for the funding of the Health, Education and Welfare Department, would prohibit any of the $5.8 billion for HEW over next two years to be used to classify or assign students or teachers by race, sex or religion.

Power unit backed

BOSTON [UPI] — Supporters of an initiative petition calling for creation of a Massachusetts Public Power Authority yesterday filed an estimated 90,000 certified signatures with the secretary of state.

The proposal, sponsored by U.S. Rep. Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., and co-signed by a number of state leaders and consumer advocates, calls for creation of a state authority to build and operate all new power plants in the state.

Vets funds sought

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford asked Congress yesterday for $813.7 million to finance the GI Bill it passed over his veto, telling the lawmakers their action will cost the nation an extra half billion dollars.

Ford presented the supplemental appropriation request 24 hours after the House and Senate voted overwhelmingly to override his veto of legislation boosting education benefits for Vietnam-era GIs by about 23 per cent.

Food stamps attacked

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Agriculture Department yesterday took the first formal step toward reducing food stamp benefits for many needy families March 1 despite warnings that the move will face a strong challenge from critics in Congress.

Department officials announced that a formal proposal to raise the amount of cash which poor people pay for food stamps will be published Friday. They said public comment on the proposal will be accepted until Dec. 27.

Report released on Maine Indians

Maine legislators mock Indian describing injustice

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — A Passamaquoddy Indian chief, more fluent in his native tongue than in English, was mocked when he tried in a faltering voice to tell a state legislative committee of social injustice.

"I understood what he said, and I believe that most of those people also understood what he wanted to say, but they didn't make any attempt to understand, they laughed."

That testimony came from Robert Newell, a former tribal councilor of the Passamaquoddies, and is contained in a report on Maine Indians released yesterday by the Maine Advisory Committee to the U.S. Civil Rights Commission.

Newell said there exists a great frustration among Indian leaders who are more fluent in Indian than in English.

Elaborating on that incident in which his chief spoke to the legislative committee, he said:

"I saw these people, I saw two people elected to this legislature, one person nudge another person and sort of smile or laugh at this person who was trying to express himself, trying to relate Indian problems to the people."

The committee, which spent more than a year collecting such testimony from Maine Indians, noted that the tribes have produced many forceful and articulate spokesmen, but "it is clear that Indian voices are not being heard."

The 108-page report is filled with testimony of injustices, discrimination and humiliations experienced by Maine Indians. It points to "a long and tiresome struggle against the insensitivity of agencies and the callousness of men in power."

The committee also noted the unique problem experienced by Maine's estimated 4,000 Indians in being classified "state Indians," which denies them federal benefits.

"The dilemma of Maine Indians is worse than that of many other Indians, because even though Maine Indians experience problems identical to those of other Indians, the federal government has systematically denied Maine Indians the protection and services which it provides other Indians. State services to Maine Indians are inadequate and applied unevenly. Consequently, they are left to struggle with other for non-Indian programs which are limited," the report said.

One such area was Indian school programs that were obtained by non-Indians without the knowledge or consent of the Indian school boards involved.

Mary Altvater, head of the Pleasant Point Passamaquoddy School Board, told the committee: "Maybe our proposals would not be as eloquent or as good; they might not conform to...the rigid standards that they ask, but it would be our proposal and it would be our program...if you are not learning your culture you have no basis to be proud of your heritage."

A large section of the report focused on the Indians' long battle for tribal autonomy and self-determination. Testimony of that struggle was given by Richard Hamilton, the Penobscot tribal director of a cultural program at Indian Island in Old Town.

"Since the Anglo-European invasion, Maine Indians have been subject to continuous and unremitting social and economic injustices."

Dukakis hints at cuts in state spending

BOSTON [AP] — Gov.-elect Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday a "meat cl ver" cut in state government programs might be the only alternative to a budget deficit that would otherwise require new taxes.

At an informal news briefing the governor-elect said despite the $300 million deficit now being run by state agencies, he is still committed to a campaign pledge of no new state taxes "if humanly possible."

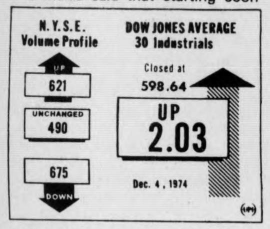
Dukakis said that starting soon his fiscal officials will begin studying where cuts in state programs can be made without eliminating social services.

He also said he is committed to a fiscal 1976 state budget which limits stage agencies to present appropriations if possible.

Dukakis said it would be two to three months before he knows where cuts can be made and that he does not know if the reductions can stave off a deficit.

He suggested that one possibility would be to reduce the state general relief rolls which are fully financed by Massachusetts, by moving recipients more quickly into welfare programs that are 50 per cent reimbursed by the federal government.

Dukakis said that there will be "a serious slowdown in the growth of social services, not cutbacks...There will be some temporary contractions in the next 12 to 18 months in some program areas."



What?
Sip Bacardi before you mix it?

Sure. It's surprisingly dry, not sweet. Light-bodied, not heavy. Delightfully smooth. And so good mixed, it's got to be good un-mixed, right? Try it.

Exchange program offers low-cost study abroad

UMass and other Valley students have the opportunity of a cultural and academic alternative to that of the United States by participating in one of the international exchange programs. While in attendance at the following foreign institution, students earn a year's academic credit toward their home degree at little extra cost beyond that of an equivalent time period on the Amherst campus.

The tour of options open to juniors and seniors with at least a 3.0 cumulative average begins in Great Britain. In England, UMass has linked up with the Universities of Keele, Lancaster, East Anglia, Northeast London Polytechnic, and Sussex. With the exception of Northeast London Polytechnic located in the city of London, these schools are situated throughout England in more rural settings yet accessible to larger and more urban areas by reasonable and frequent public transportation systems.

Students are housed in either univerisity residence halls or flats, and fully integrated into the structure of the host university. UMies will carry a full course load and earn 30-32 credits. The cost should not exceed that of one year at the Amherst campus, excluding air fare.

Students can also consider the University of Stirling in Scotland or the University College Dublin in Ireland. Stirling is especially strong in history and sociology and Dublin in Philosophy, Literature and Celtic Studies. These programs also grant a year's academic credit at no extra cost beyond that of international air fare.

The University of Helsinki, located in Finland's capital, is ideal for the student of Scandinavian or Russian studies. Its location offers a unique opportunity for travel throughout Europe and Russia. A knowledge of Finnish is recommended but not required as course and examinations in English are given. Students live in university accomodations.

Moving south and into another continent, the University of Lagos exchange in Nigeria is an impressive program for students of African Studies or for persons interested in African culture but with majors in the Arts, Social Sciences and Natural Sciences. Lagos is located in Lagos, Nigeria, the capital city with a population of 665,000 and the judicial, commercial, industrial and international center of that country. Here too students are fully integrated into the greater University body and housed in its residence halls. After the cost of air travel, the year should not exceed by more than $200 that of one at the Amherst campus.

There is also room for a Massachusetts student at the University of Sydney in Australia. The University of Sydney has opened its faculties of Arts, Social Sciences, and Science to qualified applicants. Accomodations for on or off-campus housing can be contracted for the year in Australia.

Students who want to spend the year a bit closer to home can consider the University of Victoria in British Columbia and the University of the West Indies in Jamaica. The University of Victoria is located in the outskirts of Victoria, the capital city of British Columbia, at the southeast tip of Vancouver Island.

The temperature is mild and it hardly has snow in the winter, the city's atmosphere is British-like, and former participants in this exchange have remarked on the subtle yet numerous differences between life and the university in the United States and Canada. A variety of courses are offered in the faculties of Arts and Sciences, Education and Fine Arts.

The University of the West Indies' Mona campus, the largest of this University's sites, is located seven miles from Kingstown, the capital of Jamaica. There are faculties of Arts, Education, Natural Sciences, and Social Sciences. The University is equipped with residential facilities for foreign students.

Applications for the University of Sydney must be completed by January 6. All other applications must by in by February 14. Application forms are available at the International Programs Office in 239 Whitmore.

The shoe that works with your body.

This shoe is different from any shoe you've ever worn. It's the EARTH* negative heel shoe. The shoe designed to work in harmony with your entire body.

The heel of the Earth® shoe is actually lower than the toe. This allows you to walk naturally. Like when you walk barefoot in sand or soft earth and your heel sinks down lower than your toes.

The entire sole of the Earth shoe is molded in a very special way. This allows you to walk in a gentle rolling motion. And to walk easily and comfortably on the hard jarring cement of our cities.

But remember, just because a shoe looks like ours doesn't mean it works like ours. So to be sure you're getting the Earth brand shoe, look on the sole for our Earth trademark and U.S. Patent #3305947.

Your body will thank you.

Recommends new assistance system

Congressional study proposes welfare programs be scrapped

WASHINGTON [AP] — A three-year congressional study recommends ending most public welfare programs, including food stamps, in favor of tax credits, new subsistence allowances and work incentives.

The study, released Wednesday by Rep. Martha W. Griffiths, D-Mich., also calls for an end to state control of welfare programs in favor of a federally administered system that would be run by the Internal Revenue System.

"Let's junk the whole thing; it's impossible," Mrs. Griffiths said at a news conference at which the new proposal was released. She said she was introducing a bill Thursday for the new system.

At the same time, the Agriculture Department announced proposed new regulations to force poor people to spend more for food stamps. The higher cost of food stamps would save the government at least $645 million a year, the department estimated.

Under the plan, families would pay 30 per cent of their net monthly income beginning next March 1 to receive food stamps. Currently, the cost averages about 23 per cent.

The nation's 14.7 million food stamp recipients presently pay about $2.5 billion for approximately $6.5 billion worth of coupons.

The welfare report, prepared by the subcommittee on fiscal policy of the Joint Economic Committee, recommended a system of tax credits of $225 a person to replace the current personal exemption of $750 a person on federal income taxes, and a subsistence allowance to poor families and individuals that would be reduced by 50 cents for every dollar earned by recipients.

Mrs. Griffiths said the total value of grants and tax credits would come to $3,600 for a penniless family of four with two adults and $3,000 for a family of four with one adult.

She said the new program would cost the federal government $157.4 billion annually, compared with the estimated $142 billion being spent in the current 1974-75 fiscal year on social service programs such as welfare, health, education and Social Security. The current federal budget totals slightly over $300 billion.

The report recommends beginning the new program in 1977 but says that it could be phased in beginning this fiscal year. Mrs. Griffiths said it could be financed by a normal growth in tax revenues.

Existing programs of aid to families with dependent children and food stamps would be scrapped under the proposal, but the supplemental security income program for the aged, blind and disabled would continue.

Continuing Education offers 40-course fare for Winter Session

A series of over 40 courses, specifically designed to meet the educational and leisure time needs of Amherst and surrounding communities, is offered by the Division of Continuing Education here this January.

Winter Session 1975 gives participants the chance to learn a new skill, to broaden their knowledge, and to meet new friends with common interests, through mini-courses that meet anywhere from once, to once a week, during the four-week January session at various times during the day or evening.

A sampling of courses: Massachusetts Taxation, designed to educate people regarding laws and the preparation of their own tax forms; Home Instructional Skills for Parents, an introduction to techniques that will enable parents to assist children with homework and study skills; Chapter 766, designed to acquaint people with the recently implemented legislation concerning the education of children with special needs; Cancer: Early Detection Means Early Prevention, a series of three workshops offered in cooperation with the American Cancer Society; and Real Estate Clinic, designed to educate the novice home buyer.

Also: Basic Auto Mechanics, Practical Carpentry, Self-Helf Workshops for Women, The Role of Exercise in Health and Fitness, Stop Smoking Clinic, Weaving, Photography, and many more.

Winter Session 1975 runs from January 6 to 31 and registration can be done by mail or by stopping by at the Continuing Education office on campus. Courses are open to the general public. Most classes will have limited enrollment, so early registration is encouraged.

Further information, a catalog, and registration materials are available from the Division of Continuing Education, 205 Hills House North, UMass, Amherst 01002, 545-0905.

Summer Counseling Program accepting student applications

Applications are now being accepted for student group leader positions in the 1975-Summer Counseling Program. The program will operate from June 3, through July 31, 1975. Ten sessions for fall entering freshmen will be held, along with five transfer programs.

Training sessions for the thirty selected counselors will be held during the latter part of the spring semester and the week of June 3 through June 6. All positions require residence in an assigned residence hall and meals in the dining hall for the nine-week period. Summer counseling positions require full time participation. Summer school courses cannot be taken.

Qualifications for counselor positions include successful work experience, a positive attitude toward University life, knowledge regarding academic course planning, high energy levels, a willingness to accept job performance standards and to attend the spring training sessions.

Interested and qualified students may obtain an application from the Student Development Center, 102 Berkshire House. Applications must be returned on or before February 7, 1975. Selections will be announced during spring break.

Letters to the editor

Poles respond to Karsh

To the Editor:

We cannot allow one small but not insignificant comment by Diane Karsh to be printed in the Collegian without protest. In her Tuesday, 26 November letter to the Editor, [Taking Up Where Cohen Left Off], Ms. Karsh states that "The Checks [sic], Poles, Hungarians, etc., joined in [on the Jewish extermination] with relish. People who did not actually slaughter merely kept silent." Her statement is an irrationally emotional ethnic generalization which is as near the truth as the word Czech is correctly spelled.

May we inform Ms. Karsh, and indeed the University community, of the position of Poland, one of these alleged persercutors, during World War II. Merely twenty years prior to the Nazi invasion, Poland had at last become a free state after 123 years of political non-existence which was accompanied by massive immigration from a socially and economically shattered homeland.

She is obviously unaware, for instance, that six-million Polish citizens [one-fifth of the population] were destroyed in Poland alone during the years 1939-1945 and that three million were not Jewish. Many East Europeans were slated for destruction, unlike, for example, the more celebrated Dutch who had fewer Jews among them to defend. Our people fought along with their Jewish brothers [i.e, we suggest she read Tuwim's "We, the Polish Jews" and the concentration camp poetry of Issak Kacenelson] putting aside age old quarrels only to be maligned today.

Poland emerged out of the war 20 per cent smaller in territory and one-third reduced in population with Warsaw, its capitol, 85 per cent uninhabitable. Our families, too, knew the death camps and the humiliation of the enemy all too well. Many Poles today bear their identification numbers permanently tatooed on their arms with bitter memories of the same war which so brutalized the Jewish people.

Nevertheless, heroic attempts to protect Jews were carried out by a great number of sympathetic Poles at the risk of losing their own lives. Priests falsified baptismal records while others dug tunnels into the Ghetto hell of Warsaw However, efforts to save the Jewish ten-percent of the Polish population were self-defeating.

We sympathize with you, Ms. Karsh and others, in your longing for a gathering place for ALL the lost tribes of Israel, but to say that the Poles relished the genocide of Jewry during WW II is to admit an unawareness of Poland's own awful state of destruction and to profess a cruel form of self-martyrdom.

We respectfully suggest that Diane Karsh acquaint herself with more facts of history, especially the history of the forgotten other half of Europe. We suggest that she search a bit more rigorously for insight into the sacrifice of others before making such impressionable comments.

Polish American Cultural Association

A "Rocky" road to the SGA?

To the Editor:

I am writing concerning the upcoming referendum about popular elections for the office of president of the Student Government Association. It is my sincere belief that the choice of popular elections should be voted down as it has been three times in the past. In the most recent election, held in 1972, the voters clearly mandated to keep the election as it was then and as it is today, an electoral college. I am basing my opinion on what I see to be the major problems that could arise if the election is held on a popular basis.

The first major problem is one of funding. By law the candidates for the office would have to fund their own campaigns. This could run into a large sum of money if you consider the size of the constituancy and amount of work that would have to be done if every voter was to be contacted by a candidate.

The undergraduate population numbers 23,000. This is larger than most districts that a state representative would have. In some campaigns candidates for state representative have been known to spend 5,000 dollars, or more. I am certainly not suggesting that a candidate for SGA President would spend that much but the prospects of a candidate even spending 400 dollars is not unforeseeable. This prospect frightens me. Could the SGA president's election be a step towards rule by the elite? I would hate to think so but the prospect must be considered. Very few students at this campus could afford to run a 100 dollar campaign, never mind a 400 dollar one. With the high price of printing and the ad rates charged in the Collegian the wealthiest student on campus could very easily get to be the best known. I would hate to see Nelson Rockefeller Jr. become president, not because he was qualified, but because he had the bucks.

The SGA president who in the recent past, has often been a commuter, would be at a distinct disadvantage in his-her attempt to become president. With the popular election the candidate who has a strong political base, such as a dorm with which to work from. The dorm resident would merely use the people on his corridor or in his-her dorm as a stepping stone to the presidency. For the same reasons the veteran would be eliminated from any possibility of becoming president. The vet who even after the recent GI bill payment hike is receiving a mere pittance for what is needed to live on, certainly could not afford the short term-high cost of an election. What it will boil down to is the wealthy on-campus undergraduate who will be the primary candidate for the SGA Presidency. I do not feel as I hope you won't that this is the type of person who you want to be the sole type of individual running. Can this type of person represent you effectively at a tuition-raise hearing when he doesn't have to worry about tuition?

For these reasons I would hope that the people who plan to vote, will vote no to any attempt to place the S.G.A. presidency in the hands of the rich and out of the hands of the average UMie.

S.P.O.N.G.E. racist garbage

To the Editor:

After reading the letter from S.P.O.N.G.E., which appeared in the November 25th issue of the* Daily Collegian, I was totally dismayed. I am appalled that the Collegian's *staff would print a letter from such a racist organization. In representing the interests of the students on this campus you people have the responsibility of rejecting such racist garbage. I will agree that the content of the letter was one of constructive criticism, but it makes me ill to think that there is such a group of people who have the nerve to go under this title. This organization is not worthy of any publicity, much less space in the student's paper.

If S.P.O.N.G.E. would come up out of its ocean long enough, it would see how many times the media has given biased presentations on their side of the issue. It is about time that someone give a presentation in favor of busing. I hope S.P.O.N.G.E. will note that I have said busing and not "forced busing" as they put it. If they are to resist busing on the grounds that it is forced, then for the same reason they should resist every other law that has been passed down by the Supreme Court. Why not refuse to pay forced taxes or refuse to accept forced social benefits such as social security if this is the case?

The mere name of this racist organization implies that they are a group of socially unaware people. To think that the members of the Black Community have received much more than they deserve is a great misconception on their behalf. The truth is that they have very little, much less than what they should have. The little they do have has come about through great struggles. S.P.O.N.G.E. members would see this if they would investigate the housing facilities, job statuses and family incomes in the Black communities. As equal members of the human race Black people are entitled to all the rights of the White people, and this means quality education.

Are pro-lifers pro-starvation?

To the Editor:

Reading a letter discussing a pro-life abortion position, I cannot help but wonder how pro-life the position is. Certainly taking the life of a fetus must be a difficult and hesitant decision, but the decision should be made in the context of the circumstances of which it is a part. The world situation at present threatens mass starvation due to food shortages and overpopulation; starvation has already begun. As much as we may share and stockpile our food supplies, we cannot guarantee the weather will allow our efforts to succeed. Overpopulation, however, is a matter with which we can deal; with great effort, perhaps, but with some chance of success. Contraception is a necessary first step, when that fails, abortion is the next step. Not to be forced on those against it, abortion should nevertheless be available to those who desire not to contribute to the overburden of people existing. Nature has a simple method of dealing with overgrown populations; be it rabbits or people, when the system can no longer support them, they starve until enough have died to again become supportable. We are overabundant as a species, and we begin to starve. I suggest we all take a pro-life stand; let us save our children from the agony of starvation and the fear of death. Let us choose to abort some of our unborn, before nature chooses to abort us all.

By the way, if Jesus had been aborted, perhaps we'd all be Jewish...what's so bad about that?

Balloting for each office will be held separately so that an unsuccessful candidate for a higher office may run for a lesser one.

Each candidate will be allowed from 3 to 5 minutes to speak. At the end of speaking for an office, candidates will be asked to leave the room. A period of staff discussion about the candidates will follow. Finally, the candidates will be invited back into the room and balloting taken.

Ballot referendum questions will be distributed to staff members as they enter. Among ballot questions will be:

—a proposed change in make-up of the editorial board.

—a proposal to abolish the existing Publishing Board Constitution and set up a new one.

—a proposed plan for allowing staff votes in the future by ballot referendum to eliminate the need for holding staff meetings on minor decisions.

Reading between the lines

"All I mean by truth is what I can't help thinking."
—Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr.

Anyone who reads newspapers at all should be moved by the above quote, as most news takes some reading between the lines if one is interested in discerning the truth behind any given story. Perusing newspapers over the last week or so has given me some food for thought about the "story behind the story" in most news, and that's what I'd like to pass on here.

The first story that grabs my attention is the one in which President Ford stated that there would be no gasoline shortages this winter unless there is another Arab oil embargo. He also stated that he doesn't see "any prospects of gasoline going to $1 a gallon."

It would seem if one looks between the lines that Ford is plainly speaking through his hat, saying what the nation needs to hear at this time. After all, the Arabs get one hell of a lot of blame for our energy woes considering that they supply less than 10 per cent of our oil. Furthermore, if the real causes of energy shortages and resultant inflationary prices is the big company conspiracy that many people suspect, then Ford has about as much power over this winter's energy situation as Richard Nixon had last year.

Well, they needed to hear the Ford statement in Peoria, so Middle America got what it wanted.

There were two local stories that caught my attention this week also. The first concerns the Amherst Board of Selectmen's decision to hold all elections next year while the Five Colleges are in session, thus assuring that students registered to vote in Amherst will be around when the voting happens.

This is a nice liberal thing to do, and the local press, including this newspaper, have been very kind to the selectmen in their coverage of the vote this week. What they fail to remember is that the action comes about two years late, after the 1972 defeat of Eric Walgren in an intersession election which, whatever you think of Walgren, was nothing short of election fraud, if only in a passive sense.

Whether or not the student vote would have helped Walgren is questionable, but also not at issue. Students deserved a right to their voice in '72, and it was a year in which they were speaking in what future years will probably reveal was record numbers.

The last story that caught my eye was the one which stated that "The University administration said all student requests for confidential personal files made under a recently enacted law will now have to go through the President's office in Boston."

This is a typical example of the University's inability to deal with people. The Amherst campus seems to be, either for reasons of personnel or inability to comply, unwilling to let you see the files that they must now by law release to you.

Naturally enough (to anyone used to living in this country) Whitmore's response was to try to bureaucratize the problem out of existence, figuring that if folks had to hassle all the way to Boston for their files they'd probably be too busy to see it through. It's really kind of a damn shame that we're forced to put up with this shit, but we don't have the guts or numbers to stand up and bitch. It's still a ripoff.

I guess the thing to look for in all these stories is the bias of the people or organizations being covered. The watchword to all this is a quote that Bill Clay, a black Congressman from St. Louis, laid out two years ago. Simply stated, it goes like this: "There are no permanent friends and no permanent enemies, just permanent interests."

It's something you should think of every time you hear, see, or read anything.

Casserole me over

Realizing that the world's supply of food is at a minimum, I began to wonder.

When certain foods run out, someone somewhere along the way will probably invent some garbage-like processed, synthetic substitute and we'll forget all about the real thing.

It has also come to my attention that when certain foods become extinct, certain expressions will no longer make sense.

Food. If we can't eat it, we can at least talk about it. You know, sort of keep up the memory.

Or else.

Or else when someone says that something is American as apple pie, no one will know what they are talking about. Or if they mention that something was as easy as pie, they'll still be misunderstood. When the food supply runs out, what'll the new expression be? It was as easy as polysorbate 60?

It won't be a marshmallow world in the winter when there are no longer any marshmallows.

When describing certain colors, you won't be able to make sense when you say lemon yellow, orange orange, milk white or chestnut brown. Perhaps potassium citrate or sodium carbonate will best describe them.

Fifty years from now, when your roommates told you that they heard something through the grapevine will your kids know what they are talking about?

Sexists won't be able to say that a woman is a good looking tomato any longer. Lovers, when they tell each other that their lips are like cherries, or call each other sugar or honey will probably be misunderstood.

Instead of someone being as slow as molasses, how about as slow as sodium benzoate (less than 120th of 1 per cent).

Who's going to know what you're talking about when you say that someone is nuts, bananas or just plain nutty as a fruitcake?

I guess that we are going to have to go back to swearing because when you tell someone that they are full of baloney they're going to look at you as if you're full of coconuts.

My mother won't be able to say "oh fudge" or "oh sugar". Sorry, Ruthy, but you're going to learn how to swear.

You won't be able to feel like a piece of shit anymore, because when there's no more food, you won't be able to shit.

So, the next time someone tells you that things are just peachy, or that they just can't cut the mustard, or that you're the cream in their coffee try and remember what they're referring to.

And if I were to forget about my second favorite pastime (eating, that is), well, that would just casserole me over.

China's not the only country in Asia

By GAURI BHATIA

I was going through that intermittent best-seller, the "Course Description Guide" in my usual frame of excitement (It's a 10:10, I'll take it!). What should I come across but a section entitled "Asian Studies."

Asian Studies!!! My brain felt its first tingle of excitement. I'm Indian. That's part of Asia. Maybe I can learn something about my own country!

I began scanning the pages. Elementary Chinese II didn't sound so hot. Trying to make letters that look like the drops in egg-drop soup wasn't particularly appealing to me. Just because India and China are neighbors seems no reason to learn the language.

My eyes continued down the page. How about Contemporary Chinese Literature, Intermediate Classical Chinese, Intro. to Chinese Philology and Bibliography (that's a course entirely devoted to the footnotes in Confucious). ....Surely something would have caught my interest by now?

I was shocked and dismayed when I turned to the Hotel and Restaurant section of the "Course Description Guide." No course is being offered in Chinese Cooking (Reading list: Sweet or Sour; A Philosophical Discussion; Eggs: To Foo Young or not to Foo Young].

Now you may think I sound bitter - that's not fair to me. I realize fully what a great heritage China has - what fine literature, art, even food.

What I want to ask the power-that-be in Whitmore is "What happened to the rest of Asia?" Malaysia, the Philippines, India, Korea, Pakistan -- are they now states of that conglomerate China?

I realize I've been away for a long time, but I'm sure somebody would have told me if I didn't have a country anymore.

What happened to India? I know we don't have a hell of a lot of food, but culture we've got oodles of - artists, writers, the whole works! And our own language even!

Admittedly, there are a few token courses concerning other parts of Asia now being given on campus. An "Art of India" course that focuses on two defunct temples each semester, and a Hindi language course that has to meet in the lobby of John Adams.

So really folks, I'm not knocking China, but how about giving the rest of Asia a chance? We don't ask for much. A classroom for my Hindi course to meet in, an occasional mention in the Course Description Guide...It's not all that much for 563,490,000 people to ask for, is it?

SENEGAL DANCE COMPANY

Senegal Dance Co. to perform in Amherst

The National Dance Company of Senegal will appear in concert at Amherst Regional High School Auditorium Friday, Dec. 6, at 8 p.m. This event is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Arts Council as part of its Dance Series.

The Company, under the direction of maurice Senghor, nephew of Senegal's poet-laureate, President Leopold Senghor, first appeared in this country in 1971 as part of New York's Afro-Asian Festival. They have since presented about 300 performances in major cities in the United States and Canada.

In honor of the 15th Anniversary of their touring, the Senegalese have prepared a new program for the Troupe's 40 singers, dancers, drummers, musicians, acrobats, stiltwalkers, and a "living, dancing haystack." Mr. Senghor, as he did when he first created the Company, has again covered 10,000 miles throughout Senegal, searching out the most varied indigenous talent in his country.

The new program includes batteries of drummers from four different regions of Senegal performing on the Diakhanke, Soce, Wolof, and the Diola. This year's performance will include, for the first time, an authentic talking drum. Few artisans of this art form still exist in Africa today.

During this tour, the Company will perform at the United Nations General Assembly Hall before the UN Diplomatic Corps -- in honor of Human Rights Day. In addition, the Troupe has been invited to represent Africa as part of the Bicentennial international dance festival in Philadelphia and other pioneer cities.

Tickets for the Concert by the National DAnce Company of senegal are on sale at the UMass Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall (545-0202) and are priced at $4 for the general public; $2 for UMass-Amherst students.

Southwest holds black UMass artists' exhibit

The Southwest Resource Center (at Hampden Dining Commons, in Southwest) is proud to present the collections of some of the university's fine, black artists. James Hinson, a graduate student and doctorial candidate from Boston, Mass., has done most of his work in wood, oils, acrylics, film, and photography. On Sunday, Dec. 9, 1974, he will present a collection of photographs, mainly black and white, dealing with the subject of Image. He characterizes his work as being "compositions; reflections of reality..."My works are worlds in and of themselves, fragments of images of what is." Mr. Hinson is a member of the Boston Negro Artists Association, Black Artists Union, and National Center for Performing Arts. His work has been exhibited at the National Center for Afro-American Artists, John B. Hynes Civic Auditorium at the Prudential Center in Boston, Northeastern University, Emerson College, Boston State College, Massachusetts, College of Art, and Anthony's Pier 4 Restaurant in Boston, Mass.

Drawings and paintings will be presented by Clinton Carter, Donna Jones, and Carl Carter. Clinton Carter, an artist from Boston, is a B.F.A. graduate of Massachusetts College of Art and at present, an M.F.A. candidate at the University of Massachusetts. Most of his work has been done over the past four years, his paintings consisting mainly of the Black Art theme, varying in all types of sizes and medias. Most of the work to be presented will be oils, some acrylics, pen and ink, and washes. "I cannot say that I have a particular style because I am still experimenting, learning, and trying to grow, as in life....that's what it's all about." Mr. Carter has exhibited his paintings at Boston State College, Northeastern University, Massachusetts College of Art, the Afro-American Art Association, and the Roxbury-North Dorchester A.P.A.C.

Ms. Donna Jones is a sophomore at the university and a B.F.A. candidate, from New York. Her art work consists mainly of oils and acrylics, and deals with a variation of themes, such as still life, abstract, portraits, and African sculpture heads. "As a student of the arts, I am dealing with many media and methods, experimenting to find the best way to express my message...What I have to say is influenced by my love for beautiful things and my background, being a woman, being Black, and existing in the 20th century."

Carl Center, "self-taught" black artist, also from Boston, will present his paintings, which will be mainly in acrylics. Mr. Carter is a member of the Afro-American Artists Association and is presently working with M.I.T., as a designer. His work, done mainly in the Black Art theme, has been on exhibit at the John B. Hynes Civic Auditorium at the Prudential Center in Boston, and at the Afro-American Association. As an added attraction, he will be doing portraits upon request, during the exhibit.

The exhibit and sale will be on Sunday, Dec. 9th, 1974 from 12 noon until 5 p.m., at the Southwest Resource Center (located at Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest). Spend an enjoyable afternoon browsing and talking with the artists. Refreshments will be served and everybody is encouraged to come, look, and buy!

BMCP meeting

There will be a meeting of the Black Mass Communication Project tonight at 7:30 p.m. in room 114 New Africa House.

Black Affairs

The end of the semester is here, as such this will be the last meeting of the semester. It is imperative that all members and interested students of the third world community be in attendance.

Chile expert gives speech today

Since the September 11th, 1973 overthrow of the democratically elected government of Dr. Salvadore Allende in Chile and the seizure of power by the Chilean military, news of the human atrocities committed by the forces of General Agusto Pinochet against the people has reached individuals the world over.

Today at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center Room 165, Mr. Charlie Rankin (National Director of the National Coordinating Center for Solidarity with Chile) will speak on the topic of: "The Significance of International Solidarity with The Chilean's Anti-Fascist Struggle".

Buckley to speak in S.U.B.

Today, at 12:15 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, Sheriff John Buckley of Middlesex County will speak on the problem of handguns in the Commonwealth. Sheriff Buckley, was was re-elected to that post last month, is the founder and president of "People Versus Handguns", an organization working for more effective control of the sale of handguns.

Steve Sachs, a UMass student who is the local organizer for the campaign, will also be present to make suggestions about what can be done locally. Sheriff Buckley will also speak tonight at 7:30 in Pierpont Lounge.

This is the sixth in a series of Thursday noon forums presented by the United Christian Foundation, an ecumenical ministry located in Hampshire House.

Women's center to present workshop

With Thanksgiving over, the holiday season is off and running. And many of us now are whirled into preparation for those few short days in December which are invariably circled as "big red letter days".

There are some of us who have already rushed into the epartment stores and opened our new-gala 30-day charge account or finished compiling our lists of gifts to be put on Lay-Away. Still others have already begun invading the craft shops and art stores for styrofoam balls, glitter, white glue, and authentic 'antique' Christmas prints. There are those who have collected several hundred pine cones and along with aerosol cans of gold and silver spray paint and bunches of dellarobia fruit are now set to create their Christmas wreaths.

Some people make wreaths for their own homes and others make them to sell at Church Christmas bazaars and fairs. And of course there are many of us who each year religiously frequent the holiday fairs held in and around Amherst.

And finally there are those of us who have all we can do to stop ourselves from tearing the page of December off our calendar and from telling our children that Santa Claus has died or from boycotting the department stores for daring to put up one candy cane or decorated artificial Christmas tree on the day after Halloween!

Yes, Virginia, some of us do indeed dread the holidays. Whether it's Christmas, Hannakuh, or the general holiday season itself, it can be a most difficult and depressing time of the year. We dread the anxiety brought about from wondering how we will be able to afford what the folks on Madison Avenue advertise this year as the "big toy on the '74 season'.

We dread the loneliness that many of us experience as we celebrate the holidays alone or with our one child in our four-room apartment. It's not everyone who fits the description of the perfect American family, like the Waltons or the Apples, who celebrate the holidays with parents, grandparents, children, and long-lost aunts and uncles - all brimfull of love, kindness, and good cheer.

We dread the artificiality of plastic tinsel, styrofoam decorations, and 'stocking stuffers.' We abhor the value placed on one day, the 25th day of one particular month on which all people are expected to wish others peace and good-will, to enjoy being with our families and to remember these whom we care for by giving them gifts.

Many of us are tired of buying the plastic. We are tired of being told to 'deck the halls' but don't have anybody to deck them with. We are tired of feeling depressed by four o'clock on Christmas afternoon. Usually by that time we have picked up the last of the torn and crumpled wrapping paper and have collected the stray bows from packages and have put them away for next year.

By late in the afternoon we can usually find ourselves helping Johnny or Patty hunt for the missing battery for the new toy train which simply can't run without those four D-cell batteries. And that's when we hear ourselves whisper, "Is that all there is?"

There are reasons for why so many of us feel low at the holiday season. A lot of us know what is wrong; some of us know what is missing. And a few of us have some ideas about ways in which we can change a lot of the plastic and artificiality of the holiday season. We can help ourselves to experience more genuine caring, a spirit of friendship, and a more loving holiday.

We want to share our ideas with other women who also want to enrich their lives and the lives of those whom they love during this season. For those who now anticipate the blues, or loneliness, or frustration as the holiday season gets underway come spend a day with other women as we learn ways in which we can support and help one another.

"EVERYONE HAS A HARD TIME AT CHRISTMAS" is the title of a day workshop to be held on December 14 at the Farley Lodge on campus. The workshop is sponsored by the Days And Weekends Program of Everywoman's Center. Registrations may be made by dropping in at the Center, Goodell Hall, or by calling 545-0883.

For military service experience

Undergraduate veterans may receive extra credits

Veterans who attend UMass as regular undergraduate students may now, in most cases, receive some academic credit for their service experience.

Veterans who are applying for credit must submit a legible copy of their DD214 seperation paper with their student number written on the top to the Registrar's Office.

Students who have other than dishonorable active military service of six months to one full year, including the completion of basic or recruit training, may be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman level (two "military science" credits). Military service over one year will be accepted as meeting the requirements in ROTC at the freshman and sophomore levels (four "military science" credits).

A veteran who has been commissioned as an officer by completion of a program such as OCS is eligible for eight "advanced military science" credits. In addition, credit may be given to veterans who have attended certain military schools while in the service. If the veteran wishes to pursue this he must bring to the Registrar's Office a legible copy of this DD214 and Diplomas of Certificates of training for courses completed as proof of completion of such training. The Veteran who wishes to pursue this credit must also be present when the forms are turned in at the Registrar's Office so that he can interpret any unclear abbreviations or numerical codes and provide a course description if necessaary.

Credit may also be given for on the job training received in the service. However, the veteran must request the related academic department to examine-evaluate his knowledge or skills in that area.

Any veteran who wants to have his forms checked for possible academic credit should bring them to Bill Staton at the Registrar's Office any week day between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m.

UMass Ski Club races through active semester

The UMass SKI CLUB is off to a great start again this year with many exciting activities planned for the University Community. The membership drive was a tremendous success and so have subsequent meeting sign-ups resulting in approximately 550 members at the last count.

A trip was taken to the Boston ExpoWinter Ski Show and on November 18 the Ski Club hosted the Chevy Ski Show featuring an on-campus display of ski equipment and performances on the Ski Deck.

The next big event to be launched by the Ski Club will be the Annual Ski Sale and Show to be held in the WATTS Complex of the Campus Center on December 5, 6, and 7, to give the entire University Community te opportunity of outfitting themselves for the coming winter recreation season. There will be a tremendous array of new and used equipment to suit anyone's taste and ability.

According to Phil Saluter, the Ski Club President, there will be approximately $150,000 worth of equipment as well as a representation of Ski areas of New England. The prices will be very reasonable to suit the pocketbook as well.

The Ski Club is very optimistic that it will be in December--before the holidays--that they will be able to take their first Saturday Wine and Cheese Bus Trip to the north country to hit the slopes. During the intercession there will be trips to Sugarbush, Vermont; Park City, Utah; Chamonix, France; and a Special College Week at Sugarloaf, Maine. Evening bus trips will be going to Mount Tom and Berkshire East and again this year Berkshire East will be conducting a Ski Instructor's Course.

Amherst College presents program on Mid-East tensions tonight

An Amherst College Assembly to be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Johnson Chapel will discuss the topic: "Israel, the Palestinians and Prospects for Peace in the Middle East." The program is open to the general public at no charge.

Speakers for the evening will be Professor Donna Divine of Smith College and Professor Gordon Levin of Amherst. Both are experts on the Middle East and its problems.

Following the brief presentations members of the audience will be invited to comment or ask questions of the speakers. All points of view will be welcomed.

The Assembly has been arranged at the suggestion of the Religious Advisors of Amherst College, who include the Rev. Richard E. Koenig, Rabbi Yechoiael Lander, Father Joseph Quigley, the Reverend Charles Farrell and the Rev. James Clark, in order to facilitate considereation of the Middle East situation in the interest of peace and justice. The Reverend Richard Koenig will preside.

Typing service provides key solution

Do you need a paper typed or are you looking to do some typing? Term papers are coming due soon and not being able to type is a problem.

To help this situation, the Commuter Student Affairs Office, 229 Whitmore, has just started a Typists' Notebook to help students locate a typist and to help typists find work. Like the Babysitters-Housekeepers Notebook, the Typists' Notebook seeks to match people to jobs.

If you fit either category, typist or person seeking one, stop by the office from 8:30 - 5:00 daily, and take a look through the notebook. At this time, typists are particularly needed.

Applications available for students interested in 1975-76 college exchange opportunities

Applications are available from Nov. 29 until Feb. 14, 1975 in the Admissions Office, Whitmore Hall, for the undergraduates interested in going on exchange either semester next year.

The participating institutions for 1975-76 are: Bowling Green State Unviersity, California State College (Bakersfield), Illinois State University, Moorhead State College (Minn.), Morgan State College-(MD.), New Mexico State Univ., North Texas State Univ., Oregon State Univ., Rutgers College, Rutgers Univ., South Dakota State Univ., Towson State College, (MD), West Chester State College (PA), William Paterson College of N.J., Univ. of Alabama, Univ. of Alaska, Univ. of Delaware, Univ. of Hawaii (Hilo or Manoa), Univ. of Idaho, Univ. of Maine - (Fort Kent or Portland - Gorham), Univ. of Mass.-Amherst, Univ. of Montana, Univ. of Nevada, Reno, Univ. of Oregon, Univ. of South Florida, Univ. of Utah, University of Wisconsin - Green Bay.

The student applying for an exchange should be a sophomore. The exchange would be during his junior year. The student must have at least a 2.5 cumulative grade point average. Students who are interested in participating in the program next year must complete an application and return it to Mr. Loder, Office of the Registrar, no later than the deadline of Feb. 14, 1975. Final selections, including a list of alternatives, are expected to be completed by March 31, 1975.

Nursing honor society inducts 26 members

26 new members were inducted into Sigma Theta Tau, the national honor society of nursing. Those inducted included students, faculty, alumni, and local members of the nursing profession.

Dr. Ira Trail, dean of the Division of Nursing at UMass was the guest speaker at the induction.

The Beta Zeta Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau was established at UMass in April, 1972. Selection for membership in this honor society is in recognition of high scholarship, leadership qualities, and commitment to the ideals of the nursing profession.

Amherst hosts Radical Economics Conference

The Northeast Regional Conference of the Union for Radical Political Economics will be held in Amherst today through Saturday. Harry Magdoff, co-editor of Monthly Review, author, and teacher will speak on his recent trip to China at 8:00 p.m. Friday, in the Johnson Chapel on the Amherst College campus.

A coffee hour and registration for the conference will be on Saturday morning at Franklin Patterson Hall, Hampshire College, between 8:30 and 9:30; registration fees are $6.00 for high income persons and $3.00 for low income persons. Free day care service will be provided.

The Saturday sessions of the conference, also at Hampshire College, will be a 9:30, 1:00 and 3:15 and will include various topics on the current economic crisis, the political economy of health care, Marxist feminism, workers' control and industrial democracy, regional Third World political action groups, United States economic involvement in South Korea, the energy crisis, Marxist political theory, and working class culture.

Among those speaking on Saturday are Mike Albert, Zoe Best, Sam Bowles, Eli Chinoy, Jim Crotty, Ken Dolbeare, Jean Elshtain, Jane Flax, Laura Henze, Charles Johnson, Bertell Ollman, Harry Magdorr, Bill Tabb, Stanley Warner, and Alan Wolfe. Sunday morning will be reserved for informal workshops.

UMass Symphony Orchestra performs in Bowker tonight

Music Department events at UMass this week include a concert today by the University Symphony Orchestra at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The concert is open to the public without charge.

The hymn, "Ein Feste Burg ist unser Gott" (A Mighty Fortress is our God) will be the theme of the concert to be presented by the University symphony Orchestra.

Under the direction of Ronald Steele, the orchestra will perform Cantata No. 80, "Ein Feste Burg" by Bach, Symphony No. 5, "Reformation" by Felix Mendelssohn, and Fugue from Symphony No. 4 by Chrles Ives.

The soloists in the Bach cantata will be Dorothy Ornest, soprano, Phyllis Elhady, contralto, John Humphrey, tenor, and Rodney Gisick, bass. The chorale used by Bach in the cantata was also used by Mendelssohn in the finale of the Reformation Symphony.

The Fugure by Ives opens with Lowell Mason's hymn "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and includes portions of "All Hail the Power" and "Joy to the World".

The Student Committee for a National March Against Racism is holding an organizational meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in Rm. 904 of the Campus Center. All individuals and organizations interested in building the December 14th demonstration in the Amherst area, organizing transportation to Boston, and building publicity for the National Teach-In and March are urged to attend.

Revenue from Equal Rights bracelet supports passage of amendment

"The E.R.A. bracelet is again available," reports Connie Bunker of the Amherst League of Women Voters. "E.R.A. stands for the Equal Rights Amendment. The League is selling the bracelet to raise money to support passage of the constitutional amendment."

The bracelet is a band of nickel silver with the letters "E.R.A." pierced into it. It is purposely neutral in design so it can be worn by men and women. All monies raised from the sale of the bracelet are used for ratification activities in non-ratified states. A total of thirty-five states have passed the amendment which states: "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

"Only three more states are needed for passage and they are going to be the hardest," says Bunker, "they will need our help. Buying the bracelet will show our support. Over 67,000 bracelets have been sold nationwide. Many of the women's organizations as well as magazines are with us on this."

The bracelets are $3.09 (tax included) and can be ordered from Connie Bunker - 549-6159.

Which Bacardi for cola?

Bacardi dark rum's smooth, underplayed flavor is perfect with cola or for use like whiskey on the rocks, in highballs, Sours, Manhattans.

Sheriff Buckley speaks at SW seminar

Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley will be a featured guest speaker at tonight's meeting of the Project Ten Political Campaigns Seminar at 7:30 p.m. in Pierpont Hall.

Buckley won re-election to a second six-year term as sheriff last November 5th, running on a strong reform platform of stricter gun control in the Commonwealth. The Republican sheriff's appearance at the Seminar this evening, and an earlier speaking engagement at 12:15 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the UMass Student Union, are being sponsored by People vs. Handguns, a statewide gun control group.

Tonight's session in Pierpont Lounge will be the final meeting of the Seminar this semester. Seminar instructor Kenneth Mosakowski urges all participants to turn in their self-evaluations at tonight's meeting.

Freiburg program accepting faculty applications

The Freiburg Committee is now considering applications for the Freiburg Program Staff for 1975-76. This exchange program for both graduate and undergraduate students also offers opportunities for faculty to participate in the academic activities of the University of Freiburg.

The directorship, for a 12-month period, necessitates fluency in German; two one semester guest-professor positions generally demand ability to lecture in German (depending on specific department). Direct professorial exchanges may be worked out between UMass departments and their Freiburg counterparts.

For further information regarding the program and the possibility of teaching at Freiburg, call W.E. A. Bernhard, Chairman Freiburg Program, Herter 618 (5-0835) or Barbara Burn, I.P.O. Whitmore (6-2710). Applicants are requested to send a curriculum vita and a statement of their teaching interests to the above.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, DEC. 5 — Born today, you are one of those natural-born students who finds it a simple matter to learn anything required of him. For this reason, it may be that you will have difficulty discovering precisely what you want from life, it being probable that you will be fooled by the ease of any given thing into thinking you are truly interested in it. Make an effort to know yourself, to realize that simply because you are capable of learning a thing does not mean that you will also wish to incorporate it into your life's work.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Keep an open mind and you will be able to take advantage of suggestions whether they come from friends or enemies. Children speak well of you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Make an effort to understand the whys and wherefores of another's behavior. If you can fathom how he thinks, you can comprehend what he does.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Flexibility is the key-word today. Schedule your activities to take advantage of the moment; long-range planning is "out" for the time being.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You can accomplish more than usual on the employment scene today if you will take the time to discuss your plans with co-workers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Problems of long standing seem suddenly to be solving themselves. Allow another the time he needs to conclude things peaceably.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Younger family members may need your help more than they admit. Make an effort to read between the lines and you will do all involved a favor.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Think things through as carefully as possible. Don't expect another to be able to solve your problems for you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take care that the person you emulate is deserving of such imitation. It may be that you have looked only at one side of the matter.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — If you are clever enough to discover ways to encourage another to help himself, you also will encourage yourself. Discover hidden talents.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — This should be a successful day on every level. Career matters come to happy conclusions as you learn to swim with the current. Don't overdo.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Genuine accomplishment may be difficult to recognize amidst all the sham. Make an effort to see things as they are, not as you would like them to be.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Taking a leaf out of another's book may not be as admirable as you think. You would do well to check the outcome of another's efforts first.

McNally to Expos

Birds trade for Singleton

By BILL MADDEN
UPI Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS [UPI[- The Baltimore Orioles, moving boldly and swiftly to re-establish themselves as the Class of the American League East, acquired their second "Big Stick" in 24 hours Wednesday by sending former 20-game winner Dave McNally to the Montreal Expos for switch-hitting Ken Singleton in a five-player swap.

The Orioles, obviously concerned over their closest rival New York Yankees' acquisition of Bobby Bonds, added the 6-4, 27-year-old Singleton, a 23-homer, 103 RBI man two years ago, to their booty here that already included slugger Lee May from Houston a day earlier.

"We wanted bonds and the fact that we didn't get him made us realize we had to get someone else awfully quick," revealed Jim Russo, Orioles' Assistant General Manager.

"I don't have to tell you it was a great wrenching to trade McNally who has meant so much to the success of the Orioles," said Baltimore General Manager Frank Cashen. "But we needed more power and Singleton in right field can provide that."

According to the terms of Wednesday's deal, the Expos, who do not have an experienced lefthanded pitcher on their roster, get McNally, a 20-game winner in four of the last seven seasons, outfielder Rich Coggins and Minor League pitcher Bill Kirkpatrick. The Orioles, in addition to Singleton, obtained right handed fast-baller Mike Torrez, who will replace the 32-year-old McNally in their starting rotation.

The addition of Singleton, who tailed off in production this year to .276 with nine homers and 74 RBIs, gives the Orioles a nice blend of power and speed in their outfield which already includes Paul Blair and Don Baylor. Torrez, 15-8, was the co-leader in victories on the Montreal staff this year.

For the Expos, desperate for lefthanded pitching, the inclusion of McNally, 16-10 in 1974, was a must. Coggins, who slumped to .243 after a .319 Rookie Campaign in 1973, will add a stolen base threat to the Montreal lineup.

"It's not big secret that lefthanded pitching is our specific need at these meetings," confirmed Expo General Manager Jim Fanning. "McNally :the third $100,000 ballplayer to be dealt at the meetings) was the key for us, but Coggins will also be every day player in right field."

Allen declines offer; Braves retain optimism

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — The Atlanta Braves got a polite "turndown" from Dick Allen Wednesday, but club general manager Eddie Robinson still expressed optimism that the moody slugger would report for the 1975 season.

Allen, in a message left for Robinson at the winter meetings here, said:

"Received your message, however at this time I must decline. Thank you for the interest you have shown in me and I wish you continued success."

According to Robinson's interpretation of the message, the key phrase was "at this time" and the Braves' GM cited numerous reasons for Allen's initial turndown.

"All the phone calls and the conjecture I'm sure has got Dick a little confused as to what he wants to do right now," Robinson said.

"At any rate, we still want him, if he wants to play. It's still up to him."

Allen, baseball's highest paid player at $250,000 a year, "retired" unofficially from the Chicago White Sox last Sept. 14 and could possibly be holding out for a renogotiation of his contract.

The Adamsons: Determination

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

Anyone can tell that Bob and Ken Adamson are determined to win---to be the best in whatever they do---simply by talking to them. The Adamson brothers are different from the many athletes who want to win but never achieve greatness, because they are willing to work; an ingredient that separates the winners from the losers.

Last season, the physically-similar brothers bolstered the track team's jumping attack, along with Mike Geraghty and Pete Ryan.

Bob began jumping in junior high after Ken led the way. "I practiced and found out I could jump pretty well. It's something I can do well," said Bob, referring to his first years as a jumper. The older of the two brothers, Bob, notes a rivalry between Ken and him, as well as an air of competition among all the jumpers that helps improve individual efforts.

Both jumpers point out that coach Ken O'Brien's training techniques have paid off for them. "Our workouts, which include sprints, add endurance to the spring needed in jumping," commented Ken, who feels the indoor season will be no more than a continuation of last year's outdoor track schedule. Ken's best long jump has been 22'11 3-4", while his best triple jump has been 47'5". The sophomore leaper trained through the summer, as did Bob, and both are looking to improve their best individual performances.

Ken, who also runs the 60-yard dash during the indoor season and an occasional relay outdoors, feels that the jumpers can learn from each other. "We can help each other out, by checking each other to make sure of good takeoffs," added Ken.

Bob stated that aggressiveness plays a big part in jumping. "You have to make up your mind to be aggressive on the first three jumps in order to reach the finals. You have to have one of your best jumps at the start so you can relieve some of the pressure." He was a seventh place finisher in the long jump, at the IC4A's last spring.

Bob continued, "I'm ready for a good season," and the junior trackster said his goal for the upcoming schedule would be to place in the top three at the IC4A's. Set on qualifying for the Nationals, Bob believes that the first few meets will result in several exceptional performances because O'Brien is looking for entries in the Millrose Games, to be held in New York. "I think that will be a motivating factor early in the season." Providing competitors like the Adamson brothers, with a motivating force, may just make it that much tougher for opposing long and triple jumpers.

"Folly Floater" man hired

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] — Steve Hamilton, former "Folly Floater" relief specialist, rejoined his former New York Yankee manager Ralph Houk Wednesday at pitching coach of the Detroit Tigers.

Hamilton, who made use of his unorthodox Folly floater slow pitch while toiling as a relief ace with the Yankees, filled the vacancy on Houk's Tiger staff that was created when last season's pitching coach, Cot Deal, was fired in September.

The holdover Tiger coaches are Joe Schultz, Jim Hegan and Dick Tracewski.

Jumpers lead tracksters' romp over Rhody, 70-48

By SCOTT HAYES
Sports Staff

With its jumpers showing the way, the UMass indoor track team successfully opened the season by stopping Rhode Island 70-48 in an unusual night meet, Tuesday in Kingston.

The jumpers set two records at the URI facility, better known as "the bubble" and swept the triple jump to give the tracksters an early lead. Tony Pendleton, a state champion in the long jump during his senior year in high school, set a new long jump standard of 23 feet, bettering teammate Bob Adamson's jump of 22'11 3-4", recorded a year ago.

Pendleton has always been a good jumper, but due to a hamstring injury last year, the outstanding dashman didn't get many opportunities to jump. The team had a good group of jumpers last season, so there was no reason to take any chances overworking the sophomore speedster.

Pendleton, however, was not the only pleasant surprise for UMass coach Ken O'Brien. Also setting new records were standout Curt Stegerwald, Joe Martens and Mark Healy. Stegerwald, who was beaten in the 50-yard high hurdle trials, came back to capture first place in the finals and better the old record in doing so. Stegerwald was timed in 6.4, one tenth better than the previous mark, shared by Stegerwald, Jim Hennessey and Jim Graves. Martens, a high jumper and member of the UMass basketball team, cleared 6'7 1-4" to better the 1970 record held by Cal Carpenter by a foot. Martens doesn't practice with the track team, but rather gets all the work he needs jumping against the hoopsters. Healy set a precedent in the 600-yard run, lowering the freshman record in that event to 1:15.

Overall, everyone did well, with the freshmen receiving a boost by performing respectively in their first college meet. As usual, the distance runners were impressive, providing the only other sweep in the meet as Chris Farmer, Phil Broughton and Frank Noto combined to take the top three spots in the two-mile run. Farmer was first with a time of 9:23.4, just one tenth in front of his two teammates.

Tom Lonergan was the only weightman to place, taking second in the shotput with a throw of 47'4", the best ever for the muscular sophomore.

A new rule was put into effect at the meet. The rule erases the possibility of a false start, because should a false start occur, the runner is disqualified. Only one runner was affected by the change, and that was Pendleton of UMass, who jumped the gun in the 50-yard dash finals.

Jackson price at $2M; Sox offer $ for Bando

NEW ORLEANS [UPI] --Charlie Finley has turned down a legitimate $1 million offer for Reggie Jackson.

The offer was made by Ewing Kauffman, owner of the Kansas City Royals, and his wife.

When he heard the Kauffmans' bid, Finley said, "No, what I said was I'd take two million."

Later on Finley also said he would take the same sum for Sal Bando, his third baseman, and when that information was relayed to Boston General Manager Dick O'Connell, he thought a moment and said:

"We'd be interested in Sal Bando for that price. I'm completely serious."

Presumable, O'Connell then went to Red Sox' owner, Tom Yawkey, to see if the Red Sox owner felt the same way.

Steelers to key on Herron

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Pittsburgh Chuck Noll indicated Wednesday that the Steelers would attempt to blunt New England's running attack Sunday by keying on Mack Herron, the club's leading receiver and leading punt return man.

Herron, nicknamed the "Mighty Minimack," is second in rushing for New England and third in scoring. He gained 245 yards last Sunday in a losing cause at Oakland.

Quarterback Terry Bradshaw, who suffered bruised ribs in the Steelers' 13-10 loss to Houston, tested his throwing arm in practice Wednesday. Noll said Bradshaw would start the Patriots if he is healthy.

Rookie linebacker Jack Lambert missed Wednesday's practice because of a virus.

Celts, Cowens top LA 101-90

BOSTON [UPI] - Center Dave Cowens scored eight of his game-high 32 points in the final period Wednesday night as the Boston Celtics took control of a see-saw contest and crushed the Lost Angeles Lakers, 101-90.

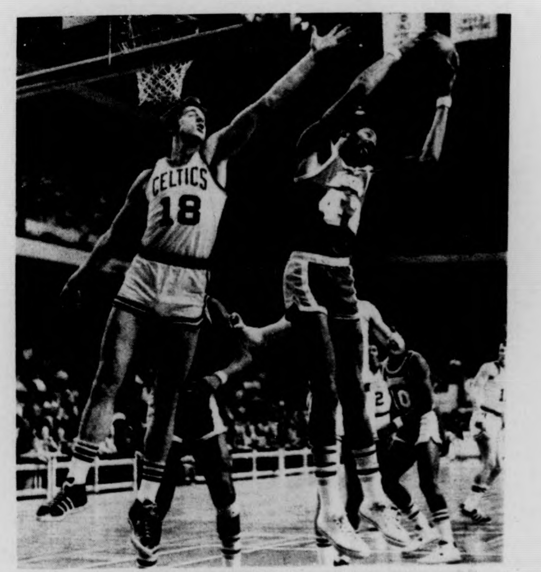
Cowens, in only his second start since returning from a foot injury, scored most of his baskets on long jump shots and hook shots in the lane over LA's 7-foot-1 Elmore Smith.

Cowens has ejected from the game, along with the Lakers' Kermit Washington, with 49 seconds remaining following an alteration under the Los Angeles basket.

Guard Lucius Allen led all Laker scorers with 24 points, despite being hampered by a sprained ankle.

Los Angeles emerged, leading 64-63, after three periods in which the lead had changed hands 13 times.

Don Chaney, who scored 15 points, put Boston ahead to stay after 1:16 of the final period, 70-68, with a pair of free throws.



CELTICS' DAVE COWENS (32 pts.) battles Lakers' Connie Hawkins in win last night. Redhead later battled Kermit Washington for real, and was ejected.

BOSTON — In gymnastics, a big win is usually by three or four points, so last night's 147-111 UMass opening meet victory over Boston State College was ridiculous.

The Minutemen completely outclassed Boston State although UMass' performance fell short of spectacular. The margin of victory was due to more a mediocre Boston State team than a superior UMass squad.

Being the first meet of the season, some of the minor breaks in performances by UMass gymnasts could be expected. Coach Tom Dunn said, "We've got a lot of work to do. If we'd gone against a team like Army today, we'd have gotten beaten."

Individually for UMass there were some good performances. Co-captains Bill Brouillet and Roy Johnson took the all-around honors, scoring 50.10 and 45.95 respectively. Brouillet's parallel bar and high bar performances were standouts, and Johnson also shined in the high bar and the long horse vault.

Brouillet, although satisfied with the win, said his own performance could have been better. "There's something about this gym," said the senior co-captain, "I didn't do well last time I competed here either, but that's no excuse."

In specialty areas still rings standout Peter Lusk gave what was probably the best individual effort of the night. He scored an 8.7 out of 10.0 in his routine and he would've been over 9.0 if he'd been able to hold his dismount. As he hit the floor he had to take steps to catch his balance — that cost him precious points.

Freshman Dave Kulakoff was the individual winner in the pommel horse with an 8.0 score. He also "hit his routine", as coach Dunn put it, in the parallel bar, and his score of 7.25 was somewhat harsh on the judges' part.

Paul Marks started in the all-around competition and his floor exercise and still rings performances were good. During the rings, though, he aggravated a back injury that he is still feeling the pains of, and he sat out the rest of the meet rather than risk further injury.

The Minutemen's strongest event scorewise was the long horse vault where their team score was 26.5. The other event scores were: floor exercise — 24.7; pommel horse — 22.15; still rings — 25.3; parallel bars — 24.2; and high bar — 24.5.

"We did a pretty good job getting through out routines," said coach Dunn after the romp. "Everybody made some minor form errors, though, and had some minor breaks in their routines. That's what we'll have to work a lot on...not missing anything."

FLYING FINISHES — Bill Brouillet would've been over 9.0 in his floor exercise had he not stepped out of bounds...If Peter Lusk had "stuck" his dismount he could have possibly had a 9.5 score.

...When UMass goes into their EIGL League competition the top four scorers will be counting in the event team totals, so depth is something the Minutemen will be striving to achieve. As assistant coach Bob Koenig said, "We need that fourth man to hit"...The Minutemen's next meet is in Boyden Auxiliary Gym next Tuesday, December 10, at 4 p.m. against Lowell Tech...Their first league meet is at home against Army a week from Saturday (Dec. 14) at 2 p.m.

Hoopsters travel to Cambridge; Silver, Sanders, Crimson hosts

By STEVE DECOSTA
Sports Staff

While the American public looks forward to owning gold, the UMass cagers are setting their sights on Silver.

No, not the precious metal, but a 6'7, 200 pound bruiser who dons a Crimson uniform and throws basketballs through a hoop.

First name, Lou, and last year he led Harvard in scoring with a 16.2 average and was named All-Ivy.

He's the top man the Minutemen will have to contend with tonight when they travel to Cambridge to take on the Crimson in an 8 o'clock start (WMUA, 7:50).

Harvard returns almost the same line-up that gave UMass a scare in last year's season opener, losing only two lettermen in Tony Jenkins and Ken Wolfe.

But the most important returnee is Tom Sanders, who is back for his second year as Crimson head coach.

Sanders instilled some pride in a rag-tag program, and though his record was a not too impressive (11-13), Satch did make good with the talent he had on hand.

And this year, Sanders brings back with him seven of last season's top nine players.

Len Adams and Bill Carey will probably join Silver up front, but sophomores Brian Banks and Walt Hines could also see a lot of action.

The Harvard backcourt will be manned by Arnie Needleman and Mike Griffin.

For the Crimson, it will be the second game of the season, as they knocked off Springfield 83-70 in their opener Monday night.

The Minutemen will be trying to overcome the after effects of an 87-59 loss to the University of North Carolina at Charlotte in their last outing. The 28-point difference was the worst defeat for a UMass team since a 90-49 pasting by the real North Carolina in the 1971 NIT.

UMass will need a more balanced scoring output if they hope to accomplish anything this season. So far, in two games, only two Minutemen are averaging in double figures.

John Murphy had games of 21 and 30 points to pace the squad, but the next player in line is Jim Town, who has tossed in ten per game.

The biggest disappointment so far has been the inability of Bill Endicott to find the mark. The senior guard has tallied only 13 points in the two games, which is below his per game mark of last year. Endicott is shooting a miserly 35 per cent from the floor, hitting five of fourteen shots.

After facing Harvard, the Minutemen come home to Curry Hicks, where they haven't lost since January 1973, to open the defense of their Yankee Conference title against URI on Saturday night.

B's late rise ties Habs 4-4

MONTREAL [UPI] — Johnny Bucyk and Carol Vadnais scored goals only 18 seconds apart in the final two minutes of play Wednesday night, enabling the Boston Bruins to gain a 4-4 tie against the Montreal Canadiens.

Bucyk's goal was his second of the final period and came just shortly after the Bruins had lifted their goalie for an extra forward. Only 64 seconds remained in the game when Bucyk notched his sixth goal of the season to tie the contest.

Vadnais' goal at 18:38 of the final stanza was his fourth of the campaign.

Until the final two minutes of play the Canadiens had the game well in hand thanks to a pair of goals by veteran defenseman Guy Lapointe.

Lapointe opened the scoring at 5:26 of the first period when he lifted a shot past Boston goalie Gilles Gilbert and Canadien teammate Guy Lafleur put Montreal ahead 2-0 when he scored his 17th goal just 52 seconds later while the teams were playing five a side.

Terry O'Reilly scored for the Bruins later in the same period as his weak shot trickled by Montreal netminder Ken Dryden but the Canadiens upped their advantage to 3-1 at 1:50 of the middle session when Lapointe got his second goal of the game even though the Canadiens were playing short-handed at the time.

Montreal got a power play goal to go ahead as Yvan Lambert scored after just 21 seconds of the final period but the Bruins cut their deficit to 4-2 Bucyk tallied a power play goal at 14:01 of the final session.

SPECIAL UPSIDEDOWN ISSUE!

The power of 20,000 of U·

Students As People

by B. J. Roche

French, BDIC, Phy. Ed, no matter what your major, sex, or musical tastes, one thing is probably certain: If you are a student at UMass, you have or have had a complaint about something around here. The Student Government seems unresponsive, the Collegian loses your letter to the editor, the Administration is no help, and there seems to be no alternative route to improving conditions. One student organization is working toward an alternative, and its success depends, to a large extent, upon the responsiveness of the student body.

The Student Organizing Project, (S.O.P.) began work last Spring on the organization of a Student Union on the UMass campus. The rationale for the union is that it provides an effective voice and bargaining power for students in dealing with the administration.

ministration. Its main power would be the fact that students would be solidly behind any demands made.

A question which has arisen is that of how much actual power the Union would possess, and whether or not a Union would settle into the complacency of the Student Senate. S.O.P. worker Nesta King replied. "It would be impossible, since the Union would be independent of the Administration." She pointed out that the SGA is an advisory body to the Administration, and possesses no real power. "If students had the right to collective bargaining, they would have a real source of power. A Union would be an autonomous organization."

The Project is involved in many other, activities, all relating to student interests. One undertaking is that of an investigation into the

In addition, the Project is working on a law suit contesting the residence requirement. "There is a strong indication that the residence requirement may be abolished by next fall," said Pepi. Tenants Union, on and off campus, appear to be another possiblity for the Project.

Another activity of the S.O.P. is the development of a Credit Union for students on campus. The Credit Union would provide loans and savings account services, at interest rates which would be slightly lower and higher, respectively, than commercial banks. The Credit Union will be a democratically run organization, with members making fundamental policy decisions.

The Charter is presently waiting for the approval of the Federal Government; it had Hope on the horizon?

·STUDENT·UNION·

The organization of the union is still in the planning stages; it is hoped by the Project that a founding conference will be held the weekend of November 23. Much of the planning will be left up to the students themselves, according to Alwin Schmidt, a worker for the Project. "Hopefully, several hundred people will take an interest, thus giving us a wide range of students and varied interests. There will also be representation on terms of special groups, for example, Spanish speaking students." Schmidt termed the need for a solid backing as being the most important factor in the organizing of the Union. Once organized, the Union's actions will be determined by its membership, possibly serving as a regulating body, holding hearings, making investigations, and making recommendations for action either through the SGA or directly to the Adon campus housing situation. November 4-8, the Project will be holding hearings in each of the residential areas. Present will be Project members, members of the administration, faculty members with special interests, as well as residence area directors.

"There is a general disgust on a large scale regarding housing, and it should be dealt with," said organizer John Pepi, adding that individual cases may be responded to. The intended effects of the hearings will be a concrete set of grievances to present to the administration, as well as pressure for some type of response.

Students are urged to attend the hearings in their areas, to air complaints and meet the Administrators who make the rules.

been examined by Atty. Bill Dorsch, who foresaw no major difficulties in getting it passed. Once approval is received, the Credit Union will become a member in a statewide group.

All of these projects represent a positive step forward for students; a student Union would provide a different, new kind of voice for the student body, and many people believe it's worth a try.

Next week, a look at Student Unions across the nation, as well as the Administration's views on the subject.

"Power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely."

Student power just play ?

by John Fisher, SOP Staff

The present relationship between students and the University is a classic example of the inherent instability of one-sided power relationships between two parties. On the surface such relationships at times may appear to be (and in fact may be) mutually beneficial, but this state is subject to abrupt and drastic change by the stronger party at any point.

Whether the relationship exists between two individuals or between large interest groups, the potential for injustice to the weaker party by the stronger party is almost directly related to the degree of power that the stronger party has over the weaker.

Even when the stronger party is highly benevolent and has the best of intentions toward the weaker party, there is no way for the weaker party to be assured that this situation will not change with the changing interests of the stronger party. Nor does power (or lack of power) imply morality on the part of either party. Having the strength of ten because one's heart is pure may work nicely for slaying dragons, but it clearly doesn't stand up well against a stronger adversary.

Of course it is probably never possible for any two parties to be totally equal in a given situation. Likewise there are cases where inequality may be temporarily beneficial and totally unavoidable, such as the relationship between a parent and a very young child, but I consider these more the exception than the rule.

And even in such cases there are limits to the extent of this benevolent inequality. To some extent most societies recognize this in laws (however poor) such as those concerning child abuse and incest. One of the essential struggles of "growing up" is almost always that of the parent being forced to recognize that the nature of the parent-child relationship is different at age 16 from what it was at age six.

It is interesting to note that the relationship between students and administrators was originally an extension of the parent-child relationship. The concept of "in loco parentis" was based on the assumption that administrators stood "in the place of parents," looking after the wellbeing of the immature students. The enfranchisement of 18 year olds dealt the final death blow to this outmoded concept.

We are continually surrounded with examples of unequal-power relationships: rich versus poor, white versus third world, men versus women, straight versus gay. While an impressive case could be made to suggest that the basic causes of these inequalities are ultimately economic, I do not propose to discuss that here and only note that the inequalities exist.

Cooling It

Quite often both parties assume that their unequal relationship is "the natural order of things," but this order clearly benefits one party (the stronger) more than it does the other.

Sooner or later, one party or the other will probably realize that something isn't quite right.

If it is the weaker party that comes to this realization first (and expecially if the weaker party understands that there is some real hope for change), all hell is likely to break loose. Sometimes the stronger party is totally surprised and hurt by the weaker party's ingratitude. ("What do these women want anyhow?" or "But I loved the soft sweet singing of the darkies.")

If it is the stronger party who realizes that the inequality between parties might not necessarily be mandated by God, the stronger party is faced with essentially two choices: to maintain the existing situation or to adapt to new patterns of relating. For the stronger party, the first choice is virtually always seen as preferable ("damned if I want to pick all that fucking cotton").

This reaction can take many forms. If the weaker party hasn't caught on yet, the stronger party can just "cool it" and not say anything. (A nice example of this tactic is the fact that students seem to have been the last to find out that mandatory dorm residence was illegal. Only when the Student Organizing Project and others raised the possibility of a challenge to this policy, did it become clear that the administration had been meaning to "speak to us about that.")

If cooling it doesn't work, the stronger party can either use massive repression (a risky thing since the weaker party might perceive itself as having nothing to lose and turn nasty) or it can try cooption ("Look here, we're both reasonable, instead of fighting to get real power why don't you play with this shiney new toy I've got for you."). The "toy" can be token positions on an advisory board or any other offer that will keep students busy and out of administrators' hair — so long as no real power is associated with the positions involved.

Cooption can sometimes be the result of good intentions on both sides, but as long as a substantial inequality exists, the toy can be taken away as soon as the stronger party feels things have quieted down.

And the situation isn't usually as simple as a two-party model might suggest. In real life there are almost always many parties involved in a given power relationship. Furthermore, parties with little power are likely to perceive the party just slightly better off than they as their oppressor when in reality their adversary may be someone who is less visible but who is directly oppressing both groups. In fact, any powerful group worth its salt can usually save itself all sorts of trouble by playing the disadvantaged off against each other — poor whites against poor blacks, for example.

Students as a Power Group

Here is where "student rights" come in.

Until the 1960's, the universities related to students in the role of parent-surrogates. With the doctrine of "in loco parentis", administrators were the guardians of students, in the place of parents. When the administration was benevolent, students were treated well. If the administration was hostile to students, it was too damn bad. You either put up with it or got the hell out. Considering the societal, economic, and parental pressures involved, neither choice was exactly optimum.

Student government existed, but at best it was an advisory group. If those in power liked an idea, fine. Otherwise forget it. After all, you could always stage a panty raid.

Gradually, students began to perceive themselves as an interest group and started to become rather unpleasant if their requests weren't responded to. They were noisy and disruptive — sometimes even destructive. But the disruption was that of the relatively powerless against relatively powerful. Since they had no mechanism for being recognized as a group with real rights (even though by this time "in loco parentis" was dead), they sometimes resorted to extreme tactics — a phenomenon which has been traditional for the powerless.

In response, administrators sometimes have tried repression, but generally they granted the students' basic demands and often threw in a touch of cooption. The "shiney new toys" students were given to play with were the inclusion of students on certain committees, the establishment of coed dormitories, and occasionally even going along with a few student ideas that administrators didn't like but felt they could live with.

However, the important thing to realize is that the basic power relationship between students and administrators was not changed. Unless students resorted to extreme disruptive tactics that were often harmful to all parties, they were not taken seriously. While they might gain on specific issues, they were subject to the goodwill of the administrations. All "student rights" were subject to cancellation without notice.

All one needs to do is to read the constitution of almost any student government to realize that it has no actual power. Legally student governments are subject to ultimate control by the trustees.

Furthermore, it must be realized that while students are a group with no real power, administrators are subject to pressure from groups that actually do have power. If forced to choose between the desires of a group of students who can only pass resolutions or a legislature that can cut one's budget, there is little question as to which group has real clout.

Finally, students are often guilty of assuming that their weak position is a "natural" one. (After all, how can we be as competant as those wonderful people who planned the Campus Center? Usually only the pentagon can get away with such efficiency as a more than-100 percent cost overrun.)

Another student problem has been the tendency to compete with one another for the few crumbs available to them. It is often easier, for example, for white students to argue against increased budgets for Third World groups than it is for all students to join together to gain a real base of power.

In short, "student power" is presently nonexistent. Until students develop an actual power base with real recognition, they will never be considered equals in negotiations with the administration or any other power group. This is why a student union (or call it anything else you want to, the concept is the same) that can enter into enforcable contracts is a necessity. The struggle to establish this right may be a long one, but is a prerequisite for students finally being able to have some real control over their lives — and to become a force that can aid others in similar struggles.

Unionism is not an issue. It is the issue that makes discussion of other issues possible.

Red Letters Day

3700 Miles & One Million Smiles

by Mike Kostek

The four trailer trucks roared down the salt flats in an eerie, timeless, apparently motionless fashion. There are no trees, no banks along the road. Only the salt flats stretch out beyond the pavement. The lone figure skating down the side of the road in front of them notices their coming. He braces for their passing, unaware that they are travelling at least thirty miles faster than he anticipates.

One million smiles along 3700 miles. That's what 26 year-old UMass junior David Letters listed as his objective when he set out last May (see "8 Wheels and 15 Credits," Below The Salt, 2 April, 1974) on a journey via roller skates across the United States. When Letters set out, the feat had never been accomplished. But Cliff Shaw, who had cross-skated Canada previously, set out a few weeks' time before Letters and made a 2800 mile trek in 77 days. "He went for the speed record.", says David. "I picked out the most interesting route. Shaw went on all the interstates."

The force of one trailer truck going 55 MPH on a highway is enough to knock you off your feet. The four trucks in Nevada were going faster than the 55 MPH speed limit. Much faster. Just how fast was impossible to tell, because with no trees or other points of reference, it becomes obvious how relative speed is.

"All across the country, every area has its own character and charm. It's a thrill to skate all day through forty miles of nothing but nine foot high corn stalks and then come to a town — bar, barbershop, gas station, store and church. That's the center of the area.

"Any bar I would skate into would be good for free drinks all night long."

With two backers, the Monument Federal Savings Bank and Eastern Engineers & Extruders, a recycling concern, David set out for San Francisco May 24. He had trained rigorously, and after a while, found his body to be the perfect machine. "I really got into my body to the point that I could skate sixty miles a day and be ready to party at night. Being outdoors skating all day was the highest high I've ever had. It was magnificent."

The first truck's turbulance spun the surprised Letters around. The second's blew him off his feet, spun him over in the air and flipped him on his back. David felt something very wrong with his right leg.

A friend drove along in a Volkswagen van, meeting him each night, when they camped at the side of the road. "I slept inside a motel only three nights. I took 500 photographs and made over 300 pages of notes.

"Anywhere along the way I wanted to visit I did. I went to Snake Canyon to see Evil Knevil's jump. A crazy, bizarre event. There was too much violence, too much mob control. It was a hustle, a pure hustle. I respect him for the hustle."

Before his injury, David had been going 40-60 miles a day, at an average of 8-9 MPH; his top day was 70 miles, and his top speed, was 38 MPH, clocked on one of the hills David stopped to savor several times on the way. On one of the hills, he got caught in a freak ice storm (he had walked up the hill in the sun with his shirt off). Coming down, the wind and the ice made it impossible to stop, and he rolled through a farmer's herd of cattle, thus disproving Roger Miller's axiom that "You can't roller skate in a buffalo herd."

Below The Salt photo by Bob Stevens

3700 miles and a million smiles. David Letters, the People's Skate.

There it was. Eighteen miles east of Wendover, Nevada, 123 miles from the nearest doctor, Letters' leg was messed up. The machine needed repair. When David got to the nearest doctor, in Salt Lake City, he was told the machine needed two months solid rest. "It was just about impossible for me to skate. My tendons and ligaments were in bad shape. But I couldn't quit then, after 3000 miles and with less than 700 to go. So I walked across Nevada." And California.

The main problems he found were cars and dogs. Besides his major accident, he was hit in the foot in Ohio by a car, and the motor vehicle presented him with a general problem all across the nation. "Out in the country, the people driving by were real friendly, asking if you wanted a ride and how you were doing. But I could always tell when I was within twenty miles of a city, as people in cars would yell at me, throw firecrackers, try to run me off the road."

David Letters is one of those people who exude life, making as much if not more love than they take. His articles, ranging from the beauty of the fall foliage to covering the New Africa House to reviews of Buddy Miles, graced the pages of the Collegian and Below The Salt last year. "My goal was to make people smile, a million of 'em. And I far exceeded that. I wanted to give people some good news to read about, and the people really responded. I got lots of encouraging letters. Practically every newspaper in the country carried my story. Just about everybody along the way was very enthusiastic."

So it was a great thrill for David when, last October, decked out in top hat, tuxedo and silver skates, he rolled across the Golden Gate Bridge. It was 133 days after he left Gloucester (88 days actual skating — David spend one-third of his time touring.)

Other people want to spread his story: all the Boston talk shows and some in New York; the Tonight and Tomorrow shows are interested, as well as various publishing concerns interested in a book and who speak of movie rights.

David will be back in school next semester. Physically, that is. "I learned more in those four and one-half months than I have in any classroom I've ever been in." David earned fifteen credits for his 133 day roll-stroll. "Would I go again? Give me backers and I'm gone. In a minute."

As regards the Roche

Dear Mr. Craig Roche:

In regards to your ridiculous article concerning the Commander Cody concert, if nothing else, you proved you know nothing of the Commander's music or even the courtesy some bands extend when they play at the university. I have seen C.C.L.P.A. numerous times in Boston, as well as down at the Cape, where there were at least 5,000 more people per concert than there were last Friday night. They knew before they arrived that there would be a maximum of 1,200 people and they sacrificed the almighty dollar to play here, a nice gesture on anyone's part these days. Your irritation at having to pay $4.00 is unrealistic. Did you expect them to pay you for the privilege of your review?

In regards to the concert itself, you seemed distressed that "The Commander" didn't take lead solo until midway through the concert, and then sang only several songs. Did it ever occur to you that in four albums Cody only sings three songs? If you want to see him sing more often, I suggest you visit him while he is in the shower. If you had read the back of any album, you would know that Billy C. Farlow is the lead singer, not Cody, and he was not "carrying the load" for Cody, but doing his job. The only sense I saw in your article was the praise for Hager and Stein. They are tremendous musicians.

And finally, how can you cut down their style of music or even the fact that many of the songs were not originals? You don't go to a concert if you don't like the band's music, you go because you like their music, and I'm sure the seven hundred people in attendance did enjoy the show.

Since you seem to think that the bands at the Blue Wall are on a par with Commander Cody I suggest that you limit your reviews to the bands at the Wall, a place where you obviously spend too much time as it is.

Michael Lowey

CRAIG ROCHE REPLIES

I'm glad that one person got their $4.00 worth. While I respect Mr. Lowey's opinion, I'm sure the two bands on campus this weekend, Fat and Little Fire, will give more for our money.

The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence
by Victor Marchetti and John D. Marks
Knopf publishers, N.Y. $8.95 398 pp.

reviewed by Frederic C. Weiss

As smooth as a novel and thrilling as a detective story, The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence is both compelling and frightening, because it is so real. Victor Marchetti, the main author of the book, served in the CIA for fourteen years, and the information that he decided to put into this book was so threatening to the CIA that they went to court to censore Marchetti's work.

Their attempts to seek "justice" through the Courts has given this book an ironic twist, and made it an even m › compelling book, because it serves to substantiate what Marchetti tries so hard to illustrate: The CIA is a top secret super-government, that is more than an intelligence seeking organization. It does more than find out what is going on in the world, it creates at least half the chaos that it tries so hard to find out about.

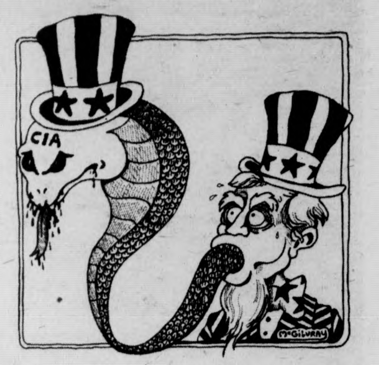
The book is filled with gaps in the text. Where the CIA court challenges were successful, Marchetti and his publisher Alfred A. Knopf, have left big gaps on the page, and printed simply in bold type, DELETED. Where the CIA tried and failed to get something censored, the publishers have printed the passage in bold type. This sets an eerie mood for reading this important book, and further illustrates what Daniel Ellsberg said at the University a few weeks ago, that the CIA is taking part in "murder around the world."

Marchetti's book takes you to Cuba where the CIA under rule of Allen Dulles decided to put together a group of exiled Cubans and invade Castro's Cuba. This CIA caper, known as the notorious Bay of Pigs travesty is the perfect example of the CIA setting policy and no simply finding out the proper intelligence to help the President set policy.

In telling both Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy about the plan to let Cuban "freedom fighters" liberate Cuba from Castro, Dulles pointed out that the Cuban people hated Castro and would immediately desert him if a "democratic" alternative was able to invade Cuba. Dulles interpreted the facts, and twisted them the way that he wanted to, because various intelligence networks within the CIA had told him that Castro's relative popularity among the Cuban population was impressive and not deteriorating in the least.

Despite these reports, Dulles, in the tradition of blind opposition to the myth of "monolithic communism" set out to deceive two Presidents into invading Cuba: an invasion leading to a major embarrassment to the Kennedy administration and Dulles' own subsequent "retirement".

Bookspaj



Marchetti's book illustrates numerous incidents of deception and intervention. Did you know that the CIA was fighting a secret war in Laos even before the Tonkin Gulf resolution gave us at least paper legitimacy to enter the tragic war in Vietnam? Did you know that the CIA was actively involved in infiltrating and exposing counter-military organizations in South America? Did you know that the CIA was involved in infiltrating and betraying counter-military organizations in North America?

Marchetti points out that "The cult is intent upon conducting the foreign affairs of the U.S. government without the awareness or participation of the people. It recognizes no role for a questioning legislature or an investigative press. Its adherents believe that only they have the right and the obligation to decide what is necessary to satisfy the national needs."

The CIA has taken Machiavelli's "The end justifies the means" and stretched it to the limits of hysteria. In the name of the "free world" we have overthrown freely elected governments, most recently in Chile. Marchetti's book gives a thorough documentation of what went on in the "top forty" committee, chaired by Henry Kissinger, and their decisions concerning Allende's Chile and how to sabotage it. As Jack Anderson exposed, and Marchetti elaborates, the CIA had tried to stop Allende's election by pouring great amounts of monety into the coffers of his opposition, and later using money to keep Allende's government from reaching any kind of real stability. Marchetti's book shows how the CIA worked with multinational corporations like IT&T to try to overthrow Allende, not because he was a threat to the American people, but rather a threat to the interests of IT&T.

Marchetti's book was censored enough to leave questions about how extensive CIA involvement in the murder of Allende was. However, it leaves no doubt that we were involved up to its neck.

The CIA has become a subversive "cloak and dagger" operation, unregulated and morally corrupt. When the CIA has followed its mandate, and worked exclusively to find out "what is going on" rather than determine "how to change things", they have been competent, sometimes excellent.

The CIA found out that the Russians were building missle bases in Cuba early enough to alert President Kennedy, and give him time to work out a policy in response. The CIA also recommended against heavy involvement in Vietnam.

However the CIA more often than not, has gotten involved in the deadly world of international intervention. Setting up phantom organizations to cover for them, the CIA has been involved all over the world spreading fear and leaving a trail of blood..all in the name of "freedom".

On the domestic front they have been involved in the infiltration of National Student Association, and have subsidized numerous Colleges and Universities throughout the nation. Their involvement in domestic spying is both a violation of their original charter and until recently (the Watergate fiasco brought on much unwanted publicity to their domestic intelligence game) a growing reality.

Marchetti's book is a must for anyone who cares about what is going on in this country, and what we are doing to the rest of the world. It is both a thriller and a citizen's handbook to better understand the horror's that are being committed in the name of preserving something once beautiful, but now becoming a myth — real freedom in the United States. This freedom has become conspicuously compromised by organizations such as the CIA, born under the paranoia of the Cold War, and growing throughout the tense realities of power politics.

This book will SOON be available in the University Bookstore.

Madness:

The Twisted Enzyme?

Madness and the Brain by Solomon H. Snyder, M.D. McGraw Hill $8.95 292PP

Reviewed by David Hoffman

Madness as a category of "abnormal" behavior is labeled as either manic-depressive psychosis or schizophrenia by the psychiatric priesthood. It is also the great questionmark of modern theories of consciousness.

To the central tradition of Freudian analysis madness is primarily psychological in nature, the result of severe emotional disturbance or anxiety within the unconscious. As advanced within the therapeutic work of R.D. Laing, this Freudian approach has become inverted into "antipsychiatry": madness is no longer seen as necessarily harmful, but is instead regarded as offering an epiphany from the "normal" world of the divided self and alienated institutions, especially the family.

Another approach is more sociological, suggesting that persons who exhibit behaviors regarded by the dominant culture as deviant may be punished by the diagnosis of madness. Such a view is found in the work of Thomas Szasz and Erving Goffman, who have argued that the act of labeling a person "sick" is to assign that person a social role. In both Laing and Szasz asylums are seen as "prisons."

The most influential approach, as measured by research funding, however, is, the psychiatric "medical model," which is itself a departure from Freudian orthodoxy. Inspired by new research evidence discovered within the past decade, the medical model appears to confirm earlier hunches that both manic-depressive psychosis and schizophrenia have all the markings of a hereditary disease, one passed from parent to offspring as an aberration of biology rather than as a psychic injury. Taking the place of various versions of the "devil theory" is, simply, the theory of the twisted enzyme.

Untwist the enzyme — or so the medical establishment promises — and the future of all persons afflicted with madness may be brighter. Replacing years of hospitalization or psychoanalysis, wherein cures have always been elusive, may be the simple removal of a toxic substance or the supply of a missing chemical as the means to reverse the disease.

The "dopamine theory" of schizophrenia, which is one expression of the medical model, has been given a lucid account in layman's language by a young neuropharmacologist at Johns Hopkins University, Solomon H. Snyder, in his study, Madness and the Brain (McGraw-Hill, 1974, $8.95). Snyder's thesis is that hallucinogenic and amphetamine drug experiences offer insights into the correct biochemical theory of emotional disturbance. Yet lest the reader be anxious that abstruse technical detail from neurochemistry and biological psychiatry clutter the pages of Snyder's text, have no fear. His writing is a model of the exposition of complicated material.

Although the principal burden of Snyder's analysis is to show how the basis of psychological disorder is metabolic, with the corresponding treatments serving to correct the biochemical deficiency or anomaly, he is alert to recognize that such illness, although organically caused, may in fact require treatments which are not solely organic but must also take into account matters of upbringing and environment. Indeed, as many researchers now recognize, there is no "either-or" nature-versus-nurture antithesis, since severe emotional disturbance may indeed provoke metabolic changes. The ticklish issue, however, is whether in all cases to prescribe the pharmacological treatment.

But even so, what remains undeniable is that the brain and the mind are now becoming understood as a single entity, on however rarefied a neurochemical basis. The elucidation of this perspective is Snyder's great accomplishment.

Film . . .

by JEFFREY POLMAN

Andy Warhol's Dracula
Written and directed by Paul Morrissey; produced by Andy Warhol starring Joe Dallesandro, Udo Kier

DIRECTIONS:

Owing to the controversial subject matter of this film, the following review will be split into two parts, one for those who are horror film fanatics, the other for those who wouldn't know the Exorcist from the Song of Bernadette. Please read the review which applies to you.

For those who know nothing about horror films and take life very seriously.

Andy Warhol's Dracula, the eventual "sequel" to his highly successful Frankenstein, is an orgy of sex and violence which leaves one's supper screaming for the nearest aisle.

Udo Kier, who plays Count Dracula in this total abortion of Bram Stoker's classic novel, should have rehearsed his lines before going on camera, and the same can be said for every other character in the movie. Joe Dallesandro, who plays the "sexy" farmhand, is more interested in copulation than pronunciation.

The story starts off well with Dracula and his assistant, Anton, journeying by car (this is 1907) in search for a virgin bride, but once the director lets the stars get carried away with their bloody and fleshy activities, everything just goes downhill.

All in all, Warhol's Dracula is a moviemaking disaster which is about as entertaining as watching Monday Night Football in black-and-white.

and unusual but innovative script, expert deliv-

But wait a minute. Why do all the characters sound like they're reading the lines off of their contact lenses? Why does Joe Dallesandro have a Brooklyn accent if this is Romania? I can't remember one instance throughout the entire film where two lines of dialogue were overlapped; even so, it is always possible that people in the 1900's talked like that.

The other explanation, and one that should be clearer if you take in a viewing of Andy Warhol's Frankenstein, is that director-writer Paul Morrisey (he spoke on campus last year, by the way) is actually interested in lampooning the horror movie, particularly the excessively violent Hammer releases of Great Britain, France, and Italy. He tries to fool us with his half-serious tone and his intricate technical devices, but once we see Dracula's assistant googie his eyes, once Dallesandro opens his mouth, and when we notice that the Count is taking a little too much time to upchuck all that non-virgin blood into the bathtub, any reaction other than a good old ordinary laugh signifies you are taking the film for something too much or too less than what it's worth.

...Our in residense schizophrenic reviewer looks at Dracula from two perspectives...

And now, For those who are horror film freaks

Andy Warhol's Dracula (renamed from the Italian title, Blood for Dracula) is a film whose initial reaction is to surprise the eye. Could this be a "B-movie", a low-budget, blood and gore Roger Cormanesque production? Here we see plush, elaborately-decorated Gothic interiors, Bergman-like cinematography, melodramatic characters (their faces coated from fang to fang with emotion), AWD 8 FROM ANDY WARHOL'S DRACULA. A BRYANSTON PICTURES RELEASE.

Morrissey knows how to inject subtle but outrageous humor into our brains, but isn't it about time filmmakers stopped making fun of specific genres and started seeking either originality within those genres or entirely new ones altogether? Other directors (i.e., Polanski, Friedkin, Roeg,) have shown that horror, or the schizophrenia of the human mind, can be dealt with intelligently and humanely. Morrissey, using his Gothic lighting, sets, and bizarre scripting, could pull off the same thing; but would he still be an underground filmmaker if he did? No, because underground filmmakers have to keep shocking their audiences.

This is why Morrissey takes raunchy sex and puts it on the same level with his guginol violence. Unfortunately, though, at the lush cinema complex in Springfield where I saw the film for three bills, the three biggest Dallesandro lesbian love scenes had been moronically edited out of the print. Once again, America's backwards morality shines through: snip the fornication but spare the amputation. Merry Christmas, dudes.

(Sire SASH-3705-2 time 77:40

There is a mess of stuff here, and in more ways than one. Pick hits! Stax o' wax! Top of the pops! Middle and late sixties nostalgia has crept slowly around (Endless Summer, Nuggets), but nothing $erious has hit yet. In the case of these three hefty double record sets, they represent too much quality to need any twinge of nostalgia to make it (unlike some farces such as Freddie & The Dreamers or The Kingsmen). There's big pieces of the rock on here.

Leading this cavalcade is a class collection of one of the finer Top Pop hitsters, the Turtles. Fans who followed faithfully through their misunderstood salad singles days as well as folk who discovered main Turtles Mark Volman and Howard Kaylan through their 1971-72 stint with Frank Zappa will both be satisfied as there are plenty of hits (both sappy & solid) and plenty of their peculiar boilermakers.

Collections of this type need three ingredients to go well:

1. Completeness. Happy Together Again! has all the hits.

2. Packaging (liner notes and photos). Snappy job here, with notes by Mark and Howie, two of the most lucid popsters ever. Cover could be better tho'.

3. Collector's Cuts. Good number here, with six unreleased tunes and a rare pseudonym single (the Dedications).

"HAPPY TOGETHER AGAIN!"

The Turtles, Jan and Dean, English Rock 1961 — 1969. Hot blasts from the past.

Shakiest item on this list is the peculiar case of Jan Berry and Dean O. Torrence. Sort of the poor man's Beach Boys, Jan and Dean usually come down to a love 'em or hate 'em split among listeners (ask Bob Estelle). Strictly out of the Surf City — Drag City — Two Girls For Every Boy City mode, their weaknesses crop up all over here: too cute lines, too easy fills and occasional lapses in brains, such as in "One Piece Topless", a 1964 ditty that is one of those three-year-old-in-her-topless-suit teases until we get to the punch and find Granny, 94, doing the Watusi on the golden sand. But if you listen too carzfully, you'll get hooked on the fun fun fun magic of Southern California, with "Dead Man's Cur)" reaching a splendor as good as anything else comparable.

1. Completeness. This overlaps a bit on the excellent Anthology album released in 1972 (10 cuts worth) and is in fact, United Artists' answer to Endless Summer, being all summer songs. We pick up some gems in the exchange ("Bucket T.", "Summer Means Fun") and lose lots of early hits ("Linda", "Jenny Lee").

2. Packaging. Not much besides some great surfing shots. The Anthology is the one to have here as it has pages and pages of history and an amazing chart detailing the facts for each song, including each's girlfriend and hot rod at the time.

3. Collector's cuts. Since Jan and Dean albums are pretty scarce nowadays, anything not on Anthology is rare. Thus there's ten rarities on here.

Wish as they might, there's no surfing to be found in England. And no cotton fields either. So they listened to a lot of our rockers and gave the music a new flavor by mixing pop and blues, produced with a substantial force and spirit that must be reckoned with and appreciated. To get the full impact, imagine how sterile and limited the rock scene would be without an England.

Sire issued an excellent and flawed Volume One of English Rock last year, flawed because there is so much to cover. Volume 2, taken in conjunction with One begins to close the idiosyncratic gaps, but on its own, it can't expect to speak for all the peaks.

1. Completeness. Trying to go from 1961 to 1969 is near impossible, but this is a good try, with music from The Beatles to Chad and Jeremy to Elton John, going from hits ("Bus Stop" by the Hollies) to the great obscurities ("Lazy Sunday" by the Small Faces).

2. Package. A bit skimpy, with good individual liner notes for each cut and a good Memory Maker pull out.

3. Collector's Cuts. Several gems on here. A 1966 Rod Stewart single, "Little Miss Understood", a 1969 Elton John single, "Lady Samantha", and the rare single of Julie Driscoll with Brian Auger and The Trinity doing Dylan's "This Wheel's On Fire". Also noteable are the British-only stars, the Cilla Blacks, the Sandi Shaws, the Billy J. Kramer and The Dakotas that we never heard over here but always saw in the Top 5 over there.

In Concert:
Chick Corea
with Return to Forever
Gary Burton Quartet +1
Sanderson Theater, Springfield
30 November

Gary Burton has a lot of talent, as evidenced by his recent releases in conjunction with composer-arranger Michael Gibbs, and, to a much lesser extent, by his performance Saturday at the Sanderson. Unfortunately, his own group sound hasn't changed since the days when he was working with the then unknown Larry Coryell, some five or six years back. The concpet of using electric instruments, no matter how subdued, to play jazz was then considered rather daring — these days, the combining of electric guitars with an instrument of such unique potential as a vibraharp effects the listener as not only limiting but downright irritating in places, particularly the lackluster group he's working with, old-timer Steve Swallow (bass) the exception.

Burton's one unaccompanied solo was the highlight of the performance, but he was right in thinking that an hour or more of solo vibes would be something of a strain on audience attention span. What he could do to update himself and indeed perhaps even make a name for himself again would be to follow the group Oregon's lead and get together with people who play other unusual acoustic instruments (oboe, say, and maybe a couple of strings, and piano) and work on creating a truly unique sound.

Chick Corea and Return to Forever are rapidly approaching the peak of their popularity, if they haven't reached it already. Of course the word 'peak' implies very definite directions: Straight up and straight down. The band has a very clear, usually tight and often somewhat complex sound, but is almost totally lacking in real musical guts and is very rapidly running out of ideas. They sound like the old Mahavishnu Orchestra run through the washing machine once too often. All of them, particularly Corea, have the habit of finding riffs they like and getting stuck on them; Corea's writing for the group tends that way too. Much, much too much funky filler.

Redeeming factors include bassist Stanley Clarke, who, although limited by the group's style, provided a lot of humor with his musical non-sequiturs (To hear Clarke in better circumstances try Illusion Suite by the Stanley Cowell Trio — ECM 1026). Also it must be said that they really do seem to enjoy what they do; that in itself is fun to watch, and the audience responded appropriately.

Like Gary Burton, Corea seems to do best on his own; his solo albums, Piano Improvisations Vol I and Vol II, show both imagination and real emotional depth. And strangely enough, Chick Corea and Gary Burton released a beautiful duet album not too long ago on ECM, called Crystal Silences. It's really a shame that they couldn't have played together here; it would probably have been the height of what was otherwise a somewhat unsatisfying evening.

HEART LIKE A WHEEL
LINDA RONSTADT
(Capitol ST 11358)
Total playing time: 32:23

Linda Ronstadt and her good new essence. Below The Salt sketch by Karen Miller.

Although Linda continues to do the same kinds of songs which she's done so frequently in the past, she's singing and interpreting with greater conviction and ease here than on her last couple of spotty outings. Good, solid vocals with strong backing throughout by some of the California heavies give this record the extra boost from tip to toe. Standouts include the rocking rollicking Phil Everly classic, "When Will I Be Loved" and a beautiful version of the James Taylor ballad, "You Can Close Your Eyes".

Heart Like A Wheel closes out Ronstadt's long career with Capitol on the good foot.

A "bordering on nookie-rock" B.

THIS IS THE MOODY BLUES — MOODY BLUES (Threshold 12-13 Total playing time : 94:19

The classic case of a group which outlived its usefulness, the Moodies had the fortune to become incredibly popular at the same time that their stagnation became unmistakable. At first, the Moody Blues showed flickerings of real innovation: They used a full orchestra on a "concept album" long before it was common, and were the first band to make extensive use of the mellotron. Moody Blues music was also spacey enough to be the fave-rave of many young and naive drug beginners.

But even in this group, a band in which every member was a songwriter, the sound rapidly became overly familiar, overly trite, and overly pretentious. Only an occasional "Ride My See-Saw", "Gypsy", "Question", or "Story In Your Eyes" or an interesting record jacket saved the group from total depths and despair.

This Is the Moody Blues is the disc which could replace all those dusty catalogue Moody albums, and lighten up the loads in those burdened record collections. Different mixes of some of 'em, but all the hits are here as well as a few misses and some other Moody memories. This is, this was, this am. Gone but not missed.

REEL TO REAL — LOVE (RSO SO 4804 Total playing time: 33:31

Expecting the kind of eclecticism which marked so much of Love leader Arthur Lee's earlier works, it's disappointing to find such a limited musical array as is evident here. Reel To Real is the first album by the newly formed Love, and Lee's first recording since his solo hamburger breath stinkfinger Vindicator of a couple years ago, a record which caused him to lose a good few of his ever dwindling loyalites. With a couple of exceptions (most notably, a lively reworked version of "Singing Cowboy"), Lee has gotten himself into a deep soul-rock-funk rut which doesn't do his usually sophisticated writing justice. Indicative of Lee's new direction is his choice to record a cover version of the million selling "Be Thankful For What You Got", a song which was overplayed by AM radio, and one to which Love's version adds little.

There's barely a trace of that old Forever Changes, Four Sail ingenuity.

THE JEWEL IN THE LOTUS
BENNIE MAUPIN
(ECM 1043)
Playing Time: 43:25

An album of potential which suffers mainly from lack of direction. At times this aimless quality gives a kind of shapeless beauty to the music, particularly on the title cut, but for the most part the album seems to be a collection of unfinished compositions and-or undeveloped ideas. Some of the ensemble pieces work well, though. Maupin plays reeds with a beautiful sense of tone and Herbie Hancock plays keyboards like his old non-commercial self. An interesting album (Now there's a discerning comment) but I'd say wait for the next one. B.

CHAPTER THREE — VIVA EMILIANO ZAPATA
GATO BARBIERI
(ABC ASD-9279

Repeated listenings changed my mind, but at first I didn't like the sound of Gato in a big band context. His big, earthy sound seemed out of place. But now I see the contrast as a completely successful union of emotions, and as a unique musical dimension. The album is a musical exposition of the Hegelian doctrine of thesis, antithesis and synthesis — an exciting synthesis.

The orchestra, arranged and conducted by Chico O'Farrill, includes impressive musicians like Randy Brecker, Grady Tate, Eddie Martinez, Ron Carter, Howard Johnson and fifteen other flavors.

The fervent lyricism of Gato's tenor sax, made famous in his scoring of Last Tango In Paris, is comparable in power only to Rahsaan Roland Kirk's version of "If I Loved You" on his Bright Moments LP, But Gato's style is continually persuasive, and if you let it, becomes downright infectious.

My two favorite cuts on the record reveal my weakness for songs whose beauty comes through via heart-breaking qualities of the melody. One is the album's opener, "Milonga Triste", a tangoish Argentine melody; the other is "Cuando Vuelva A Tu Lado", an old Latin bolero that was adapted into an American standard called "What A Difference A Day Makes".

The notes regarding the actual stereo reproduction and mix can be applied to the album's musical content: "When heard on any high-quality playback or broadcast system, it should provide an exceptional and provocative listening experience." Viva Gato Barbieri.

Kinks Koncert Kontained

by Mike K. Kostek

In Koncert:
The Kinks
Sanderson Theater, Springfield
29 November

One of the finest and in turn most distinctive aspects of the Kinks (aka Ray Davies) is their — his inability to be real show biz troopers with their 'act' down cold enough to be able to grind it out record after record, show after show. Above all, Davies has stubbornly remained human, pervious to all that goes on around him. He hasn't retreated to any pop star wonderland miasma of useless unreality. If Ray & Krew aren't feeling right on one night, they — he can't just force it. They'll play, and it will be measurably good, but it won't be from the heart. And the Kinks have to play from the heart to move it; they deal with too many real and varied emotions to fake it. They're not good enough in any single aspect to get along on blind skill.

Last Friday night in Springfield the audience served as enough of a negative force to keep the Kinks & Ray from catching fire. In the house of a little less than 2000, about a third seemed Kultists (at least as Kultist as you can get in Springfield, maybe knowing the words to "Celluloid Heroes"), a third somber walnuts sitting peacefully, and a third had apparently heard of the band before and were out for a good time. It took Ray a few songs to suss this, and where he had been putting odd little fillups and extravagant motions into his labors ("Still the greatest ass in show business!", he proclaimed to a silent house), he got nothing back in the way of appreciative recognition, and instead garnered plenty of abuse ("Take off your clothes!" urged some fun-loving patrons behind us, speaking to the female chorus.) Ray krawled into his Kink shell, acted a bit fey, a bit gay, a bit outrageous, all enough to win the night, but far from his limits.

The night was divided into two parts. One was a normal kurrent Kinks set of "successful and unsuccessful songs", mainly from the RCA days ("Alcohol", "Celluloid Heroes", etc.) with "Lola", "Victoria" and "You Really Got Me — All The Day And All Of The Night" for spice. By the time they reached "Alcohol", there was a definite change in Ray's weather. Where "Alcohol" is normally an extreme wreck of an epic with the front row ending up with booze-spattered laps, this eve saw a quite restrained story of the "slave to demon alcohol".

An intermission and Preservation was the concern. During the first numbers, the lovely "Morning Song" and "Daylight", problems in the sound system (evident, at least, half-way up the balcony which is where your intrepid correspondent was seated due to the Sanderson's 'sit where they ain't' plan for the working press. With this, we got to sit where no one else was. Not good.) became clear. Or is that unclear? There were usually a large number of Kinks on stage (fourteen at times) playing horns, bass, drums, guitar and keyboards, and singing in multi-voiced choirs. All of which too often came together in combinations the PA system found untransmittable, rendering the delicate mix into a thin roar. Which is a real shame, because in their individual spots, all elements of the band were in great form, shooting out their lines with wit and power. And saddest of all, the lyrics got tossed about, too often lost in the flood.

Davies' production of Preservation is interesting, seeing that it is fully three records in the home. A combination of lights, costumes, film backdrops and full use of the fourteen Kinks as characters does a reasonable good job. For reasons of time and space, the story is reduced to the struggle between Mr. Flash, the greedhead, corrupt current leader whose penchant is buying property cheaply through official force, demolishing the buildings on it and erecting ugly new concrete structures at treble the profits. A moralistic uprising led by the most upright Mr. Black ("Here comes that Black mutha" cried the folks behind us) occurs and Flash is deposed into another of the mindless Artificial Men of Black's scientifically perfect regime. And yes, Black's "Salvation Road" victory theme is the same as Flash's "Demolition" sound. Davies has eliminated almost entirely the interesting interjections of the Village Tramp, the only character in the production with some sort of rational alternative ground viewpoint. One of the subsequent weaknesses of this is that Ray is left playing only Flash and, at the end, Black, and therefore is off stage almost half the time as the others characters (Spivs, Floozies, Vicar, Housewives, Black's Do-Gooders) plot Flash's fate. The stand-ins are tolerable, but they aren't the same. Not enough Heart.

The clever slants of Ray Davies and The Kinks warmed the Sanderson last Friday.

The story was told with projected titles, and slides helped outline each song's portent. Especially effective were a series of turn of the century nudes during "Shephards Of The Nation", a number of amazingly fetching old photos of poor children during a new number called "Slum Kids" (which took the place of "Second-Hand Car Spiv"), and films of mindless sorts during the "Artificial Man" spot were of gleeful Communist Chinese and astronaut-worshipping New Yorkers. It was also quite kinky to see Dave Davies, Dalton, Avory, Gosling and the horn players dressed as Flash's henchmen a la the cover of Preservation Act 2, playing away during Flash's reign, then donning Black's black military garb and Artificial Man masks when the Black mutha rules. Ray comes out as Black, announces the new purity is in effect, and, unfortunately, there will be a curfew and rationing. Effective immediately. "Fuck you!" cried the put-upon folks behind us, who obviously yearned to live free.

The best songs on stage were the best on the records. "Daylight", "He's Evil", "Demolition", and "Salvation Road" were all quite powerful, and "Flash's Dream (The Final Elbow)" was the best piece of theater. During this, Flash is awakened by his soul and appraised of his sins and the coming storm. The lights and music created lovely flashbacks and shadows of the future.

Preservation is a play that needs exploration and forceful steps made in its presentation. The material isn't good enough to stand on its own, and a live show has great potential in flushing out the karacters who emerge so flat on the records. Five minutes of Davies sputtering and leching as Flash did more to define Flash's character than twenty listenings disc-wise. And this is where the line between goodness and greatness must be crossed. Davies can do it, but this normally shy individual must be moved on stage into becoming the human swamped by earnestness who penned the heart-felt lyrics against the greed of Mr. Flash and the pompous sterility of Mr. Black. I'll bet in Boston, a true Kultist town, they knocked 'em dead.

MIXED BAG II — RICHIE HAVENS (Stormy Forest SFS 6201)

This is only the latest in a string of mediocre albums from a major folk-rock artist of the late sixties who has lost spark and direction in the musical non-direction of the seventies.

Havens renders creditable versions of eight songs by other writers and lyricists, including Dave Mason, Neil Young and Paul McCartney. He does an unusual piano and harp treatment of Dylan's "Sad-Eyed Lady of the Lowlands" and Curtis Mayfield's mellow "The Makings of You".

In the "back-up musicians we've heard before department", Jeremy Steig plays flute on Haven's "OOh Child". The original, written by Stan Vincent, was a huge top-40 success (if you can call it that) by the Five Stairsteps.

If you like Richie Havens you'll probably like this album. It's nothing new. But if you want to buy a single album find a copy of the old Verve-Forecast release, Mixed Bag by Havens. It's his best yet.

GOT TO FIND A WAY
CURTIS MAYFIELD
(Curtom CRS-8604)
time 33:51

Curtis has been lost ever since the smash success of Superfly, producing two duds in the interim (Back To The World, Sweet Exorcist). Got To Find A Way is more of the same along the dud lines.

Not to imply these duds were bad. They were well-performed, but they lacked distinction and significance. Nothing on this record has the trim style of the Superfly hits or the beauty of one of his old Impressions ballads. Six cuts on an album? Average time of each over 5 minutes? Drowned!

A 'still got to find a way' C-.

R. CRUMB & THE CHEAP SUIT SERENADERS
BLUE GOOSE RECORDS

IF YOU DON'T KNOW WHO R. CRUMB IS - YOU CERTAINLY MUST HAVE HAD YOUR HEAD IN A HOLE DURING THE BIG "REVOLUTION". YOU REMEMBER THE BIG "REVOLUTION" DON'T YOU? PROTESTS AND ANTI-ESTABLISHMENT RAH-RAH? WELL, REMEMBER ZAP COMIX? THE REALLY OUTRAGEOUS "UNDERGROUND" CARTOONS? MR. NATURAL? FLAKEY FLOONT? SALTY DOG SAM AND JOE BLOW? WELL, R. CRUMB IS THE GUY WHO DREW ALL THAT.

ANYWAY - THAT WAS IN THE PAST. CRUMB HAS MELLOWED OUT AND IS INTO MAKING MUSIC THESE DAYS. NOT ROCK AND ROLL OR JAZZ OR ANY LABEL I CAN THINK OF. HE HAS RESURRECTED A FORM OF MUSIC THAT NEVER REALLY WAS TAKEN SERIOUSLY. ONE EXAMPLE THAT MOST CAN IDENTIFY WITH IS HIS "LITTLE RASCALS MEDLEY." AND THAT'S WHAT IT'S LIKE... ZANY BACKGROUND MUSIC FROM OLD, OLD MOVIE SERIALS. AND IT'S GREAT!! AN EXCELANT COCAINE ALBUM! IT PUTS YOU IN ANOTHER ZONE... YOU'RE 6 YRS OLD AGAIN AND SITTING IN FRONT OF THE TUBE ON SATURDAY MORNING EATING PEANUT BUTTER.

ONE BUMMER: YOU MAY NOT BE ABLE TO LOCATE THIS ALBUM IN THE STORES. OH WELL, — DON McGILURAY

SORCERY
JACK DEJOHNETTE
(prestige P-10081)
31:04

Drummer Jack DeJohnette's first solo effort is fraught with inconsistancies, whatever that means. The album revolves mainly around DeJohnette, bassist Dave Holland and a loose aggregation of soloists, and was recorded mostly in somebody's living room. This makes for a very sparse sound, perhaps too sparse in places, even with DeJohnette doubling up, and fairly well, on keyboards. However, the combined inventiveness of DeJohnette and Holland on their respective instruments make worthwhile listening and "The Reverend King Suite", inspired by John Coltrane's composition, is an honest, moving tribute. A little more production and a lot more planning next time, please. (B)

BLUEJEANS & MOONBEAMS
CAPTAIN BEEFHEART
(Mercury SRM 1-1018)
time 34:24

The Captain says his avant-garde days are over now. The Captain says he wants to "Hug the world" now. The Captain is trying to build an animal preserve in Northern California. When last heard, Beefheart, who has long been one of the most engaging, undeniably brilliant musicians in the world, had slipped to his nadir in the form of Unconditionally Guaranteed, a weak album with thin songs and matching performances.

Captain Beefheart is up to snuff, but is that enough?

Bluejeans and Moonbeans is a quantum step over that, being superior in every phase of production. What this album does is establish Beefheart as a highly competent rocker, rocking and rolling in his distinctively strong style.

"Party Of Special Things To Do" is the closest he and The Magic Band (all newcomers, most of whom played on his tour earlier this year) get to the intense glories of yesteryear. "Same Old Blues" is a J.J. Cale song fortified by one of Beefheart's 7½ octaves in his voice. While some of the music on here sloshes aimlessly, the band has improved markedly, especially guitarist Dean Smith.

The overall tone on here is a mellow one, in the style of the lighter moments of Clear Spot or Strictly Personal. The most effective songs Beefheart (Don Van Vliet) is writing now are hypnotic, loping lullers like "Observatory Crest", "Bluejeans and Moonbeams" and, from the last record, "Upon The My-O-My".

Satisfied with Captain Beefheart's playing "competent rock and roll?" Not on your patoot, but like Don said way back in 1966 in "Electricity", "Friends don't mind just how you grow". Give the Cap time, he'll have them sun zoom sparking before long.

A 'he'll always be the Good Captain' B-.
—Mike 'three years on' Kostek

ASLEEP AT THE WHEEL (Epic KE 33097)

Wheel is yet another Texas group that Kostek wants me to tell you about, so I will. Their music is often times similar to Dan Hicks' without the bite that Hicks and the Licks usually put in a song. Their roots are in Texas swing from the 1940's, best exemplified by Bob Wills and the Texas Playboys.

"Choo Choo Ch'Boogie" opens the album and is a good tune to start the day with, as someone at MUA knows, I hear it often there. "Jumpin' at the Woodside," a Count Basie tune, "I'm Gonna Be a Wheel Someday," and "Don't Ask Me Why I'm Going to Texas" are other roses among such thorns as "The Kind of Love I Can't Forget", and "Our Names Aren't Mentioned Together Anymore". Perhaps it's just the singing on these cuts, done by Chris O'Connell who sounds like all the rest of the women country singers none of us can tell apart. One song, "Dead Man" is so ludicrous, we all should hear it, but only once. Seen live, I can bet these people would go over well, especially in a drinking atmosphere. That presumes that the band would have enough sense to stay away from the leaden melodies and banal lyrics found in half the songs on this album.

An average white C.

Freedom of the Press

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS ..... by Luis Manuel Medina
Photographs by Bill Howell

Martin Miller - Chairperson Acadeic Affairs Committee - Student Government Association
Member of the Committee that publishes the Course Description Guide.

"You have to look at the press on a community level, anybody that has something to say should have access to the press. The press should serve the community. The press should be free from bureacratic control. The Collegian should be considered like a government unit. In the sense that as a policy, it doesn't direct the type of information that gets dispersed to the community, but provide access, a vehicle for the community to confront itself."

Kathy Sheehan - Collegian's Assistant News Editor

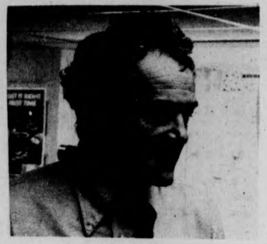
"The First Amendment Freedom of the Press singles out newspersons as responsible members of our government.

Along the line of the Newspaper Shield Laws, I think the First Amendment protects journalists from revealing confidential sources. In order to truly have freedom of the press, there should be a Federal Newspaper Shield Law."

Robert W. Blosson - Amherst Record

Amherst and the Press

"Amherst is an unusual community, with very liberal town meetings and a clean government very open to the newspapers. Freedom of the press should be total, we can not censor what anyone wants to say. The press has a lot of responsibility."



EQUAL TIME SPACE BILL

"I don't think that politicians should have the same right to the same space."

Bill Parent - Collegian's Assistant Executive Editor.

"I view Freedom of the Press as the greatest safety valve in any society calling itself democratic. If it weren't for the press, we may never have learned of the wrongdoing of the past administration."

ON CAMPUS

"I think that campus newspapers should give the opportunity for students to freely exercise themselves journalistically while always keeping in mind responsibility and fairness toward the University."

Michael Shor - Advertising Consultant, Amherst Record

"The newspaper's advertising performs a definite service to the readers; an example is its providing a directory of businesses, making the purchases of goods and services easily accessible. Free press is certainly necessary both within our community and elsewhere without which there would be a definite gap in media services."

Bill Ballou - Former Collegian News and Sports Editor. Amherst Record Sport Editor.

"Freedom of the Press in the sense that is used daily is freedom from economical control rather than government control. The majority of the papers in this country operate to make a profit.

The British and Canadians have presses freer than ours. The newspaper job is not to make the people happier but to inform."

A SELF — CHARACTERIZATION

I was an offering on a plate
By choice
All took, enjoying, they took more
No one gave
My way of life was sincere
But simple
Trying to reach out, I was drained
Near completely
I clutched all that was left
As always
They denied, after their repast
All bellies full
The parasites were removed for awhile
Watching
Building myself up was a trying task
Of time
Only to be attached once again
Unending cycle
To stop it, I must die inside
Becoming hollow
When I am empty, they will pass me by Others are
Like trickling water, more of the same
Blank feeling
I am deep in my well now
Far from danger
But the sun's rays cannot reach me
Down so low
While I am slowly sucked to the heavens
Through a straw
I have lost the marrow of my self
My soul
The wall I have built around me
So thick
Is the mast I hide behind
Pseudo — protected
When only a drop of me remains
What then?
I become only molecules of dust
Neatly
Contained in my stone shell
Stagnant
Which is all I ever was Anyway.

End of the Fall

Cold night bones creaking in first morning consciousness,
Chilling before flesh freezes in a winter storm.
Dark-white shadows rule days of soon-to-be,
Turn people off from touching in rush or play tasting colors on forms.
Shadows without forms penetrate homes of human types here in and out
For a moment long as days into months...
Months into fears.

Weekends in Review

Repiled by Paul Kontrimas

AIRPORT '75. No better, no worse than Airport '72. Starts this weekend at the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. ++

BUTCH CASSIDY AND THE SUNDANCE KID. The electric combination of Paul Newman and Robert Redford nudge this movie along its zany plot. An entertaining movie to see, and one of the best bets of this weekend's campus film offerings. At the Mahar, Fri., at 7, 9, and 11. +++

FORBIDDEN GAMES. Saturday, at Merrill Auditorium, Amherst College 7 and 9:15.

FIRESIGN FUNNIES. Andy, where are you? Thursday, at the SUB, 7 and 9. Three short Firesign Filmic Freakouts including Martian Space Party, T.V. or not T.V. and Love Is Hard To Get, featuring Peter Bergman as Nazi Goreng. ++++

THE GAMBLER. James Caan stuck in a downward spiral of life as a compulsive gambler. Directed by Karel Relfz. At the Academy of Music. +++

GONE WITH THE WIND. The old classic which was stirred up the legions of decency in the Thirties. The big breakthrough in color film. It won a slew of Oscars. Mt. Farms 4. ++++

GROOVE TUBE. Much more good than bad, this film begins to explore the universe of satire easily aimed at the boob tube. Writer-director Ken Shapiro fashions inventive skits dealing mostly with unreal TV turnabouts that interestingly end with the 'what would happen if you acted out a movie in real life' skit. Get it from both sides. Mt. Farms 4. ++++

THE IMMORTAL MR. TEAS AND THE WILD WILD WEST. According to one of the few people in this office who has seen it, this moldy piece of celluloid claims that it deals with a man who obtains x-ray glasses and dies. Reputed to be one of the earliest soft core porn movies. At the Campus Cinema with The Wild Wild West.

JUGGERNAUT. "A brilliant British madman loads a 1200-passenger British ocean liner with seven bombs. Object: ransom. Directed by Richard Lester as a clockwork thriller, the clockwork being the defusing of the bombs by Richard Harris." Now playing at the Showcase, W. Springfield and MF4. ++

PSYCHO. One of Hitchcock's MORE GRIPPP-PPppp. Playing at Merrill Center, at Amherst College, Sunday at 8 and 10.

KING OF HEARTS. One of the most overrated and deceptive films of all time. This is a sentimental, unreal 'isn't life too bad' oversimplification that does all the thinking for you. You don't have to do a thing but sympathize. At the Campus Cinema. ++

KLANSMEN. Tense social intercourse between an Alabama town sheriff and part-time Ku Klux Klansman (played by Lee Marvin) and an eccentric town aristocrat and part-time dance instructor at Arthur Murray Studios (portrayed by Richard Burton). A timely vision. +++

LAST TANGO IN PARIS. Yes, it were a good film long long ago, before all the censor's cuts and edits obliterated the thing. The last occassion I viewed the butchery, it made absolutely no sense, and edited down to all of 55 minutes. Gato Barbieri wrote the soundtrack. ++++

THE LONGEST YARD. An odd mix of prison melodrama and football myths, a tricky maneuver but a clear touchdown under Robert Aldrich's brutal and brutally funny direction. With Burt Reynolds macho-perfect. Now playing at the Showcase in W. Springfield. ++

MR. MAGOO'S CHRISTMAS CAROL. Nice adaptation of The Christmas Carol into cartoon form, as far as contemporary cartoon techniques allow. Jim Backus speaks for the dwarfish Mr. Magoo. At Smith College's Wright Hall, Sat. at 2 p.m. ++

REPULSION. Early Roman Polanski, and a strange treat. At Amherst College's Merrill Auditorium. Sunday at 8 and 10. ++++

SLEEPER. Woody goes way ahead, but leaves something behind. It's still funnier than most, but he relies too much on his abilities as a slapstick actist to compare favorably with his others. SUB Sunday at 7 and 9:30. ++++

TAMARIND SEED. Love story plunked down against the backround of A Cold War Julie Andrews is one of the lovers, and at times, tinges the mystery and intrigue with her chastity. At the Calvin Cinema. +++

TAKING OF PELHAM, AND A ONE, UND A TWO, UND A THREE. Technology takes off in the form of a high-jacked New York City subway car. A film well done, depicting the helpless New Yorker and their city's provocative sense of comedy. Walter Matthau and Martin Balsam. At the Showcase, in W. Springfield. +++

TRIAL OF BILLY JACK. "Naivete merchandised and marketed with the not-so-innocent vengeance that is associated with religious movements that take leases on places like the Houston Astrodome." +

LOST HORIZON. This is the original Frank Capra production, made in 1937, of James Hilton's novel of Shangri-La. The opening sequence is regarded as one of the best photographed in cinema history. Fri., Dec. 6 in Thompson 104; 7:00, 9:15, and 11:30.

Stickmen get stuck

By Luke Lingus
Sports Staff

Frits Lubejob loped through the sieve-like defense of the University of Massachusetts Varsity Lacrosse team with 1:58 left to play and slammed the winning slug past the beleagured UMie netminder Jock O'Mindlessone, giving the Crackerjacks from San Clemente Senior High School a 15-1 victory. It was a tough battle all the way, but the Redmen found the going too rough in the minefield that those bastards from San Clemente laid all over the field. The result was that while the Crackerjacks knew where the nines were, the Redmen didn't, and nine of them were blown into hamburger. "They will be out for the remainder of the season", Coach Garble announced at the mass funeral yesterday morning.

Outside of this minor mishap, the Redmen ran into a series of haymakers and were threshed by the fiery Crackerjack defensemen. Everytime one of our men had offensive visions and wasn't blown up by a landmine, a stick would come out of the sky and fling his ear toward our net. And the referees were counting these as tallies and valid scores. Not since the Indians invented this brutal sport of Lacrosse has a game been played with so much fire. Bits of limbs, kidneys, and other flesh littered the field. Our Redmen did much to disgrace their creative forebears.

Coach Garble called it our worst effort of the year. "How are we gonna get to the Nationals if we can't even beat a fuckin high school team. We've got a lot of pussies on this team, and you can bet your bippy that some of them will be off the team and back to the books, before our next game against Tallahassee Tech.

When asked what specifically went wrong, Garble replied: "No Offense, No Defense. No Fucking Minesweepers! Kowalski shouldda put his head down and blowed up all the mines. With his thick skull, he nevah would have felt it."

Actually there were some bright spots for the Redmen. Bruce "Sweet Hips" Shampoo showed some nifty footwork as he swiveled thru the Crackerjacks here and there. In fact, the only Redmen score came as a result of a Shampoo bump followed by a wicked grind that sent the Cracker goalie to the ground screaming and clutching his crotch. Shampoo just kissed it and rolled her home. Lamont Lump also displayed some fine potential in the way he dodged flying bits of ears and human pulp. In fact Lamont even got his stick into the action two times. One by accident the ball richocheted off of his stick into the Redmen net, and on the other he decapitated an especially obnoxious Crackerjack who had started a cookout in midfield with all the loose flesh. It was a scene from Fellini.

"I dunno wha happened," moaned the hapless Kowalski. "It wa wuz like in Nam. Ya nevah could tell when de fuckers were gonna frag ya. We gotta start and rebuild so's we can be in dem dere nashunals in Dunghill, New Jersey next month."

Whether to Dunghill or just to the Infirmary, the Redmen are certainly having an interesting season, thus far. More interesting certainly than this ridiculous sports page.

Afternoon Sports Fans! Isn't it great to be alive and a jock at UMass. Yessiree Bop! It certainly is.

Football is a GGREAEATTT GAME!!!! Everybody should play football. The hell with the books — it's football that is the reason that we're here. As far as I can see it, we are students here at the University for several important reasons.

1. To pay an Athletic Fee so the great and glorious Athletic Department can spend our money to aid Football including money for oranges before the big games and senoritas (virgins all-nine times over) after.
2. To buy (thru our fee) tickets for every seat at all the home football games, and to make sure that most of us don't go so that they can resell our tickets to our great and good alumni, to which we are all indebted for our opportunity to pursue ourselves. But some of us have to show up and yell and scream and get drunk and act like assholes in the great traditions of school spirit, fight songs and nookie in the stands.
3. To act as a shield pretending that we are really students at a large University so that football players can say they go to one, and are students too. If we all make like we're going to classes, no one is gonna notice a couple more oversized hulks dozing with the rest in the back. Who'll suspect that outside of figuring out their own statistics and reading the Great and Good (holy be thy name) Collegian Sports Page, these brutes couldn't make it past a Mongolian Idiocy Primer.
4. To become alumni when we graduate so that we can donate money to the football team, argue with the bum next door who went to B.C., and slap each others asses when we beat power-house Vermont. Not to mention Homecoming Game where we yell and scream and get drunk and act like assholes in the great traditions of school spirit, fight songs and nookie in the stands.

These things are not enough. We must do more to make football an integral part of the student's life. The University should not accept anybody who can't run a decent square out, or kick a ball thirty yards. Football should be made into a University Core Requirement for all men and Cheerleading for the girls, requiring eight semesters to fulfill. Calisthenics must be attended by all, every morning at six down by the stadium, and spring drills should be run for two weeks in April for every student. If everyone knew the playbook cold, then any team coming to Amherst would be playing the entire student body. Why everybody could come in and block. UMass could then rally kick ass. UMass would be mentioned in the same breath as Ohio State, Penn State and State Penn. If we do all of these things and more, then maybe Coach MacPherman can finally lead us to at least one fuckin win.

Remember what Rocky says:

When its fourth and forty - Don't fool around - Drop back and PUNT!!! for chrissakes.

Sirica rules Nixon testimony 'not essential'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica ruled yesterday that former President Richard M. Nixon will not testify in any form at the Watergate cover-up trial because his testimony is "not essential" and would be viewed with suspicion.

Sirica ordered the trial of five former Nixon aides to proceed without interruption, meaning it will likely be completed by Christmas.

In summary, Sirica said the ailing Nixon's testimony would merely duplicate that available from other witnesses and would have to be viewed "with caution" since he has been declared an unindicted accomplice of the defendants.

He ruled out even the possibility that Nixon might be required to answer written questions in his home, saying "Mr. Nixon's testimony is not essential" to ensure that justice is done.

The decision overruled the request of defendants John D. Ehrlichman, H. R. Haldeman and John N. Mitchell that they at least be allowed to take Nixon's testimony by deposition at a court near his San Clemente, Calif., home.

"The witness is simply unavailable to be deposed," Sirica said. "The court will not issue an order to take the deposition of Mr. Nixon while it appears that he is so ill that the taking of such a deposition could seriously jeopardize his health.

"Nor will the court issue an order granting leave to take such depositions on Jan. 6," he said, eliminating possibilities of a holiday adjournment of the trial which was in its 48th day Wednesday.

A court-appointed medical team that examined the phlebitis-stricken Nixon had said he would be sufficiently recovered by Jan. 6 to give a deposition, which is a response to attorneys questions taken outside the trial court and sent there as evidence. Shortly before Sirica announced his ruling however, Nixon's attorney said he could not be adequately prepared to supply a deposition until well after Jan. 6.

Ehrlichman, formerly Nixon's No. 2 aide at the White House, had argued Nixon's testimony was indispensable to his defense to show he was unaware of some Watergate decisions allegedly made by Nixon and Haldeman. Sirica flatly rejected this argument.

"Certainly Mr. Nixon's cumulative testimony on this and similar points is not indispensable or necessary to prevent a failure of justice," he said.

"...The value of Mr. Nixon's testimoney to the defendants should not be unrealistically overestimated. Mr. Nixon himself has been named by the grand jury as an unindicted co-conspirator in this case. Thus he has been accused in effect of being an accomplice of the defendants.

The other defendants on trial for allegedly conspiring to cover up White House involvement in the Watergate break-in are former assistant attorney general Robert C. Mardian and former Nixon campaign lawyer Kenneth W. Parkinson.

Misuse of funds

Bromery says no specifics known by him

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said at his press conference yesterday that he does not know the specifics of the allegations made by Robert Suzuki, Assistant Dean of the School of Education regarding misuse of funds in that school.

When questioned by several reporters as to why he would order an audit without knowing what the allegations were that prompted the audit, he said his primary responsibility is to make sure the funds were issued correctly, and to protect the people in the university.

"Unless I have a reason to question the Dean, (of the School of Ed) I want to keep an open mind. I don't want to prejudge anyone," he said.

"The audit will uncover any procedural or managerial conflicts if there is any."

The audit, which he said would begin within 60 days, is "being given top priority in the University Treasurer's office. We want to clear this up as quickly as possible," he said.

"Once the auditors investigate the funds in question we'll take a look at the information. If there's more out there we'll go after it."

"When the audit is concluded we'll release all information." He also said, "If they have to investigate the whole School of Ed it could take up to a year."

Bromery also said "the charges are general and do not name specific people."

David Bischoff, Associate Provost, who was put in charge of the investigation, confirmed that the allegations were made against specific programs not individuals. "But," he said, "it follows by implications that the charges were aimed at the people in charge of the programs."

He added that when the problem was confined to the School of Ed a few weeks ago, the people in charge of the programs were given a chance to respond to the accusations. "But since there is going to be an audit it is now irrelevant."

Bromery said the allegations were first brought to Staff Attorney Sid Meyers on November 13. Based on discussions with the Attorney and Provosts he made his decision to order the audit. Under University regulations only the Chancellor can ask for a special audit.

UMass fund transfer protested

By Staff and AP Reports

The president of the Massachusetts State Employees Association yesterday protested the transfer of campus funds from salary (01) to heating (08) accounts.

Francis J. Sullivan said the action of the university's trustees constituted "callous disregard for the right of the employes and the laws of the commonwealth."

Involved in the objection was a fear that the university would not have funds available for an anticipated 11 per cent cost of living raise in January. "Food is more important than fuel," Sullivan said.

A spokesman for the university said the trustees authorized the transfer of $1,250,000 from the salary account to the heating account, pending a deficiency appropriation being sought early next year. The move came at an Amherst meeting.

The trustees were advised that the heat and electricity account will run about $2.5 million short this fiscal year. The original appropriation was $3.34 million. The salary account was $50.6 million and the spokesman said it was being spent at the rate of slightly over $1 million per week.

The spokesman said a deficiency appropriation would be needed for the virtually automatic pay raise, even without any transfer of funds.

The motion transferring the funds was unanimously approved by University Trustees at last Wednesday's meeting. The text of the motion read in part: "the transfer can only be considered as an emergency and temporary action."

Referring to increasing fuel costs, Trustee George Pumphret of the Committee on Finance, said at the meeting that, "This is not a problem unique to Amherst. Fuel problems are being experienced at Boston and Worcester as well."

After the Board meeting, Howard White, a spokesman for UMass President Wood, stressed that the transfer of funds was only temporary and that ways to restore the funds to the salary account were under consideration.

The University is understood to have set up the fund transfer because of increased fuel costs in the 08 fuel account. Now, instead of requesting the money from the legislature for fuel, it will be asking for salaries.

Layoff of janitors announced

George Norton, director of the physical plant, announced yesterday that nearly 100 custodians, primarily in the residence halls, will be laid off for one to three weeks during intersession.

University officials say the move was necessary to avoid a rent increase for students living in residence halls. By laying off a total of 96 janitors, a savings of $32,000 is expected.

In addition to the custodians, who are being laid off for the first time during an intersession period, some 250 dining commons employees will be off for the third consecutive year during parts of January.

There also may be a few layoffs at the Campus Center according to John Corker, Campus Center director. However, this will depend on business and budgetary considerations, he said.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said he was sorry "that some people will suffer in these difficult economic times."

Norton said a total of 90 head janitors, janitors and institutional domestic aide out of a custodial work force of approximately 400 will be laid off on the basis of seniority.

A factor in the layoffs according to H. J. Littlefield, planning director, is that students have not requested the janitors to clean individual rooms as is normally done during intersession.

Rising utility costs and labor salaries which include cost of living increases also figured in the decision, he said.

During the first two weeks of intersession, from December 20 through January 3, all the residence halls (except Prince House) will be closed, and the custodial force will do cleaning and maintenance of the public areas of the dormitories.

For the remaining three weeks, about half of the residences will be closed while the custodians are laid off. Sixty-six will be out of work for the entire three weeks, for January 3-27, and 30 others for only the first week, from January 3-10.

Littlefield said the decision was made by the administration as well as by the Rents and Fees Committee and the Office of Residential Life as a means of avoiding a 30 dollar increase in dormitory rent.

Employees getting layoff notices also have the option of taking vacation time during the layoff period.

The decision drew criticism from the employee labor union. Carol Drew, president of local 1776 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees said the layoffs "came as a shock...and we're protesting them."

She noted that those employees being laid off who are not eligible for vacation time, or do not choose to take it, will miss at least one full week's pay. There is a one-week waiting period before a person is eligible for state unemployment benefits, she said.

Drew also questioned why janitors were singled out for layoffs if Office of Residential Life personnel, faculty and their secretaries would continue to work during intersession.

In his statement of "deep concern", Bromery said the university "has tried to diminish the impact as much as possible" through the utilization of the seniority system and offering the option of taking vacation time.

Student co-op proposed for motorcycle repairs

A sample walk around the dorms on campus reveals a lot of motorcycling students. Motorcycles are an effective solution to today's high gas prices, and are easier to fix than a car. There are about 150 motorcylces registered for the UMass campus, as well as several hundred more that are unregistered.

A preliminary proposal has been made asking for a student-run cooperative that would provide low-cost motorcycle parts and repairs to students. The cooperative would also show students how to make their own repairs.

Interest has already been expressed by students who want a place to work and learn about their machines. Since motorcycles are small, the space required for such a shop would not have to be as large as an auto garage.

Students using the cooperative could save a great deal of money. By buying wrecks and tearing them down, the motorcycle cooperative would be able to sell parts at less than half of today's retail prices. The price paid for the used parts would be almost insignificant to the selling price of the parts.

The cooperative could be open initially for about four hours a day, and would operate under the voluntary supervision of Harry Sanders. Sanders is a junior who started working on motorcycles when he was ten years old.

He opened the People's Cycle, located at 421A Watertown Street in Newton. Sanders operates the shop during the summer, next year will be its fifth season.

In addition to Sanders, one paid manager and one or more volunteers would operate the cooperative.

Students and student employees would be eligible for a mark-up of only 10 per cent above cost, while members of the UMass United Student Federation would qualify for a mark-up of 7 per cent above cost. Employers and volunteers of the cooperative would be able to get parts and accessories at cost.

A minimum start-up location would include a secure storage area, and a space in the Campus Center garage, or a basement storage room in one of the dormitories.

Sanders said, "We don't have the place as yet nor the support principally because no one knows about what I would like to do. I would like it to be a service to the students, for a change, and would like the co-op to be non-capitalistically oriented in its prices.

Women's studies program result of women's efforts

By ANN EMERY
Staff Correspondent

The Progressive News Service (PNS) is a collective interested in social change. It is a channel for community groups to feed information from a non-traditional perspective into campus media. It is located at the UMass Veteran's Coalition, 2nd floor Student Union.

Two years ago, a group of women in the Connecticut River Valley, when analyzing the courses in Women's Studies offered at the University of Massachusetts, discovered the need to coordinate and give direction to the intense interest, the extensive resources, and the range of informal programs that already existed.

The result of their efforts is the Women's Studies Program that began this year.

The Women's Studies Program is a two year pilot project. At present a course of study in Women's Studies may be approached in either of two ways:

1. A student may earn a Certificate in Women's Studies which would be equivalent to the recognition of a minor concentration (this is in addition to a student's regular major).

2. A student may major in Women's Studies in conjunction with BDIC. The plan of study must be acceptable to both BDIC regulations for the major and the Women's Studies Policy Board.

Although the plan of study is flexible and individualized, each student must enroll for one semester in a basic interdisciplinary course, "Issues in Women's Studies." This team-taught course is designed to introduce the student to several related lines of inquiry, to the methodology and resources appropriate to various disciplines, and to the ways in which they may be applied to the study of women.

Towards the end of their study, students will be required to participate in an integrative seminar. The purpose of this seminar is to provide a forum for advanced students to share their knowledge and insights through engagement in work or research of mutual interest; faculty and students participating in the seminar will design it themselves.

The Women's Studies Program is characterized by a flexible, faculty-monitored interdisciplinary plan of study that draws upon the full resources of the University. Credits for courses from the Five Colleges are also valid, and anyone from the Five Colleges can earn a Certificate in Women's Studies.

Anyone interested in beginning work towards a Certificate should contact the Women's Studies Office as soon as possible. More information on any aspect of the Women's Studies Program can be obtained at the Women's Studies Office, 508 Goodell, 545-1922.

In recent years there has been remarkable interest in the women's movement. Both research on women and study from a female perspective have been substantial. Currently 1300 students are enrolled in Women's Studies courses at UMass.

Many colleges and universities across the country have already instituted degree-granting programs in Women's Studies. Four years ago there were fifteen Women's Studies Programs; last spring there were ninety. Now the University of Massachusetts can be added to this number.

Passion leads handgun crimes

By HUGH OWEN
Staff Reporter

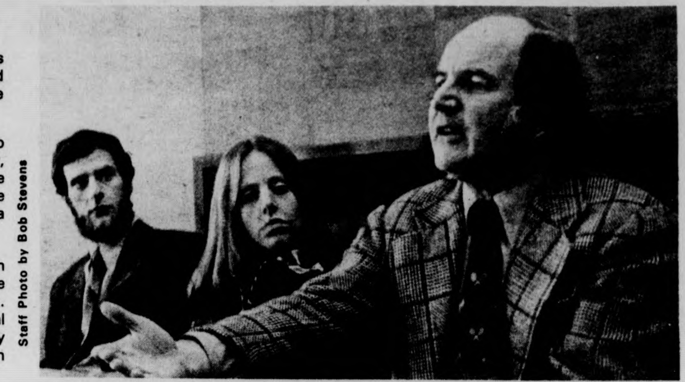
Crimes of passion outrank all other crimes committed with handguns in the United States, a trend which has grown yearly since 1965.

These deaths by handguns, according to Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley, involves people who often do not realize what they have done until after they have pulled the trigger on a handgun and killed a person.

"Handguns are weapons of passion because they are a small, easily conceivable weapon," maintained Jan Wohlberg. Wohlberg spoke with Buckley in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union yesterday advocating the restriction of handgun use in Massachusetts.

This misconception, she explained, results from the Hollywood image of an actor dying on a television show and reappearing later that night on a talk show.

Fifty-four percent of all murders in 1972 were committed with handguns and seventy-four percent of these handgun deaths were crimes of passion where the murderer personally knew the victim, according to figures quoted by Buckley.



Staff Photo by Bob Stevens

Middlesex county sheriff John Buckley (right) spoke yesterday in the Colonial lounge on the issue of hand gun control. Also shown are Steve Sacks and Jan Wohlberg.

People vs. Handguns, a non-profit group established last March by Buckley and Wohlberg, is concerned with educating people on the dangers of handguns and obtaining support for a bill they have proposed for the 1974 state ballot.

The proposed bill would ban the sale and possession of handguns in Massachusetts, with the exception of possession by law enforcement officers and antique guns dating prior to 1898.

"The public will vote favorably for this bill," Buckley affirmed.

The main purpose behind the bill, explained Buckley, is not to eliminate crime but to decrease the numbers of deaths by handguns. "If we save 25-50 lives a year with our bill then we will consider it to be effective," Buckley added.

Laws banning sale and possession of handguns are not unconstitutional as many people believe, Buckley said. In fact, he continued, the Supreme Court has on four separate occasions ruled that the second amendment regarding the "right to keep and bear arms" pertains to the National Guard, not private citizens.

Massachusett's only existing law regarding handgun possession concerns registering people, not handguns, and the requirements for obtaining a permit vary locally, according to Buckley.

People vs Handguns, realizing the proposed bill will not rid the state of black market handguns, is conducting a program to educate people on the dangers of handguns and, according to Wohlberg, is gaining support among the people they have come into contact with.

A local organization of People vs Handguns is currently centered in Amherst. Organizer Steve Sacks is focusing on UMass RSO groups in an attempt to gain support from then of the UMass, and may be reached at 256-8584.

Parent wins editor-in-chief

Next semester's Collegian Business Manager, Donald McGilvray.

By MIKE KNEELAND
Staff Reporter

The Daily Collegian staff last night elected Bill Parent, a 19-year old political science major from Wakefield, as its editor-in-chief for the next two semesters.

Other editors elected by a majority vote were:

—Frits Geurtsen, managing editor
—B.J. Roche, executive editor
—Don McGilvray, business manager
—Richard Wright, news editor
—Sherwood Thompson, Black affairs editor
—Dennis Conlon, photo editor
—Ben Caswell, sports editor
—Tyle Michelove, fine arts editor.

The second sophomore to be elected to the paper's top position in the past three years, Parent promised to give more space to news stories by "consolidating ads."

Parent, who served as assistant executive editor this semester, said he also hopes to "build up the staff to achieve a wider range of student views."

In the closest election of the evening, McGilvray beat out Steve Ruggles, the present photo editor, for the business manager's position.

After being elected on the fifth ballot, McGilvray told the assembled staff he did not intend to serve the one-year term as the business manager but would "meet with the other editors and together find a business manager, or two if necessary, and then we're going to put it up for a vote to the entire staff."

Saying he was going to make it fun once again to work for the Collegian, the Fine Arts major and creator of UMies said "we're going to have a party."

B.J. Roche, a second semester sophomore from Marblehead majoring in English-journalism, will be in charge of the editorial pages which publishes letters to the editor as well as the columnists' articles.

Roche said she hopes to make a stronger editorial voice in the paper by coordinating the news department with her department. She is presently the paper's assistant managing editor, laying out the Lifestyle page.

Former assistant news editor Frits Guertsen faced no opposition in the managing editor's election.

The 21-year old English journalism major from Holliston said he wants the paper to get more staff oriented.

"I like the outside projects," he said, "but we have to think of UMass first."

Geurtsen, who is a first semester junior, lives in Baker Dormitory.

Working under Geurtsen as the news editor will be Richard Wright. He is a former communications analyst in the Air Force and presently a BDIC major in social administration.

Wright, 24, is from Worcester. "I'd like to expand the input across the campus so that everyone feels they have access to the paper," he said after being elected.

As the new fine arts arts editor, Tyla Michelove will be the editor of Below the Salt. She is presently an assistant of that weekly magazine supplement to the Collegian.

Michelove, 20, is a sociology major. She lives in Greenough dormitory. She said she hopes to experiment with layout and graphics when she assumes her position when this semester ends.

Sherwood Thompson, a public health major, was elected inabsentia as the Black affairs editor, a position he also held this semester.

The first Black affairs editor the paper has elected, Thompson believes the Collegian should be more responsive to the views of Black people on campus.

Dennis Conlon, a 21-year old chemistry major from Worcester, said after his election that he hopes to "continue to teach people to be good photographers and supply the paper with the photos they need."

Promising to invesitgate certain "goings on" in the athletic department, Ben Caswell beat two other candidates for the sports editor position.

Caswell is a 21-year old English-journalism major from Randolph. He said he also wants to get more women on the sports staff and to get a Black point of view into the Collegian sports pages..

Asian students conference here

A New England Asian Students Conference is being held through Sunday. The conference is a teachin of Asian Students and Asian peoples can have a dialogue about the history of Asian Americans and the struggle against racism that has been waged by them since they first arrived in America in the 1800's.

Also to be discussed is the possible organization of Asian Students in public schools, where the all-white atmosphere neglects minorities.

The conference will also host presentations of Asian cultures, arts, and tradition.

The conference is co-sponsored by the Five College Asian Coalition, the Pacific-Asian Coalition of New England, and New England Regional Asian Students Coalition. Below is a schedule of remaining events.

Correction

The third paragraph of an article on the Student Senate, which appeared on Page 2 of yesterday's Collegian, inadvertantly read "Also passed was a motion to appropriate $6,00 intial expenses...". The figure quoted should have been $1,600.

Madrigal meals still have space

A fine traditon of UMass is the Madrigal Dinner sponsored each year during the Christmas season by the Campus Center Food Service and the UMass Madrigal singers. This year it has been extended to run eight nights over a two week period.

The cathedral-ceilinged Campus Center Auditorium, colorfully decorated with banners and heraldic shields provides the setting for the beautifully costumed Madrigal Singers, creating an atmosphere reminiscent of the 16th century Christmas Feasts in England. The fanfares, the March of the Comestibles, the huge platter with the Bear's Head, the Sparkling Wassail Bowl, the Flaming Plum Pudding, the Madrigal Singers, the Jugglers and the Jesters are all part of the pageantry of these ancient times.

The dinner will be held Dec. 5-8 and 12-15. Anyone interested should contact the Campus Center Food Services in Room 822 of the Campus Center.

Coal miners accept pact increasing benefits by 64%

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Coal miners accepted a new contract yesterday, boosting their own salaries and fringe benefits by 64 per cent over the next three years and ending their month-long walkout which idled 120,000 strikers and cost the nation an estimated $6 billion in production losses.

Arnold Miller, president of the United Mine Workers, called a news conference to announce approval of the contract by a vote of 44,754 to 34,741.

After signing the new contract, Miller instructed workers to return to their jobs. He said they would start back at 12:01 a.m. EST today and he expects the full membership to be back to work by Monday.

"I don't consider this agreement inflationary," Miller told reporters. "We had 20 years to catch up."

N.T. Camicia, chairman of the Bitumonous Coal Operators Association, said after the signing that the operators are "naturally pleased that the new agreement has been ratified," and added:

"The new three-year contract, while a very costly one for the industry, is a very forward looking agreement and will be of great benefit to the miners."

Asked how the new contract would affect the price of coal, Miller said: "We are aware of how much the price of coal has gone up. We don't know how much it will go up."

Miller and UMW secretary-treasurer Harry Patrick are scheduled to enter George Washington University Hospital Monday for physical checkups. Patrick said both are exhausted, and Miller described the 80-day negotiations as "one of the hardest experiences I ever had."

The new pact provides a 64 per cent increase in wages and fringe benefits over the next three years. Top miners who made $50 a day under the old contract will get an immediate $5 a day raise. The contract provides a 10 per cent increase the first year, 4 per cent the second, and 3 per cent the third.

It also contains a cost-of-living increase which is the first for the industry. It provides one cent an hour for each 0.4 rise in the government's Consumer Price Index up to 8 per cent. The adjustments are made every three months.

Other contract improvements include higher pensions, paid sick leave for the first time, more vacation time, improved health coverage, and increased safety measures including the hiring of 7,000 to 8,000 helpers on complicated mining equipment.

Miners also negotiated an improved grievance procedure plus the individual right to leave the job without fear of reprisal when they feel they are in danger.

The strike which started No. 12 had widely reaching economic effects. Economists estimated the walkout cost the nation $5 billion in lost production.

Several thousand crews on coal-hauling railroads were laid off. Officials of the Penn Central and the Norfolk and Western said the two railroads each lost about $5 million a week.

Ford, Schmidt confer on economy and energy

West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President Gerald Ford during yesterday's discussion. Schmidt is the first leader of a major ally to visit Ford.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Meeting a major European ally for the first time since taking office, President Ford yesterday discussed economic, energy and peace problems with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

Schmidt received a 21-gun welcome from Ford, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and 1,000 others on the South Lawn at the start of the German's two days of White House talks. In his welcoming address, Ford called it an historic occasion.

Both men listed these things as the chief topics of their discussions - the economy, the energy shortage and the Atlantic alliance's part in peace-seeking East and West.

U.S. and West German diplomats said there is no major problem between the two countries but that Schmidt, as leader of the most powerful of America's European allies, could help Ford align the U.S. global policies on such matters as how to handle Arab oil producers with such sometimes break-away Atlantic partners as France.

Both leaders said only through stronger trans-Atlantic cooperation can the Western nations solve today's problems. "We are resolved to do this," Schmidt said and Ford nodded.

Ford prepared to host a White House dinner for Schmidt last night. Actor-singer Joel Grey, star of "Cabaret," was scheduled to entertain after dinner.

Ford and Schmidt talk again today and the German leader flies home tomorrow.

In other White House developments:

—Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Ford has thought about a tax cut to fight the recession, but it is still only an idea and is far from a decision. "He's aware of the idea, the concept of a tax cut ... but it has come no where near a decision." Nessen said a tax cut now is only a theory not even a proposal.

Harrington gains 95,000 signatures in state

Public power plan to face legislature test

Compiled from Wires

BOSTON — Advocates of a public power authority responsible for financing and operating all future generating plants in Massachusetts showed enough support yesterday to compel the legislature to vote on their plan in the upcoming session.

Congressman Michael J. Harrington, D-Mass., leader of the public power drive, said more than 95,000 certified signatures were filed with the secretary of state's office. Only 56,038 signatures are required to force the legislature to vote on the initiative petition.

If the proposal is rejected by the legislature, Harrington said the supporters would have no trouble obtaining an additional 9,340 signatures during June to put the issue on the 1976 general election ballot for voter ratification.

He said, however, he preferred to see the legislature approve the public power plan contained in the initiative petition or an acceptable alternative.

The bill now goes to the Government Regulations Committee for study. Its chairman, Rep. Robert B. Ambler, D-Weymouth, has proposed similar legislation in the past.

Further support is expected from John R. Buckley, the administration and finance secretary of incoming Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The Public Power Authority, under the Harrington plan, would be run by a board of seven members appointed by the governor. He also would designate one member as chairman.

The power authority would be responsible for establishing and operating "a bulk supply system to supply wholesale power to utilities" throughout the state.

The Harrington bill says "the authority shall have as its primary purpose the provision of bulk power — with the minimum adverse impact on the environment." Harrington said in addition the authority likely would be able to show a significant reduction in the cost of electricity.

"The MPA," Harrington said, "will assure that the important decisions regarding load growth, fuel choice and rates are made in the public interest, and not dictated by the constraints of the profit motive."

The authority would raise capital through the sale of revenue bonds which are taxed at a lower rate than non-government bonds.

The Harrington initiative threatens investor-owned utilities and they are expected to mount a vigorous campaign of opposition in the legislature.

New York in the 1950s created a public power authority similar to the one proposed by Harrington and in Nebraska the state controls all power generating.

Asked why similar plans were rejected in past years in the Massachusetts Legislature, Harrington said there were two reasons; First, "the legislature has been effectively lobbied by some time-tested and effective methods.

"Also, until last season there was no constituency for this" kind of proposal, the Congressman said.

State auto insurance companies request $130 million rate hike

BOSTON (AP) — Officials of Massachusetts auto insurance companies told state regulators yesterday that inflation requires premium increases of more than $130 million in 1975.

Testifying at the opening day of hearings before Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan, lawyers for the companies also blamed changes in state law which increase insurance benefits to motorists.

Ryan said if the full increase is allowed, it could mean a $70 to $80 annual rate increase for more than two-thirds of all drivers.

Drivers who buy optional collision and comprehensive coverage, in addition to the required bodily injury coverage, would be hardest hit.

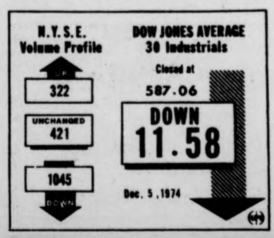
The hearings are scheduled to continue today and for most of next week. Ryan, who will leave office in Januray, will set rates for 1975 before the end of the year, based on this year's accident statistics.

Ryan froze auto insurance rates in 1974 at 1973 levels.

But he told The Associated Press that if the companies' accident statistics are correct, motorists will have a big jump in premiums.

"In fairness, you have to recognize that if all the data they have proves to be accurate, then you are dealing with mathematics," Ryan said in an interview. "If all the data is right, you could expect a sizeable increase."

Attorney Acheson H. Callaghan Jr., representing the insurance firms, said yesterday that the companies' rate request can be blamed on rising costs for medical care, automotive parts, and repair shop labor.



Ullman expects Mills to resign panel seat

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., next in line to be chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, indicated yesterday he expects ailing Wilbur D. Mills to resign soon as head of the tax-writing panel.

Ullman, second-ranking Democrat on Ways and Means, said the committee membership would make no effort to oust Mills. But he said it would be only a matter of several days "before he, Mills, will be in a position to indicate that he will not be a candidate for chairman next year."

Mills, 65, is confined under heavy sedation at Bethesda Naval Hospital, where he checked in Tuesday following weekend appearances in Boston with stripper Fanne Foxe, with whom he was involved in the Tidal Basin in October.

Ullman said that if Mills does not resign, he expects the Democratic Steering Committee, which will select committee chairmen next year, "to nominate somebody else in accordance with what the speaker said yesterday. He was saying that with some authority."

Government investigators hint that pilot error caused crash

WASHINGTON (UPI(Triggering an angry outburst from pilots, government investigators indicated yesterday pilot error may have caused the crash of a Trans World Airline jet on a mountain near here Sunday killing all 92 persons aboard.

The National Transportation Safety Board preliminary report said TWA's flight 514 descended to 1,800 feet in an area where these minimum safe altitude, indicated on charts aboard the plane, was 3,400 feet.

Although the report did not say so specifically, it indicated that pilot error lay behind the crash.

The Boeing 727 jetliner flew straight into the side of Paris Mountain just below its top and a mile and a half from a secret government base designed to shelter government officials in event of a nuclear attack.

Angered by the board comments, the Air Line Pilots Association demanded in a letter to President Ford yesterday that board Chairman John Reed be removed "in the public interest."

The pilots' organization said it was "shocked and saddened" and that Reed had violated his agency's own rules by commenting on circumstances surrounding the crash before the completion of an accident report.

There was no mention in the board's report of the high winds and driving rain through which the ietliner was flying.

Bottle law attacked

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) - Opponents of Vermont's beverage container deposit law hope to replace the year-old antilitter measure with a statewide recycling program.

State Rep. John Mulligan, D-Castleton, said yesterday he has prepared a bill to eliminate the minimum nickel deposit on all beer cans and soda bottles sold in Vermont. Mulligan proposed to place a 1 ½ mill tax on all containers sold in supermarkets and grocery stores. There are 10 mills in one cent.

He said the tax would raise about $5 million annually to fund six recycling centers throughout the state.

The tax would apply to plastic, metal, glass and paper containers, he said.

Airport collapses

TEHRAN, Iran (UPI) - The roof of the main terminal at Mehrabad International Airport collapsed with a roar "like hail and brimstone" under the weight of an overnight snowfall yesterday, killing or trapping up to 60 persons.

A government spokesman said 20 persons were confirmed dead.

Hushnang Arabi, director of Iran's Civil Aviation Board, said between 50 and 60 persons were under the roof when it gave way without warning about 4 p.m.

191 victims sought

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (UPI) - Rescue teams dropped from helicopters struggled through rain-soaked jungle yesterday to bring out the bodies of 191 persons killed when a chartered Dutch DC8 jetliner flying Moslem pilgrims to Mecca smashed into the side of a mountain.

It was the second worst aviation disaster in history.

The four-engine jetliner was carrying 182 passengers and a crew of nine Wednesday when it struck a sheer rock wall at 1,000 feet, 80 miles east of Colombo on the island republic of Sri Lanka, formerly Ceylon.

U.S. to ration opium

WASHINNTON (UPI) - A critical shortage of legitimate opium will force rationing early next year of codeine and some other pain-killing prescription drugs, an opium importers' representative told Congress yesterday.

Except for wartime emergencies it could be the first rationing in the United States of a drug in short supply, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., noted at a Senate hearing.

The pharmaceutical industry will be able to meet only about 80 per cent of next year's projected demand for opium derivative drugs such as codeine - according to testimony by Jane Lang McGrew, an attorney for the three registered importers of crude opium.

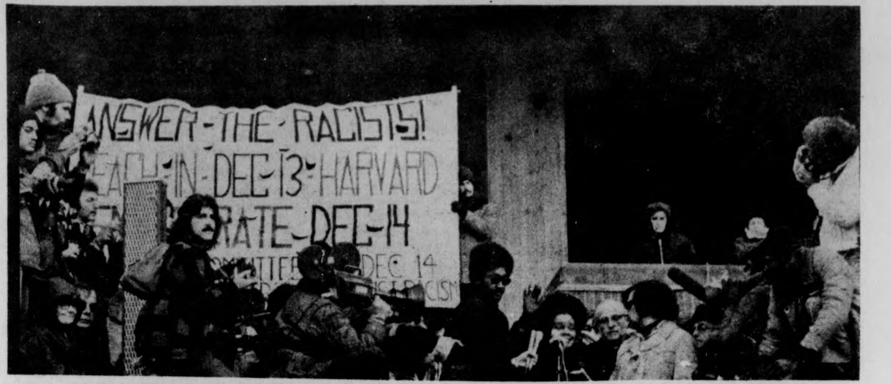
Rally in Boston



Coretta King is dwarfed by media people as she spoke at City Hall Plaza. She said her husband "would have wept" over the violence which accompanied implementation of school desegregation.

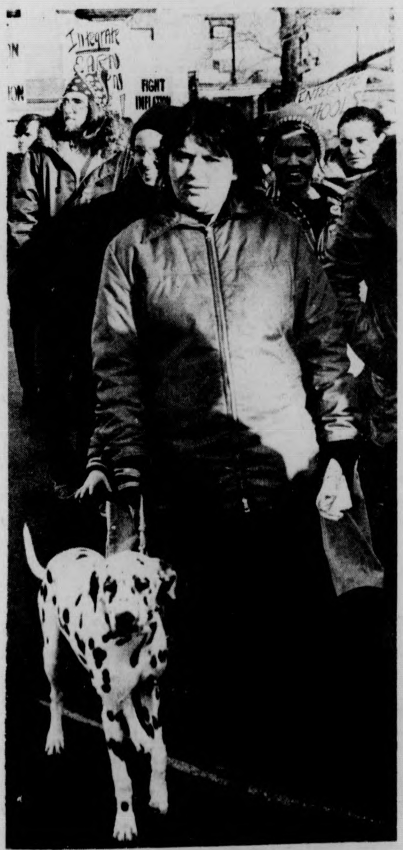
INTEGRATED QUALITY EDUCATION



A rally and march was held Saturday, November 30 in Boston only supporting, not busing, but quality integrated education for all children, regardless of color, identity, or present social or economic condition. Speakers at the rally included Mrs. Coretta King, widow of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Thomas I. Atkins, president of the Boston chapter of the NAACP, U.S. Representative Robert F. Drinan, Rabbi Roland Gittleson of Boston, Polly Halfkenny of the National Alliance against Racism and Political Repression, and Boston school students Gwen Reed and Linda Lawrence.

A contingent of UMass students attended the multi racial and ethnic rally, which first formed on the Boston Commons before marching through downtown Boston to City Hall. Almost 5000 people listened as the speakers discussed the issues of racism and education in Boston.

Some of the main points made by the participants and speakers were:

—Boston public schools are terrible for all children, but especially bad for non-white children of various regions of the city. Parents sending their children to private schools and who continue to support the Boston School Committee are showing tragic disregard for all the children attending schools in the Boston school system.

—Despite state and federal laws based on studies that show segregated schools to be harmful for all children, the School Committee and several political leaders in Boston have presented integration as "forced busing"; something to be feared and fought. The attention of many white people has been diverted from the quality of their schools to the false promise that integration would never come to Boston.

—Desegregated schools do not mean a loss of identity for any student. On the contrary, Polly Halfkenny described quality integrated education as "multinational" education; education which wouldn't harm any identity, either socially or culturally. She said that another step toward quality education would be hiring more black teachers since presently 1 per cent of Massachusetts teachers are black.

—The white institutional racism which exists, and is being taught in the Boston School System, and advanced by various opinion leaders only seeks to divide people from battling very visible economic problems.

Mrs. Coretta King, as she stood on a City Hall balcony overlooking Government Center Plaza, said: "As soon as the first stones were thrown at buses of black children it was no longer a peaceful protest against busing. The issue is racism, not busing." Mrs. King urged "that everyone, including the timid, oppose attacks on school children and integration."

Campaign seeks pledges for emergency food relief

By DAVID ST. GELAIS
Staff Correspondent

A campaign to last the duration of the current academic year is being sponsored in follow-up to recent campus drives for emergency food relief. Pledges for Global Commitment can be made today from 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. in the campus center. Thereafter, they can be made each Wednesday from 10:00 to 4:00 for the remainder of the year.

Meeting the emergency needs, the symptoms, is of utmost urgency, but so also is developing the ongoing personal commitment that is needed to solve the problems — the problems of a generation not a semester. One's commitment is expressed by filling out a pledge form to be retained as a reminder. This is one step in forming a life style suited to the needs of the age.

Individuals are being challenged to witness their global food and population concerns. Since World Population Day, people have been personally pledging to try and help world food and population problems toward their solution by various individually held changes in their living patterns.

Money saved from meals or meat not eaten is contributed to UNICEF, with 6 per cent of it going to hungry people in the U.S. and the rest of the world's hunger. People are giving up one or more meals or avoiding meat one day or more a week, until the world hunger problem is solved.

For them, Monday becomes fast, or "meatless" Monday. (Americans feed 85 per cent of their grain to animals; and it takes 21 pounds of usable protein from that grain to produce one pound of protein from beef.) Going meatless or fasting one day or more a week is a strong first step toward adopting a lifestyle which is more globally just.

The fasting is both a spiritual and charitable act and a personal commitment for changing old patterns to live less grandly on the food chain. Other ways to reduce consumption in other aspects of lifestyle — driving cars less, using electricity less, and reducing consumption of luxury items in general are encouraged.

An action network through which these ideas for continuing a globally aware lifestyle is being formed and sustained by the national sponsors of the Global Commitment Pledge. Suggestions and ideas are being solicited to make a more successful campaign.

Also, books such as Diet for a Small Planet (a guide in layman's language to sensible, meatless eating), periodicals, publications relevant to a globally aware lifestyle, and organizations active in evolving progressive alternatives to globally counterproductive institutions and systems are becoming more open and advertised. The national sponsors of the pledge for global commitment are the Coalition for Population Year, and Action for World Commitment of the World Federalists of the U.S.A. (1424 16th St. NW, No. 301, Washington D.C. 20036 (202) 483-0552.)

World starvation and population are currently topics of discussion and theorizing on campus. Deeds, not words, are called for. Mass famine is not a subject of idle talk. U.S. citizens are daily insulated from the grim conditions of our brothers and sisters worldwide.

Many factors insulate us: selective media coverage, careful politicians, sheer physical separation and, for students, the added barriers of artificial university life. In spite of our lowered sensitivity, the realities must be faced as if the suffering were in our daily presence. Our individual good relies on the good of mankind which ultimately rests on the well-being of all of its parts.

The overwhelming, mind-boggling nature of the changes called for to re-order the culture of our nation and the world, in order to achieve a more just balance in the consumption of resources results in many and varied responses from the students and citizens.

—Rationalization is fed by popular falacies such as that starvation is unavoidable, is nature's way to control the environment, or that people of "exotic" religions do not mind dying and seeing their children suffer.

—Retreat into obsolescent traditional formulas gives escape through racist, supremist doctrines.

—Simple-minded optimism is encouraged by bombastic political speeches, impressive advertising and flash-in-the-pan campaigns.

And finally, profound apathy is fed by the unending panorama of industrial and governmental mismanagement, corruption and serving of special interests. It finally adds up to a denial of mankind's ability to adapt culturally to ever changing conditions, an ability that is the hallmark of our kind.

Popular approaches currently voiced by politicians, conferences and the media imply that it is sufficient for Americans to give only crumbs from our table, the "cream off the top", without endangering the life-style to which we have grown very comfortable with. Reasonable reflection though, discounts this faulty belief — the type and magnitude of the problems demands such a change. As Ghandi put it, "There is plenty for everymans need, but not everymans greed."

This is not a call for asceticism, puritanism or the adopting of "holier-than-thou" attitudes, but in a call for moderation, for more just consumption patterns, formed in light of the needs of our age. Moderation in sharp contrast to the single-minded pursuit of pleasure is characteristic of the gluttony of declining Rome.

There is the possibility of finding psychological and emotional escape in withdrawing, imagining ourselves separated from the family of humanity, or isolating our nation from the interdependent global commonwealth of nations.

But it will not work. Complacency is suicide.

The University of Massachusetts Baha'i Association is sponsoring the drive for world commitment pledges. The goals of the campaign are paralled with some of the principles basic to the Revelation of Baha'u'llah, who forewarning mankind over 100 years ago of its impending calamities, outlined the means by which they could have been averted. Also, one of the Bah'i beliefs is that onds spiritual destiny is determined by the motives and reactions of our daily lives.

Snakes in SW!

By DEBBIE SCHAFER

One of the nation's largest Boa Constrictor snakes lived in a Southwest tower this semester. Lenny Alsen, owner of the 11 foot long Boa, also kept a large Anaconda snake in the tower room.

"I didn't want to leave home, because nobody in my family knows how to take care of them," said Alsen. The two snakes require a great deal of care, according to Alsen, and he did not feel safe leaving them with inexperienced handlers.

The Boa Constrictor, because of it's size, is worth approximately 3,000 dollars. The Anaconda is worth 1,500 dollars. "Understandably, I try to take good care of them," said Alsen.

Alsen has owned the boa consticor for nine years. "When I first got it, it was only a foot and a half long," he said. It is now one of the largest Boas in the United States.

Both the Boa and the Anaconda are among the most difficult snakes to keep in captivity. Since they are tropical snakes, and cold blooded, room temperature is usually not warm enough for keeping them. Both snakes are "picky eaters' and sometimes must be force fed in captivity.

They're not an easy pet to keep, and I definitely would not advise a novice to go out and buy one," Alsen said.

Alsen has had a lot of experience with wild animals, mostly from his job with a wild animal importer. He worked for six years helping to import animals from South America. His experiences have given him a good working knowledge of tropical snakes, and he has lectured at several colleges with his pet snake.

"I've been associated with wild animals all of my life," Alsen told The Collegian in an interview.

Robbie Noller, Alsen's roommate, didn't mind the fact that he lived with two huge snakes all semester. In fact, Noller and Alsen grew up together and share a common interest in wild animals. The two men plan to go on a wild animal collecting expedition in the Phillipines this summer.

Alson said the Head of Residence "has been a pretty nice guy" so far, but has warned Alsen against bringing his snakes back to Southwest in the spring.

Floor residents have gotten used to having the snakes as members of the community. "Now I don't even think of the Boa as being a snake, it's just like having a dog around, or any other normal pet around," said one floor member.

Another resident of the all-male floor said the snakes are a good curiosity item, "very good for getting girls onto this floor."

Alsen said that many people were afraid of the Boa at first, because of it's huge size, but that most people are used to it now.

"The snakes are completely tame," Alsen said. But still...ask yourself, reader, ...would YOU want to live next door???

Banking? Check around first

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Writer

Where does the average student bank? Amherst has five banks for students to choose from (though Pioneer National Bank is new). Is the choice that simple?

Although consumer groups don't preach about the workings of banks, banks are business establishments. The average student who must get the most for the money really ought to look seriously at banks and do a little "shopping" before deciding which establishment to do business with.

For example, which would serve better, a N.O.W. account or a regular checking account? Which "free" checking account is the least expensive? How long must a student wait after depositing a check before writing a check on it?

In recent years banks have, like most other businesses, been forced into competition; and those "grand old institutions" are even resorting to hard-sell advertising. And that's when the student has to look closely at what's being offered.

Price leading started in banking about six years ago when a bank in Boston began offering free checking accounts when the account holder held a minimum balance of $100.

That seems to be the norm for checking accounts now, but look a little deeper before accepting such a bargain.

Pioneer now offers totally free checking accounts — no service charges, per check fees, etc. But what about purchasing a packet of checks? That's something the consumer should look at. Also, how much will a bookkeeping error cost? A vice president of the First National Bank of Amherst, Walter A. Whitney, Jr., pointed out that some banks with totally free checking accounts might charge more for that error because "they have to make their money somewhere".

What about that waiting period before writing a check on a deposit. True, it doesn't involve making or losing money but it would seem to be an advantage if a student could write that check after waiting only four days for it (a deposit made by check) to clear, rather than ten days. This is the service aspect that an account holder must look at, pointed out the Hampshire spokesman.

Another example of service is the N.O.W. account. This is a combination checking-savings account now offered at Amherst Savings and Pioneer. The account holder receives interest on the balance, yet can also write checks on it. Seems like a good idea but what about the charges on the checks written on the account? The charge may run as high as 15 cents per check. Then there's the psychological aspect voiced by Whitney, who explained that although the account is convenient, the student who would like to save some money will find that he'll save less because his savings money is so easily withdrawn on a "fling".

He continued, "We'll probably offer N.O.W. accounts in the future though, if that's what the students want."

The Hampshire spokesman said the same.

At Amherst Savings Don Vickowski indicated that despite the popularity of N.O.W. accounts his firm still does a good amount of savings account business. In this area one should look for interest, of course; but don't avoid the service aspects concerning deposits, withdrawals, etc.

Check charges, interest rates, minimum balances, services, etc.; they're all tools used in banking competition. But they're not the only aspects: the prospective account holder would be wise to look a little deeper and ask some questions before deciding what type of account to use and what bank he should hold it in.

Caviat Emptor — it applies to banking, too.
